titor, was not then a widow. But Mr. Burney, sacred as he held the opinions and the wishes of his Esther, was too ardent an admirer of beauty, to dispense, in totality, with that attractive embellishment of the female frame. He honoured and esteemed, with a brother's affection, the excellent Dorothy Young: but those charms which awaken softer sensations, were utterly and unhappily denied to that estimable woman, through her peculiarly unfortunate personal defects. Not early, and not easily, did Mr. Burney and Mrs. Allen reveal their mutual partiality. The wounded heart of Mr. Burney recoiled from such anodyne as demanded new vows to a new object: and Mrs. Allen, at that period, lived in a state of affluence that made such a marriage require severe worldly sacrifices. Only, however, transiently; for by an unfortunate trust in an unfortunate. though honourable speculatist, Dr. King, she completely lost all that, independently, was at her own disposal of fortune. And the noble disinterestedness of Mr. Burney upon this occasion, rivetted to him her affections, with the highest esteem. Yet even when these scruples were mutually overwhelmed by increasing force of regard, so many unlooked-for obstacles stood in the way of their union, that, wearied by delays that seemed at once captious and interminable, Mr. Burney earnestly entreated that an immediate private marriage might avert, at solemnly promising, at the same time, that they should keep the alliance secret, and still live which, however, is frequently more difficult to subdue than that of authority, - Mrs. Allen saw no objection of sufficient force to counteract her pleasure in compliance. Their plan was confided to four persons, indispensably requisite for its execution: Mrs. (afterwards Lady) Strange, Miss Young, Mr. Crisp, and the Rev. Mr. Pugh, curate of St. James's church. Mr. Pugh, who was of very long standing a friend of Mr. Burney, aided personally in promoting such measures as secured secrecy with success; and in St. James's church Mr. Pugh tied that indissoluble knot which, however fairly promising, is inevitably rigorous, since it can be loosened only by crime or by death; but which, where it binds the destinies of those whose hearts are already knit together by reciprocated regard, gives a charm to captivity that robs liberty of regret. At the porch of St. James's church Mrs. Strange and Mr. Pugh whispered their congratulations to the new-married couple, as they entered a prepared post-chaise; which, in a very few hours, galloped them to the obscure skirts of the then pathless and nearly uninhabited Chesington Common, where Mr. Crisp had engaged for them a rural and fragrant retreat, at a small farm-house in a little hamlet a mile or two from Chesington Hall. The secret, as usual in matrimonial concealments, was faithfully preserved for a certain time, by scrupulous discretion in the parties and watchful circumspection in the witnesses; but, as usual also, error and accident were soon at work to develop the transaction; and the loss of a letter, through some carelessness of conveyance, revealed suddenly but irrevocably the state of the connexion. This circumstance, however, though at the time cruelly distressing, served ultimately but to hasten their own views, as the discovery was necessarily followed by the Miss Dorothy Young, who was her most valued personal union for which their hands had been friend. Mrs. Allen, Dorothy's nearest compe-joined."

We cannot say that we remember to have read a more curious account of a wedding than Mad. D'Arblay has here given us; and we hope it will entertain others as much as it has done us. At all events, it is a fair example of these memoirs.

Otterbourne. By the Author of " Derwentwater." 3 vols. London, 1832. Bentley. THE writer of these volumes has obviously taken Sir Walter Scott's historic fictions for his model; and herein exposes himself to a disadvantageous comparison. Looking at Otterbourne with no farther reference, it is a faithful picture of the times_an ingenious narrative, with some animated scenes. Like most authors who have drawn deeply on the materiel of the olden chroniclers, the pages are laden with the knowledge thus acquired, and the character rather merged in the costume. Scott's great merit was, that all his details seemed inevitable : and the language, though that of the time, seemed still more appropriate to the individual; he put life into all his figures, and reality into all their actions;

"They lived-they breathed-they moved-they felt." However, it is creditable to the taste of a young writer to choose a good school; though, if he mean to really make his way in the highest walk, he must find out a path for himself: a vast deal of talent is wasted on imitation—a line where it is least rewarded. Before we proceed to extracts, which speak well for the talent of the present writer, we must point out some faults of style. It needs no remark of ours to indicate the coarseness of the following passages.

" No bumpkin who sees a county beauty on the race-stand, and licks his lips in gaping admiration from below, could be more intense, more removed, or more bashful in his raptures.

" With the haughty Hester, too, our esquire rose considerably. Making due mutation of circumstances, she may be said now to have received him as a fashionable miss would a previously slighted beau, after having ascertained that said beau had been publicly seen in the opera-box of some titled demirep.

We only preface the ensuing interesting extract, by saying, that the young esquire has been taken prisoner while on a scout.

" Moray scowled upon the fearless speaker, and handled for a moment the heavy sperthe at his saddle-bow, as if well nigh moved to be himself the executioner of vengeance. account for his extreme ire, it is sufficient to say, that he had more than one reminiscence of discomfiture angrily refreshened. 'Thou should'st have a stout heart, whipster, to venture thus to beard the Moray, said he, grimly; but feel for it, boy, and hold it firm, for thy last sand is running. Were it but to put outrance 'twixt thy lord and me, thou shalt die the death.' These were awful sounds, and uttered by no trifler; but Raimond bore them worthily. His condition of humanity might internally shudder, yet did not the spirit of the trained warrior quail. 'Do thy worst,' said he, steadily. 'To God I bequeath my soul, and to Percy the duty of revenge!' 'Ormiston,' growled Moray, in a deep husky voice, that bespoke the fixed ruthlessness of his intentions, 'I must forward. To thee I leave the charge of dealing fate upon this Englishman. Drag him, bound as he is, to yonder burn; throw him into its deepest eddy; and see that your lances aid the bubbling water in its work. I promised to learn him well where we do fix our boundary, and have not forgotten it. When my behest is done, his blood will tinge the line. Would it were ever ruddy from such veins! A womanish wail issued from the lips of the weak-headed Mabel, and something like a suppressed groan from those of the few villagers who gaped around, at the throats. In the same instant the whole troop, horrid doom thus summarily pronounced. They were, however, more touched by the youth and prepossessing exterior of the victim, than startled at an occurrence, shocking in itself, but unhappily not strange. This was unnoticed by the boiling-blooded chieftain, and disregarded by his brutal vassals. The first, indeed, immediately quitted the spot; and of the last only Ormiston and a chosen few remained. The earl's party, proceeding at a gallop on the track of the eastward verging column, was soon lost in distance. The frightful penalty now about to be visited upon the unlucky and too adventurous Farneley, was one no way unusual in the lawless times, and amongst the fierce race of which we write. The nearest tree or the nearest pool (fossa et furca) were then indifferently made the instruments of, what would doubtless be called justice. With such a custom, our common saw—' that he who is born to hang, will never drown,' would lose its chief application. Raimond was not peculiarly gifted with the indurated nervesthe phlegmatic stoicism which enables some men to look the 'grisly king' in the face with entire composure - neither was the suddenness of his approach calculated to lessen the involuntary throes of nature in such an awful situation. The truant blood might, therefore, leave his cheek a little pale; but, fortified by mental intrepidity, and the high sense of manhood begot by his martial associations, he sustained a firm and noble carriage under this, the severest of all trials. 'Englishman!' said Ormiston, terminating a momentary pause which succeeded the departure of Moray; 'thy minutes are of the briefest. If thou hast aught to do, or say, be speedy.' Something I have,' returned Farneley, a slight quivering of his lip denoting rather a gush of mournful retrospections than an accession of personal tremors; "tis not much.' Here, casting round an inquiring look, his regards fell upon the caustic visage of Tyzack, now relaxed by unequivocal signs of sorrow. 'Leonard,' he resumed, 'thou hast heard of Miles Farneley, of the Newcastle?' I have: he was Tynedale bred.' Wilt thou here promise me, by the Holy Rood! to hie thee to his dwelling with the last sad remembrance of his son?' 'I will — I will!' croaked the affected cripple.

" 'Cease your babble there,' interrupted Ormiston. 'Here is the spot.' The jackmen obeyed, and all drew up close to the edge of a deep eddy, caused by a sort of elbow in the stream. 'Southron,' said the cold, unflinching leader, 'behold the bath that sorts thee for knighthood - in the other world! Prepare! Raimond made no reply, and the brute pro-ceeded to issue detailed orders, which to repeat would be disgusting. Men have been heard of, who have neither blenched nor quailed in moments of this trying nature — nay, who have even jested and made merry. Farneley shewed neither the callous insensibility of the first class, nor condescended to act like the second. He sat pale and motionless upon the animal that bore him; not ostentatiously reckless, but exhibiting no confessed signs of fear or shrinking. At this sad juncture the late-coming spears had arrived within a moderate distance, and could be observed suddenly to open out their front and considerably quicken pace. otherwise we shall be involved in a labyrinth couching their lances, burst like a tornado upon the startled Scots. So prompt was the attack, that resistance became utterly paralysed. Lucky did it prove for Ormiston and a few others, that they sought safety by dashing across the stream and taking to unqualified flight; for so wightly did the proclaimed Northumbrians bear their points, that of those who remained not one was left in the saddle. The immediate act of Farneley, on hearing a war-cry so vivifying, was to throw himself to the ground, and thereby avoid the risks of the collision. Almost before he could scramble to his feet, the affair was decided; then his name, pronounced in anxious and familiar tones, struck upon his ear. replied to the call, and forthwith a hard but kindly hand grasped him by the shoulder. It was that of the Tynedale leader, and he—Hugh of Hawden. 'Ha! young kinsman,' the latter exclaimed, 'well met, and luckily. By my santy, we've got hither in a deedful hour !' 'You have, indeed, good uncle,' replied the other, emphatically. 'Relieve me from these cords, that I may wring the hand which, under God, has saved my unworthy life.' e'en go so hard with thee, boy?' demanded Hugh, a little affected—'but I forget thy bonds: this will loosen them.' With these words, he drew out his dudgeon knife, and soon set the joyful esquire at liberty.'

Our parting advice is one of privation: let the author of Otterbourne close his favourite old histories, (though his Hotspur and Neville are very spirited), trust more to his own resources, and remember that action and interest are the strength and ornament, the sap and leaves of narrative.

The History of Scotland from the earliest period to the present time. By Robert Chambers, author of the "Picture of Scotland." &c.

2 vols. London, 1832. Bentley.

A MOST intelligent and industrious work—well calculated, by its clear style, its unimpeachable accuracy, and its portable size, to be one of those popular histories in every body's hands. It occupies a middle space between Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather, and Tytler's admirable but necessarily voluminous work. It is also the only history which descends to our present time-a great advantage to the juvenile reader; for it is curious to observe how many are ignorant of the important events of late occurrence, who are yet well acquainted with those of an earlier period. We heartily commend and recommend Mr. Chambers' production. A fitter companion to the Scoto-historical portion of the Waverley novels could not be placed in the hands of youth.

Essay on the Natural History, Origin, Composition, and Medicinal Effects of Mineral and Thermal Springs. By Meredith Gairdner, M.D. Zdinburgh, 1832, Blackwood; London, Cadell.

Or this volume we have only to express our entire approbation, and to cite what its author states in his preface.

"It has been said by an eminent writer, that, 'at different epochs in the progress of a science, general theories must be formed, although, subsequent to his time, a total revolution has been effected in the science. Formerly the doctrine of mineral waters was considered to involve merely a few details of chemical analysis; now, however, it has been found to be intimately connected with the great problems of the geognostic structure and the physical constitution of the earth. In the year 1830, I selected for my inaugural dissertation the subject ' De Fontibus Calidis.' The investigations into which I was then led, as well as a subsequent visit to some of the hot springs in Germany, soon convinced me both of the extent and interest of the subject, and of the hiatus which here existed in my country's scientific literature. Although far from expecting that this little essay can fulfil the objects implied in the above quotation, still, the few results which I have obtained from my reading and observation may not be unacceptable to the public, in the want of more elaborate and profound works upon the subject."

The task is performed more ably than the modesty of Dr. Gairdner allows him to say; and we safely recommend his essay, as one full of useful information on the matters of which it treats.

Lives of the Twelve or Modern Casars, &c. Buonaparte. 18mo. pp. 112. London, 1832. H. Cremer.

WITH several engravings on wood by Vizetelly and Branston, this is a very indifferently writ-ten sketch of the leading events of the life of Napoleon. It is, however, well arranged chronologically.

A Dictionary of Diet, &c. By J. S. Forsyth, Surgeon. Part I. H. Cremer. THE first part, from the word "acid" to the word "coffee," of an alphabetic history of pabulary and nutritive substances, &c. used as food. It is more than a cookery-book, and less than a dictionary; and, like all similar works, contains a great deal of collected infor-mation. We shall examine it more carefully as it proceeds.

Original Family Sermons. Part. I. Pp. 73. London. Parker.

THIS seems to be the commencement of a series of sermons, to be published under the direction of the committee of general literature and edu-cation appointed by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. It contains five plain and sensible discourses; and is well calculated to improve the public morals, by enforcing the most useful precepts and practical examples of Christianity.

Naval Evolutions: a Memoir. By Sir Howard Douglas, Bart. &c. &c. &c. Refuting Mr. Clerk's Claims in relation to Lord Rodney's Engagement, &c. 8vo. pp. 123. London, 1832. T. and W. Boone.

WE have, in preceding Gazettes, gone as much as we thought expedient into the question of the breaking of the line, and therefore merely refer to this publication as one placing Sir Howard Douglas's argument in the strongest possible light. A note at p. 17 clearly proves that Mr. Price Gordon's statement relative to Ormiston, perceiving this, thought proper to of particular facts, betwixt which we can trace the landing of Rodney at Bristol (quoted in face towards them, and vociferate a hail of no connexion, nor consequently apply to any our review of his work) must be erroneous, and consequently his whole evidence unfit to beautiful flower, fresh from the green-house, be relied upon.

The Island of the Propontis; and other Poems. By E. Pinkerton. Pp. 177. Glasgow, 1832, Robertson; Edinburgh, Oliver and Boyd; London, Longman and Co.

THE facility of versification and imitation is a dangerous gift. These are pleasing compositions, but want the originality without which public success is impossible, however much private friends may value the talent displayed.

Taylor's Short-Hand. By J. H. Cooke.

Edition. London, 1832. Crofts.
This system of stenography is, we believe, much in use. The introduction, with a history of the art, is both entertaining and instructive.

Memoir of Capt. Peter Heywood, R.N.; with Extracts from his Diaries and Correspondence. By E. Taggart. 8vo. pp. 332. London, 1832. Wilson.

THE cream of this publication was anticipated in the volume of the Family Library which contained the history of the mutiny of the Bounty; and it so happened, that, in our review of it, we quoted largely from the very parts which would best illustrate the present publication. We shall, consequently, be content with saying, that this is a fuller narrative, not only of that remarkable event, but of the entire and extraordinary life of a most meritorious officer, whose biography is a romance of singular interest.

Tableau Général de la Langue Française. Par J. L. de Lolme. London, 1832. Souter. A VERY useful book for learners of the French language, from which they may acquire not only a general knowledge, but become conversant with most of the niceties of that refined and, in these points, difficult tongue.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.

On Tuesday evening the new series of meetings for the session 1832-3 commenced, with an illustration on the theory of flame, by Mr. Faraday. This subject will be followed up by successive illustrations on the solid substances used for artificial light, and on the manufacture of candles; on the liquid substances used for artificial light, and on the construction of lamps; and, lastly, on the gaseous sub-stances used for artificial light; to be delivered by Mr. Aikin, the secretary to the Institution.
On the present occasion Mr. Faraday took a general view of the phenomenon of flame;
illustrating his observations, as he went along, by an almost endless variety of beautiful experiments. He shewed that every body, even earth, air, and water, when heated to a certain temperature, was in itself a source of light; but flame truly might only be said to exist in gases and vapour; although when solid bodies became heated to the same degree as the liquid or gaseous, the glow was much clearer and more intense. As our limits do not permit us to follow the able lecturer (without experi-ments it would be both arduous and unsatisfactory) through all his remarks, we shall content ourselves by noticing an interesting experiment, illustrative of the changes produced in colours by flame. A few particles of common salt were thrown on the flame proceeding from the wick of a lamp; the flame burnt as before, but a strange, nay hideous change took place on every object submitted to its influence; a especially in the principal sea-ports.

though its leaves retained their crisp appearance, became of a blighted hue,—the hands and face of the lecturer were green and ghastly; and from further experiments it was shewn. that those objects which are most beautiful in their natural state, appear most disgusting when submitted to the action of this flame; notwithstanding Sir David Brewster, that great master of the theory of colours, had found that such a light, when viewed through a prism, was perfect. Mr. Faraday concluded his lecture by making some observations on the safety-lamp, shewing the non-communicative power of flame where a screen of wire-gauze intervenes.

The meeting was exceedingly crowded. In the various rooms of the Institution were placed a variety of objects in mechanics and the sciences.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

WEDNESDAY, Nov. 7 .- This being the first evening of the session, the Society assembled at their apartments in Somerset House; R. I. Murchison, Esq. president, in the chair. Several gentlemen were elected fellows. A communication was read, from Mr. Henwood, on the intersection of veins in Cornwall, and on the changes which have been observed in the position and direction of veins when traversed by cross courses.—The next was a paper, by the Rev. J. Yates, on a submarine forest on the coast of Cardiganshire and Merionethshire, extending for several miles north and south of the river Dovey. In the course of the memoir, it was shewn that the Scotch fir constituted formerly extensive forests in many parts of the kingdom; and that the period of its ceasing to be a member of the English Flora was about the middle of the seventeenth century. - A third memoir, on the geology of the north-west of Mayo and Sligo, by the Venerable Archdeacon Verschoyle, was commenced.

The tables were covered with numerous donations to the museums and library.

THE ARCTIC LAND EXPEDITION.

ANOTHER meeting of the promoters of this expedition was held on Monday; with Captain Beechey, the distinguished navigator, in the chair. It appeared that nearly fourteen hundred pounds had already been subscribed enough, in the opinion of the meeting, to au thorise them to commence preparation for immediately embarking in the design. Indeed, in our opinion, if a little more pains had been taken to make it more generally known, the whole amount required, 3000%, or for a third year's pursuit of it the maximum of 50001, would have been subscribed before now: at any rate there cannot be the slightest doubt of its being speedily realised. Captain Beechey addressed the meeting in a very gratifying and affecting manner, pointing out how he had himself sustained the wasting strength and drooping spirits of his own crew, by holding out hopes of sympathy and succour to them from home, when they were placed under circumstances of privation and peril. He applied the same reasoning to the probable situation of Captain Ross, and urged it as an inducement for perseverance in this humane undertaking. He also alluded, with much force, to the French expeditions in search of La Pérouse, even after forty years of mystery hung over his fate.

Mr. Spence stated that a subscription had been opened at Hull, which he had no doubt would be productive; and trusted that the example would be followed in other places, and

A committee of thirteen was then appointed to proceed with the undertaking, with power to increase their numbers, and to form provincial committees where expedient.

BIELA'S COMET.

THIS comet, concerning which such curiosity prevailed in the public mind a few weeks since, is stealing onwards (secretly almost) in its course, and will pass its perihelion the 27th of the present month. It was re-discovered by Sir John Herschel on the 23d of September; it then appeared as a nebula, about 21' in diameter, without either nucleus or tail, and exhibited a gradual diminution of brightness from its centre to its circumference, till it faded away. Sir John Herschel observed it transit a cluster of very small stars, which were distinctly seen through the nebulous cometic matter, fully proving its highly translucent nature. On the 4th of November the comet was again seen by the same celebrated astronomer; it had much increased in magnitude since the previous ob-servation, and appeared as a fine bright nebula, 4' in diameter, with occasional glimpses of a lucid point, equal in brilliancy to a star of the 13th or 14th magnitude. The comet was also seen at the latter end of October, and early in November, at the Greenwich Observatory. Its extreme faintness has rendered it imperceptible, excepting by such excellent instruments as those employed in the above observations.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

J. W. LUBBOCK, Esq. in the chair. First meeting of the present session. The title of a communication on geometrical progression was announced; as it consisted entirely of calculations, it was not read. Amongst the abstracts read was one on the water-barometer erected in the hall of the Society by Mr. Daniell. It having been long considered that a good series of observations with a water-barometer would be of great value, as throwing light upon the theory of atmospheric tides, of the horary and other periodic oscillations of the barometer, and of the tension of vapour at different temperatures, this apparatus was placed in its present situation, in the centre of the winding stair-case conducting to the apartments of the Society. It is a skilfully made glass tube, 40 feet long, and one inch in diameter at its lower end; and so nearly cylindrical throughout its whole extent as to diminish only by is the of an inch at its upper end. The author's observations are arranged in several sets of tables, and afford some curious results. In windy weather the column of water is found to be in perpetual motion, not unlike that from the breathing of an animal. Many considerable fluctuations in the pressure of the atmosphere are rendered sensible by the motions of an aqueous column, which would totally escape detection by the ordinary mercurial barometer. Mr. Hudson remarked, in the course of his observations, that the rise and fall of the water-barometer precedes by one hour the similar motions of the mercurial one.

A list of donations made to the Society since its last meeting was read; it comprised copies of the transactions of the principal scientific and literary institutions of the continent.

[•] It is a remarkable coincidence, and one that we refer to with peculiar pleasure, that the same No. of the Lit. Gaz. (No. 819) contained the first notices of the re-dis-covery of the two comets of 1832, that of Biela by Sir John Herschel, and that of Encke by M. Massoti, at Buenos Ayres.—Ed.

the same evening, but produced nothing which we may not postpone for a week.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

Nov. 7 .- The Rev. Dr. Richards in the chair. The paper read was an essay "On the connexion between true poetic taste and moral sentiment," by Dr. Uwins. The writer's The writer's opinion, that such a connexion between imaginative powers and moral feeling really exists in all cases, notwithstanding some apparently remarkable exceptions, was ingeniously maintained, and illustrated with elegance. He concluded with enforcing the practical inference, that, supposing his principle to be correct, the sublimation of the taste is a no less important part of the business of education than the instilling of ethical and religious precepts. Professor Boeckh, Mr. N. Ogle, Mr. Hal-lam, &c. &c. were announced among the recent benefactors to the Society's library.

THE LITERARY FUND.

THE first sessional meeting of the committee of this benevolent institution took place on Wednesday; when many cases of literary distress were brought before it and relieved. The grants amounted to no less a sum than 3501.; and were it right to divulge the secrets of humanity administered with the feelings of delicacy due to the unfortunate, it would at once grieve and delight the public to know how much of suffering was thus alleviated. But this blazon must not be. We rejoice to mention, that a communication was made, from which it appears that a legacy of 2000l. may be expected to fall to the fund. The L. F. Club dined, after the business was finished, at the Freemasons' Tavern; and there remembered, in social enjoyment, the friends and supporters who had enabled the dispensers of their bounty to do so much good to their suffering fellowcreatures.

MEMORIAL TO SIR WALTER SCOTT.

IF ever country owed duty and gratitude to the memory of Genius, Great Britain stands so pledged to that of Sir Walter Scott. Among the millions who look to literature for occupation and relaxation, not an individual but is indebted for hours of delight to his pages. One reader has been enlivened by his humour, a second touched by his pathos, a third awakened to research by his information, and all improved by the kindly feeling, the good and wholesome knowledge of human nature with which his works abound. He brought us acquainted with our forefathers; and many to whom the past was as nothing, learnt to trace the progress of improvement by or, to express this by example: Ivanhoe is a brilliant and stirring painting of a brilliant and stirring period in chivalry; but it is also one of severe truth. No reader would be dazzled by it into an erroneous estimate; its hardships, its errors, its oppressions, stand out in as forcible relief as its magnificence, its generosity, and its triumph. None could peruse Ivanhoe, and not perceive our present ameliorated social order. Thus has Scott made history familiar, and his native land classical. By classical, we mean that he has invested its scenes with those associations of thought and emotion, without which mountain and valley, however sublime or beautiful, make no appeal to our higher sympathies. The marked characteristic of Sir Walter's productions is goodness; they obviously emanate from a pure and excellent heart. Nothing requires excuse or the contrast presented in his vivid pictures. Or, to express this by example: Ivanhoe is a

Has a man like this no claim on some definite mark of public thankfulness and public honour? Were it but from the selfishness of encouragement, such a tribute should be paid. It is in as such is professionally rewarded. Had Scott directed his extraordinary abilities and ceaseless industry to the law, or to trade, would not the advantage to himself have been tenfold? But where then would have been that which is now so widely and deeply extended to others? Besides. the imaginative nature of literary exertion requires some imaginative stimulus. The fine "further-looking hope," which gave soul to the hundred volumes bequeathed to posterity, is as a sacred trust, which to disappoint were sacrilege to the illustrious dead. Public opinion has already spoken strongly on this subject; there remains now but a choice of tribute. Surely preserve to his name his "romance in architecture"-Abbotsford. It were treasuring up our Let it remain in his line, a lasting testimony of qualities it is an admirable example. public admiration and public gratitude. His own and favourite edifice is Scott's best monument. For long years it will be a place of pilgrimage to his many admirers, keeping alive a thousand slight but precious remembrances, and encouraging the future aspirants of fame, by the present spectacle of the high and generous distinction awarded by a grateful nation to the genius it delighted to honour. Abbotsford ought to be, and will be, the shrine

"Where Death and Glory a joint Sabbath keep."*

PINE ARTS.

WINTER EXHIBITION

Of deceased and living British Artists, Suffolk Street, Pall Mall.

(Third and concluding notice.)

No. 50. Dead Game. G. Stevens .- An adin the present Exhibition by this artist, eight of which are dead game.

No. 200. Portrait. E. D. Leahy.—This portrait was, we believe, in the last exhibition

The Society of Antiquaries also assembled on | palliation; and their delicacy is even feminine. | at Somerset House, but certainly was not seen The improvement he wrought in his peculiar until now. It is placed by the side of the porand national branch of literature is within the trait of Dr. Wardrop, by Raeburn, one of the remembrance of all. He found the Rome of finest examples of that artist's powers. Though Fiction, like Augustus, of straw and of mud; in a different style, Mr. Leahy's performance he left it, like Augustus, of stone and of marble, is equally distinguished by its resemblance to nature, and by its excellence as a work of art.

No. 217. Johnny Gilpin. T. Stothard, R.A. This animated subject, and most, if not all, of those under the name of this veteran artist, vain to say that literature is a profession, and have already appeared before the public. The same may be said of the contributions from the pencil of R. Smirke, R.A. We shall, therefore, only observe of them, that such works cannot fail of giving interest to any collection in which they may be found.

No. 176. The Adventures of the Popkins Family. The figures by H. Liverseege. A. Vickers. - A pictorial illustration of the sublime and the ridiculous. A striking effect is also produced by the contrast between the vivid local colours of the figures, and the neutral tone of the mountain background.

No. 252. Boccaccio relating his Tales of the Decameron. H. Andrews.—Lively and brilnone can be so touching or so appropriate as to liant in costume and scenery, and highly creditable to the talents of the artist.

No. 256. The Sketch-Book. B. E. Duppa .own future disappointment, did we allow its A female portrait, rendered peculiarly inte-walls to be dismantled, or its roof to be laid low.

No. 167. The Smuggler's Watch-Dog. C. Hancock.—Like the robber on Minto's crag, described in the Lay of the Last Minstrel, the sagacious animal is intently surveying the extensive country beneath him, ready upon the instant to give note of preparation or alarm. It is one of Mr. Hancock's most able and finished productions.

No. 157. Puppy and Frog. E. Landseer, R.A. The expression of surprise, not unmixed with affright, at the sight of the amphibious creature, is most bappily hit off.

No. 19. Sketch for a Picture in the possession of W. Wells, Esq. S. A. Hart.—No less attractive to the eye by its splendid chiaroscuro than exciting to the imagination by its character, this Sketch presents all that we conceive can be given in a finished work.

No. 91. ——. W. Kidd.-. W. Kidd From the expresmirable performance: well composed, true in sive and touching song of "John Anderson, the representation of its objects, and skilful in my Jo." Though treated with much skill in their execution. The late alterations in the respect to character and execution, it is, we law seem to have made game plentiful, not only think, deficient in effect. More of the twilight in the poultry market, but also in the market of art ought to have appeared in the representaof art, there being no fewer than nine subjects tion of the twilight of life. No. 13, The Political Barber, by the same artist, is open to no such remark; and the humour of it is excel-

> No. 90. Portrait of a Horse. R. B. Davis .-To relieve a light object against a similarly-coloured sky requires great skill; and that skill Mr. Davis has shewn in an eminent degree in the present instance.

WATER-COLOUR ROOM.

This apartment exhibits much talent and variety. We shall just indicate a few of the most attractive performances. No. 336. Fishing on the Coast of Devonshire. T. M. Baynes.— No. 339. Scene, North Devon. C. Marshall.— No. 346. The Talbot Inn Yard, Southwark. W. N. Hardwick. An interesting specimen of the olden style of architecture.—No. 363. View of an Old House at Islington. J. Wilson. Similar in character to the last mentioned .-No. 367. Hampstead Heath. F. W. Watts. Bold in execution, and admirable in effect.-No. 372. Old Scotch Firs at Hammersmith. H. W. Burgess.—No. 375. Worcester. G. Robson.—No. 382. The Wounded Heron.

Knight. Of the true old-fashioned rustic charecter: like our ancient buildings, it is well to secure resemblances of such originals before they are quite gone.—No. 424. South Port, Lancaster. A. G. Vickers.—No. 436. Lane Seene, a Study from Nature. Mrs. W. Carpenter.—No. 440. Study from Nature. J. Holand .- No. 441. Lyme Regis, Dorsetshire. C. Marshall.—No. 443. Near Lewes, Sussex. J. W. Allen. — No. 448. The Portrait; and No. 462. Market Girl. J. M. Moore. Beautiful both in character and in style of execution. -No. 458. Fête Champêtre. J. Stephanoff. In the usual gay and brilliant style of this clever artist .- No. 466. Weobly, Hertfordshire; and No. 468. A Cottage near Presteign. J. M. Ince...No. 475. An Old Bridge, near Finchley. F. Nash; &c. &c.

We cannot conclude our remarks on this Winter Exhibition without approving the liberal conduct of its managers in allowing free admission to every known artist; and without strongly recommending to the public at large a visit to the Gallery, as one of the pleasantest and most exhilarating modes of spending a morning which the season affords.

MEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Hon. Sir E. H. Alderson, Knt., one of the Judges of his Majesty's Court of Common Painted by Briggs; engraved by W. Skelton.

An excellent likeness, and a well-executed print, of a much esteemed and very intelligent judge. Sir Edward Alderson is an ornament to the profession through which his abilities have raised him to the honour of the bench; and this striking portrait of him must be very acceptable to his "learned brethren," as well as to the public at large. Mr. Skelton has not gone out of the beaten track, and accordingly this labour of his burin, will assimilate with the best engravings of judges, speakers, church dignitaries, and other eminent persons whom the arts have delighted to honour and per-

Gallery of Portraits, No. VI. C. Knight. THE learned Buchanan, the amiable Fenelon, and the philosophical but ill-used Wren, are the subjects of the sixth number of the biographical work published upder the superintendence of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. The memoirs and the plates are all very satisfactorily executed.

Illustrations to Heath's Book of Beauty, 1832. London, Longman and Co.

HEAVENS! Cupid's whole quiver! Such a galaxy of charms was surely never before as-The contemplation of them must warm the heart of the coldest critic. For ourselves (who do not pretend to greater sensibility or insensibility than our neighbours), when, after gazing at every exquisite creature in succession, we arrived at the end of the delightful volume, we could not refrain from breaking out in the old song....

"I'm in love with twenty,
I'm in love with twenty,
And could be so with twenty more—
There's nothing like a plenty!"

Here are beauties of every description -the hir, the dark, the majestic, the elegant, the lively, the pensive, - beauties to captivate all tastes. Is our reader sentimental? the tender "Julia" will wander with him in secluded groves by moonlight, and listen to the romantic effusions of his passion. Is he gay? the L. G.

mazurka or galopade, and will reward his vivacity and wit with her brightest smiles. Does he admire the refinement which befits elevated society? the accomplished "Leonora" will do the honours of his table with ineffable grace and politeness. Is simplicity, on the contrary, the object of his preference? the artless " Orphan" will be the affectionate and faithful companion in the humblest cottage of which he may make her the mistress. There is scarcely a mood of mind or tone of feeling which may not here find its sympathetic response. Besides those already mentioned, our principal favour-"ttes are, "The Enchantress," "Madeline,"
"Theresa," "Meditation," "Geraldine," "Rebecca," "The Bride," Lucy Ashton," and "Grace St. Aubyn." As to entering into any minute comparison of the merits of so many bewitching damsels, we have too much gallantry (we say nothing of prudence) to think of so invidious an undertaking.

In the production of this fascinating work. the conception of which does Mr. Heath infinite credit, and the popularity of which, we are convinced, will amply recompense him for the pains and expense he must have bestowed upon it. Mesdemoiselles L. and E. Sharpe, and Messrs. Boxall, Chalon, Corbould, Harper, Parris, Stone, Woolnoth, and Wright, have highly distinguished themselves. They have been most ably seconded by Messrs. Cochran, Cook, Dean, Hopwood, Mote, Robinson, Ryall, Scriven, Thomson, and T. Woolnoth.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

THE SKELETON DANCE. From the German of Goethe.

THE warder looked out at the midnight hour On the tombs in the churchyard around, The moon it shone forth with refulgent power, And lighted each distant mound. frise. Then grave-stone on grave-stone successively And females and males in slow order come forth,

In flowing, resplendent guise.

Not a moment is lost, to amusement they go, In gay circle their footsteps advance, The rich with the poor, and the high with the low__

But the mantles impede the gay dance. To modesty little regard they pay, But carelessly doff their cumbrous loads.

And merrily toss their shrouds away. Now foot vies with foot, and heel chases heel, And demonish pranks arise, A click and a clack resounds on the deal,

That music and measure supplies. The warder, astonished, now laughs aloud, While the tempter, the rogue, whispers into his ear.

"Go! seize on a snow-white shroud." 'Tis thought, and 'tis done, and with speediest flight

He retreats to the sanctified doors; Still brightly the moon illumines the night, And her beams o'er the revellers pours. Yet soon by degrees they steal away-

Their shrouds they resume, and desert the green: 'Tis still where 'twas lately so gay.

But one remains tripping and stumbling about, And grabbling each hole and each lair, Yet his friends must be true-'twere shameful to doubt-

His mantle he snuffs in the air.

The turret he shakes, but he shakes in vain, For useless his efforts, while sacred and charmed The crosses of metal remain.

Yet his shroud he must have, nor a moment delay,

Nor for thought has he time or power; Mid the Gothic festoons he soon forces a way, And clambers from tower to tower. Now speedy misfortune the warder betides. As crawling, so long-legged spiders are wont, From pillar to pillar he glides.

The warder turns pale, with alarm half dead, And curses his prize in his fears; Just then, high soaring above his head,

On the spear's iron point it appears ! Now hides the pale moon her diminished light, The clock thunders forth the first hour of day, And the skeleton sank to the shades of night. H. Š.

DRAMA.

DRURY LANE.

WE are glad to observe that the manager of this theatre has announced his intention to employ the good company he has brought together in representing some of the best specimens of our old dramatic literature. In furtherance of this object, we had, on Saturday last, a revival of Every Man in his Humour, cast with considerable strength, and acted with general, and, in some respects, well-merited applause. Macready, for the first time in London, assumed the part of Kitcly - a character well adapted to his style of acting, and in some of the prominent scenes of which (bating a little too much haste and impetuosity of utterance) he exhibited talents of no common order. best effort was decidedly that in which he hesitates whether he shall trust his favourite servant with the secret of his uneasiness; and here the doubts with which he is distracted were admirably portrayed, and given in his very best manner. The last scene was also well acted; and the reconciliation of Kitely to his innocent and pretty wife appeared to be hearty and sincere. The part next in order and consequence is that of Brainworm. This versatile rogue and "merry knave," as the old Justice calls him, was respectably played by Farren; but the character is not much suited to his peculiarities. Fun, and frolic, and goodhumour, are not exactly the qualities which he best represents. He was, however, better than when we have formerly seen him attempt the part; and, we daresay, with a few nights' practice, will grow more easy, and more at home in the humour of it. Of the Bobadil and Master Stephen we can say little that is favourable; the former is quite out of Power's usual line, and we are surprised that he should have undertaken the task. As to Harley, he seemed to have utterly lost sight of the characteristics of Stephen's humour; and instead of attempting to be "proud, and melancholy, and gentleman-like," as he is described by the author, he was smiling, and smirking, and grimacing, on the best terms with himself and every one around him. Dowton was the Justice Clement; and we think it a pity, as the part is so short a one, that he did not take the trouble to make himself more perfect in the words. Of the ladies, who had little to do, we have as little to say. Mrs. Nesbitt looked exceedingly pretty, and was withal well and appropriately dressed; but how any stage-manager could suffer Miss Cawse, who played the sister of a city trader, to be decked out as she was in "brooches, pearls, and ouches," we cannot comprehend. This to take a lesson from her sister Harriet, who is a good and correct dresser, and utterly devoid of affectation. As the bills have "respectfully called the public attention to the cast" of the play, we would as "respectfully" suggest to the manager, that we think it would be greatly improved if Cooper were to take Bobadil, vice Power, and Balls Young Knowell, in the room of Cooper.

On Monday we witnessed, with pain, the personation of Hamlet by Mr. Kean, who was evidently too ill for any performance, and far less for the performance of so difficult and elaborate a character as the Prince of Denmark, notwithstanding the extraordinary reports (ctiticisms they cannot be called) which we read in most of the newspapers of the following day. The exact truth is, that Mr. Kean (as is mentioned by our correspondent in Unrehearsed Stage Effects) was hardly able to be supported through the part. He delivered the author most barbarously; was helped up and down as occasion required; and, from his feebleness, caricatured every prominent scene throughout the play. We never saw any thing more ludicrous than the killing of Polonius; nor could we conceive Hamlet worse represented either in appearance or action. But while we state this (as we must, if we do not wish to deceive our readers), we must repeat, that Mr. Kean's indisposition was obviously the cause of our disappointment. Mr. Cooper performed the Ghost "excellently we'll i' faith;" and Miss Faucit justified our best opinion of her in Ophelia.

The tragedy was succeeded by a comic oneact interlude, from the pen of Mr. George Dance, called Petticoat Government. It is a very amusing piece, in which Farren, as a malade imaginaire, rough-ridden by his housekeeper, Mrs. Carney, Mrs. Glover, is con-trasted by a jolly laughing farmer, Bedford, and finally cured of his fancies, and released from his physicking dragon, by being tempted to get tipsy, through the example of his friend of rude health.

Farren's performance is perfection, and made the drama. His miserable slippered pantaloon of the commencement relaxing gradually into the enjoyment of meat and drink, from which he has been so long debarred; his furtive indulgence till indulgence excuses itself; and his bearing when primed,-are all touched with traits that proclaim the faithful observer and admirable artist of nature. Mrs. Glover is also "genuine" in the housekeeper; and Bedford tres jolly in the man vot enjoys himself. Mr. Thompson has an Irish character, of which Power would make much. The author's most cheering recompense was paid throughout in hearty laughter and general applause.

On Friday week Mr. Kean's Richard was not less excellently performed than during his best days; for what it wanted in stir and activity, was compensated by the exercise of much judgment and discrimination.

COVENT GARDEN.

LAST Saturday restored our deserving favourite Blanchard to these boards, as Solus in the revival of Every One has his Fault; and he was lady is; in truth, always a great deal too fond Mrs. Daly (Miss Spinster), Miss Sidney (Miss of shewing off her finery, and would do well Wooburn). The exertions of the performers elicited warm plaudits; and they did as much as could be done for a play of no superior merit, which attracted, on a very wet night, a slender, and consequently discouraging audience. On Wednesday Fra Diavolo succeeded the same comedy as an after-piece, and drew one of the best houses of the season. Mr. Wilson acquitted himself most successfully as the hero, both in acting and singing. A Mr. I. Bennett, from Bath, played Lorenzo in an agreeable manner. Mr. G. Penson was a good Lord Alleash: and Miss Invergrity as his lady was excellent. Miss Romer sustained her original part of Zerlina with all its original merit; and altogether the opera, in the language of the stage, made a hit.

On Monday, Julius Casar, which we wilfully pass over without criticism; as a merely respectable performance of this tragedy is hardly tolerable after the powerful cast of characters to which we have been accustomed in

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Covent Garden. Nov. 8.—Nothing can be more amusing in the Masque (always barring the striking consistency of the author's Irish accent and Scotch trews) than to observe Mademoiselle Adele, as Queen Elizabeth, stamping her feet with cold, and laughing at those who laugh at her for so doing; except, indeed, it is to witness the terror of Immortality (Miss Taylor) lest she should lose her life in the very dangerous descent she is nightly forced to achieve.

Surrey. Nov. 9.—The lord mayor's procession, in The Widow of Cornhill, was represented on the same plan as that pursued by the wags who alarmed the coachman by walking through and through his coach. Divers pairs of trumpeters, guards, and archers, walked with stately pace across the stage, and, having slowly disappeared on one side, rushed round to the other to retraverse it. They were easily recognisable by their respective and peculiar faces and bearings, and greeted with much good humour by the audience on their reappearance. I am very much inclined to suspect that the same gentleman personated the new and the old lord mayor in the procession, or at any rate that one gown served them both: for there could scarcely be so strong a family likeness between the stains (of turtle, I presume) with which they were adorned. But a better joke than all is, that the procession, we were told, both by word and bill, was supposed to be on its way to meet the king; and yet his majesty himself walked in the procession. And it's like to know, I would, what paddy arranged this meeting. In Guy Faux, which followed, two little gin-kegs, and the same number of scant faggots, did duty for the "thirty-six barrels of agous, did outy for the "thirty-six barress of gunpowder," and "those great piles of wood and fagots," alluded to by Hume, &c. It was also one of the former which blew up the "eighty" (acted by four) conspirators in the last scene

Drury Lane. November 10. - There is a cloister scene in the Doom Kiss so effectively contrived, that the audience are at a loss to know whether only one flat surface is before welcomed, as so sterling an actor ought to be, by a discerning public. The play itself was welcomed as discerning public. The play itself was straw bonnet and a stuff petticoat, who glided well cast, and ably performed, by Jones (Sir Robert Ramble), Egerton (Lord Norland), Ward (Captain Irwin), Bartley (Mr. Harmony), Miss Poole (Edward), Miss E. Tree (Lady Eleanor), Mrs. Gibbs (Mrs. Placid), scena at the foot-lights, was so puzzled and disconcerted at the laughter which burst from the audience, that he immediately began to sing half a note flat. A female ghost, who descends from a picture, should hang a rosary round a sleeping lady's neck. Mrs. Penly was not recumbing sufficiently close to the point on which the spectre alights, and the unearthly visitant was therefore obliged to stoop forward and endeavour to jerk the talisman round her neck. She was, however, only close enough to deal her protégée a violent blow on the chin with the harm-warding charm. Nothing dispirited at the badness of her aim, she took a second; but, alas! only reached so much farther as to bestow a similar favour on her unfortunate protégée's nose. The spectre was so amused at this joke that, having simply jerked the rosary on to the lady's face, it joined heartily in the laughter of the audience, and shook its sides as it ascended in a manner that made me tremble for its ghostship's safety.

November 12.-Whenever Kean's limbs are weakest, and his memory most deficient, his "improved state" is loudly proclaimed by the majority of the critics. The fact is, he can neither kneel nor rise without assistance, in most cases destructive to the illusion of the scene. In Richard he calls out in the battle-scene, "Upon them! charge!" and slowly halts off, using his sword as a crutch or walking-stick; and in Hamlet, which he acted on the evening of the above date, he omitted many important and striking passages of the part, and delivered the speech on the comparative merits of the two kings, in a manner which made it impossible to know which character applied to which; he wholly left out two-thirds of the lines, and transposed the rest into utter confusion. It must have been not a little annoying to Mr. Cooper to hear the cue for the ghost's entrance near the beginning instead of at the end of the speech. Had he attended to it, about one-eighth only of the speech would have been spoken; but he kindly waited till Mr. Kean remembered some more, and was at last content to come on at the wrong cue. Bluebeard is curiously got up; no elephant (not even a stuffed one), no horses (because, we presume, they are not "legitimate drama"), no military band on the stage, and all the horrors of the blue chamber reduced to the momentary exhibition of a small and foolish transparency. The blue beard is grey, and the blue chamber a most undeniable green, there being no blue one in the establishment; and, no new scenes being painted, the scenes of a certain piece laid in Mysore now serve for views at Constantinople. Harley (who, by the by, uses a Spanish guitar in the character of a Turk,) had the vulgarity (not a customary fault with him) to exclaim, in reference to the length of Miss Cawse's hair, "What a long tail our cat has got!" a piece of slang worthy to pair with Mrs. Humby's "What a shocking bad bonnet!" reported in a former number.

Queen's Theatre. Nov. 13 .- In a demonpiece, the midnight hour is specified by a bell tolling six! In an after-piece, in which some of the characters attempt a few words of French, Monsieur is pronounced Moshu, Mcsheere, and is varied with equal correctness on each occasion of its recurrence. " How long a time?" is translated comme long-temps, and pronounced kong long tong! Why not Wangching-ho?

VARIETIES.

Ninth of November !- Some one, not very easily satisfied with a feed, for the appetite must have been enormous which the provision on the table could not gratify with luxuries to repletion, complained, after stuffing prodigi-ously, of not having enough at the Lord Mayor's feast. "I am sure you ought not to say so," observed a friend; "for you have had a gorge-ous entertainment."

The Jews. - It is stated in the Anglo-Germanic Advertiser (but we know not if on sufficient authority, or merely a rumour picked up from an eastern attendant at Leipsic fair), that the descendants of the lost ten tribes of Israel are to be found in Li Bucharia. They are said to amount to ten millions, to speak the language of Thibet, to observe the rite of circumcision, to keep the kipour, and to have readers and elders like the original Jewish people.

Phenomenon. - On Monday week, in the afternoon, two or three water-spouts were visible at the same time off the North Foreland. One was funnel-shaped, and estimated to be nearly 800 feet high. The wind was blowing fresh from the north, and the atmosphere surcharged with dark rain-clouds. Heavy thunder and lightning accompanied this extraordinary appearance, and the sea was affected for more than a mile.

The Cambridge Philosophical Society held a general meeting on the 6th, for the purpose of formally accepting the charter lately granted to them by his Majesty; and the occasion was afterwards celebrated by a public dinner at the Eagle inn.

The Shetland Isles .- We learn, with much commiseration, that the Shetland Islands have been visited with an awful tempest; through which a number of fishermen, while engaged in their usual occupation, at a great distance from land, were doomed to a watery grave. Seventeen boats sunk under the fury of the elements; and of one hundred and eight men who composed the crews, and who had left their homes full of hope and joy, not one returned to tell the tale of their disaster. These ill-fated mariners have left nearly eighty widows and several hundred children, exposed to all the evils of extreme poverty, aggravated by the rigours of a northern winter; and an appeal has been made in their behalf to the generosity of their fellow-subjects. The subscription already amounts to between one and two hundred pounds; but we doubt not, when the distress is generally known, that it will speedily become more adequate to the relief of the numerous and helpless sufferers.

M. Cuvier .- The French nation is doing for Cuvier what the British people are doing for Sir Walter Scott, raising a subscription to perpetuate his memory by a visible and lasting monument. The managing committee have invited the authors of works on natural history, and other scientific writers of celebrity, to contribute copies of their works in aid of the fund; and they make an earnest appeal to all who feel the immense void created in the literary world by the loss of their great contemporary Gabriel Romanowitch Derjavin died lately on his estate near Novogorod. He was one of the best of the Russian poets; and a translation into English of some of his productions was published (in four volumes, we think,) above twenty years ago.

Inverkeithing .- In the battle of Inverkeithing, between the royalists and Oliver Crom-finely executed, and, certainly, of a description to convey an imperishable likeness of Scott to succeeding generations. The material is lasting, the portrait good, the price low;—three great recommendations to popularity.

Mr. Blackwood has announced (and the best Edinburgh journals speak in terms of the highest admiration of the portrait) an engraving from Allan's picture of Sir Walter in his study; the demand for which will, we are sure, reward any effort to have it done in the first style.

A shilling full-face portrait has been published in London by Mr. Starie; which is just about what could be expected from the cost.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Historical Memoirs of the House of Russell, from the Norman Conquest, by J. H. Wiffen; with unpublished Correspondence, from the Reign of Henry Vill. to that of George III. inclusive. Illustrated by Portraits, Views, and Armorial Bearings.

The Scasons: Stories for very young Children. (Winter.) By the Author of "Conversations on Chemistry,"

cc. dc.

Sketches of Vesuvius, with short Accounts of its principal Eruptions, by John Auldjo, Esq.

The Greek Anthology, translated into English Verse and chronologically arranged: containing all the Translations comprised in "Bland's Collections," with Additions, dc. arranged and edited by Charles Merivale, Esq.

Mr. Mayne is preparing for the press a third and enlarged edition of his Poem of the Siller Gun, with Notes and Illustrations.

Paris, or the Book of the Hundred-and-One, being a Paris, or the Book of the Hundred and One, being a translation from the French work "Le Livre des Cent-

Inquiry concerning that disturbed state of the Vital Functions usually denominated Constitutional Irritation, by Benjamin Travers, Senior Surgeon to St. Thomas's by Benjamin Travers, Senior Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital.

The Morbid Anatomy of some of the most important parts of the Human Body, by Matthew Baillie, M.D.; with Preliminary Observations on Diseased Structures, by James Wardrop, Surgeon to the King, &c.

A prospectus is issued of a periodical, under the title of Finden's Gallery of the Graces; to consist of a series of lovely female Portrait Sketches, from original pictures, under the superintendence of W. and E. Finden, and accompanied by poetical 'llustrations by T. K. Hervey, Esq. vey, Esq.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Steel's Shipmaster's Assistant corrected to Oct. 1832, by Stikeman, 8vo. 3ls. bds.—Liston's Surgery, Part 3, 8vo. 8vo. 18s. bds.—Liston's Surgery, Part 3, 8vo. 18s. bds.—To Magdalen, and other Tales, by J. S. Knowles, 18mo. 4s. 6d. bds.— Memoirs of Dr. Burney, by Knowles, 18mo. 4s. 6d. bds.— Memoirs of Dr. Burney, by Knowles, 18mo. 4s. 6d. bds.— Memoirs of Dr. Burney, by Knowles, 18mo. 3s. cloth.—Mac Farlane's Lives and Exploits of Banditti and Robbers, 2 vols. 8vo. 16 Engravings, 21s. bds.—Roberts' Oriental Scenes, Sketches, and Tales, 1 vol. post 8vo. 10s. 6d. cloth.—O' Brien's Irish and English Dic'ionary, 8vo. 12s. bds.; large paper, 18s. bds.—Townson's Discourses on the Four Gospels, 8vo. 10s. 6d. cloth.—O' Brien's Irish and English Dic'ionary, 8vo. 12s. bds.; large paper, 18s. bds.—Townson's Discourses on the Four Gospels, 8vo. 10s. 6d. cloth.—O' Brien's Irish and English Dic'ionary, 8vo. 12s. bds.; large paper, 18s. bds.—Townson's Discourses on the Four Gospels, 8vo. 10s. 6d. cloth.—O' Brien's Irish and English Dic'ionary, 8vo. 12s. bds.; large paper, 18s. bds.—Townson's Discourses on the Four Gospels, 8vo. 10s. 6d. cloth.—Togright, with the Supplement, 8vo. 18s. bls.; or the Supplement separate, 5s. bds.—De Lolme's Tablesu Général de la Langue Française, 16mo. 7s. 6d. cloth.—Taylor's System of Short Hand, edited by Cooke, fcp. 4s. cloth.—Gordon's History of the Greek Revolution, 2 vols. 8vo. 30s. bds.—Goldon's Revolution of our Review of Sir David Baird in our next.

We are unable this week to fulfil our promise relative to a Memoir of Mr. Gent.

4 vols. 12mo. 11. 16s. hds.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

November.	The	Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday 8	From	36.	to	47-	29-99	to	29.0G
Friday 9		37.		43.	29.84		29.80
Saturday · · 10		28.		47.	29.68		29.56
Sunday 11	• • • •	36.		47.	29.50		29 56
Monday · 12		31.		48.	29 64		29.67
Tuesday · · 13		32.		43.	29.72	stati	onary
Wednesday 14							29.69

Wind variable, S.W. prevailing. Except the 11th, cloudy, with frequent rain. Rain fallen, :575 of an inch. Edmonton. CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Latitude ····· 51° 37' 32" N. Longitude ··· 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

Extracts from a Meteorological Register kept at High Wycombe, Bucks, by a Member of the London Meteoro-logical Society. September 1832.

Mean 29-87186

Number of days of rain, 6. Quantity of rain in inches and decimals, 0-45. Winds.—4 East—8 West.—4 North—3 South—0 North-ist—0 South-east—3 South-west.—8 North-west.

east—0 South-east—3 South-west.—8 North-west, General Observations.—The range of the thermometer, and also the extremes, greater than since 1824, although the mean temperature was less than last year: from the 12th to the 22d no rain fell; and the whole quantity was very considerably less than has fallen in September during the last ten years, and only one-ninth of the average quantity in that period. The wind generally from the westward; and for several days at the latter end of the month scarcely a cloud was to be seen: the barometer was also uncommonly high—not only as respects the mean, but likewise the extremes. The month might be denominated exceedingly dry and fine. nated exceedingly dry and fine.

October. Thermometer-Highest----- 65-00°----2d & 10th. Lowest 29-75 19th.
Mean 47-66935
Barometer—Highest 30-16 25th. Lowest 28-91 8th. Mean 29.81860

Number of days of rain, 16.
Quantity of rain in inches and decimals, 4-40.
Winds.—4 East—12 West.—0 North—7 South—1 Northeast—1 South-east—1 North-west.—1 North-west.

east—1 South-west—1 North-west.
General Observations.—More rain fell than in any corresponding month since 1823—the quantity on the 7th was nearly an inch and a half; on which day and on the following the wind blew strong and heavy: thunder was heard (particularly one clap, about 3 o'clock) on the morning of the 8th: the mean temperature rather below the average, and considerably less than in the same month last year: the range of the barometer was greater than in the last four years, and the mean rather high: several days were extremely fine; rainbows were observed on the 5th and 6th, about 3 p.m. each day.

Digitized by Google

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

BULKELEY'S PATENT: the Diamond or Chemical Candle.—These Candles, formed of the purest wax chemically prepared, and moulded on scientific principles, are of the most be autiful appearance, and will upon trial be found superior to any hitter to offered to the build of the subject of the control of the cont

WANTED to Purchase, at good Prices, good Matters, Anc ent and Modern, of all dimensions, such as subjects. The Plates must be in good condition, and capable of yielding a minute of the properties of the propert

DOOKSELLING BUSINESS. — Wanted, a well-educated YOUTH as an APPRENTICE, not under 14, nor above 15 years of age, to be bound for Seven Years, and boarded and lodged in the House during that period.

A Premium will be required. Apply, from Ten till Four o'Clock, at Messrs. Longman and Co.'s, No. 27, Paternoster Row.

TO BOOKSELLERS, BOOKBINDERS. STATIONERS, PRINTERS, &c. — To be Disposed of, an old-established and excellent flusiness in all the above Branches, in one of the best Market Towns in the County of Naford. This is a most excellent opportunity for an active and intelligent Young Man, who is anxious to settle in Business. The Stock, &c. (which is not very heavy) to be taken at a Valuation. For further particulars, apply (if by Letter, post-paid) to X. Y., No. 2, Warvick Square, London; or to Mr. Albut, Hanley, Staffordshire Potteries.

A MEDALIION of SIR WALTER SCOTT, from a Bust by F. Chantrey, R.A.; engraved by A. J. Stothard, Eq.; mounted in a Bronze Frame, with a Motto by Sir Walter Scott.
Published by S. Parker, 12, Argyll Place, Regent Street; and sold by all respectable Booksellers, Jewellers, &c.

Piem of Carllon Terrace and New Pillar.

On the 20th of November will be published, with a fine Steel Engraving of Carllon Terrace and New Pillar, printed on a sheet of royal paper, price 3s. 6d.

THE STATIONER'S ALMANAC for the Year 1223; containing, besides the Calendar, a variety of Tables (including the Time of High Water at London Bridge), adapted for the Counting-House and for general use.
Frinted for the Company of Stationers, and sold by George Greenbill, at their Hall, in Ludgute Street.

At the same time will be published,
The London Miniature Almanac, with an Engraving of Hungerford Market, from the River.

The usual variety of Book and Sheet Alma-

Martin's Millon.

This day is published, price is: imperial 8vo. Part I.

THE PARADISE LOST of MILTON, with Illustrations by John Martin. To be completed in

#IN Allustratures ...

 In consequence of the failure of the Proprietor of this plendid Work, and with a view to a very extended circulation, a re-issue in monthly Parts has been determined on, at less than

This day is published, price 2s. 6st. the Eighth Part of FINDEN'S LANDSCAPE ILLUSTRA-TIONS to LORD BYRON'S LIFE and WORKS, containing Five Views by Turner, Calleott, Roberts, Gastineau, and Purser. Engraved in the first style of the Art.

John Marray, Albemarle Street; sold also by Charles Tilt, Fieet Street.

*A few Proofs, price 5s., and India Proofs, price 7s. 6d. in royal 4to. are taken, in which are given Two additional Plates from the Eighth Volume of Byron's Life and Works.

Historical Portraits to the Waverley Novels. Part 1. royal 8vo. price 2s. 6d. a Series of Part I. royal 8vo. price 2t. 6d. a Sories of

ORTRAITS of EMINENT

HISTORICAL CHARACTERS introduced in the Novels and Tales of Sir Walter Scott. Engraved in the first style of art by Cooper and West, from well-auth nicated Forter territant and the Communication of the State of Sta

Price 8s. royal 8vo. the Second Part of PORTRAITS of the PRINCIPAL
FEMALE CHARACTERS of the WAVERLEY NOVELS, containing Four beautiful Heads, from Designa by Stone, Mrs. Carpenter, W. Boxall, and S. J. Rochard; and an original Autograph Letter of Sir Walter Scotts.
 A few India Proofs in royal 4to, price 5s. 6d.; and 25 Proofs before Letters, price 7s. 6d. are taken.
Chapman and Hall, 186, Strand.

In 8vo. the 5th edition, with Additions, 18v.

STUDIES of CHESS, containing a Systematic Introduction to the Game, and the Analysis of Chess.

By A. D. PHILIDOR.
With original Comments and Diagrams.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

To Literary Gentlemen.

To Literary Gentlemen.

ANTED, as Editor of a Country Journal, a Gentleman of the most decidedly Liberal Principles.
Terms, and reference as to ability, &c. to be addressed (postpaid) to Mr. A. J. Caldicott, Wolverhampton.

WRITING PAPER.—John Limbird. W. 143, Strand (the Mirror Office), a few Doors west of Somerset House, facing Catherine Street, solicits a trial of the Writing Papers, manufactured by the best Kentish and other Nakers, sold by him at the following low Prices, for Cash.

Per Quire of Per Ream of

	24 sheets.	20 perfect Quire
Fine Bath Post	6d.	· 94.
Superfine ditto	8d.	12s.
Ditte, ditto	94.	13e. 6d.
Ditto, ditto	10 d .	14s.
Best thick Bath Post	1s. 0d.	170.
Ditto, ditto, gift	10. 2d.	200.
Fine Laid Post, from 7d. to	1s. 0d.	11s. to 17s.
Best Blue Wove Thin Post	10d.	14s.
Glazed Draft Paper	10d.	14s.

Foolscap, from 9d, to 1s. 6d. per Quire, or 13s. 6d. to 26s. the Ream. Note paper, 3d. per Quire, and upwards. Sealing Wax, 1s. 6d. to 5s. the lb.

All other Articles in Stationery at equally low Prices.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Mr. Don't Improved Edition of Miller's Gardener's Dictionary, In 410. with numerous Woodcuts, price 31. 18s. in boards, the Necond Volume of A GENERAL SYSTEM of GARDENING and BOTANN; containing a complete Enumeration and Description of all Plants hitherto known; with their Generic and Specine Characters, Places of Growth, Time of Flowering, Mode of Gulture, and their Uses in Medicine and Domestic Economy; founded upon Miller's Gardener's Dictionary, and arranged according to the Natural System.

By GEORGE DON, P.L.S.

London: Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington; J. and W. T. Clarke; Longman and Co.; T. Cadeli; J. Richardson; Jeffery and Son; Baldwin and Cradock; J. Booker; J. Booth; Harvey and Barton; S. Bazster; Shewood and Co.; Harding and Lepard; J. T. Sectich!; Whittaker and Co.; Simpkin and Marshall; and E. Hodgson.

* a The First Volume, with a Glossary and Index, may be had complete, price 34. 19. In cloth boards. This Work is also publishing in Parts, at Genech.

The Child's Own Book.

Embellished with Three Hundred Cuts, price 7s. 6d. in fancy boards, or 8s. 6d. bound,

HE CHILD'S OWN BOOK. The 2d edition.

London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside; N. Hailes, Piccadilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; R. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; and Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh.

Where may be had, The Girl's Own Book, with 120 Cuts, price

4s. 6d. in fancy boards, or 5s. 6d. bound.

Printed at the Chiswick Press, in 1 thick vol. 12mo. with Three Hundred and Fifty-five Portraits, fancy cloth boards, 12v.; or bound in morocco, 16v.

A DICTIONARY of BIOGRAPHY,

A comprising the most eminent Chrareters of all Ages, Nations, and Professions.

By R. A. DAVENPORT, Esq.

London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside; R. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh; J. Cumming, and W. F. Wakeman, Dublin.

4th edition, corrected and enlarged, in post 8ve. price 6a.

THE VETERINARY SURGEON'S

MANUAL: a complete Guide to the Cure of all Diseases incident to Horses, Cattle, Sheep, and Dogs: with Rules for the Management of the Healthy Horse, Feeding, Stabling, Grooming, Shoeling, &c. The Healthy Treatment and Breeding of Dogs and a Compendium of a veterinary Mediciaes. The whole being the result of Third year of the Whole being the result of Third You'de,

Late Veterinary Surgeon in the Hanoverian Horse.

London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg., 73. Cheapside; and R. Griffin and Co. Glasgow.

URES DICTIONARY of CHEMISTRY and MINERALOGY, with their Application.

By ANDREW URE, M.D. F.R.S.

4th edition, with numerous Improvements.
London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside; R. Griffin and Co. Gisacow; Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh; J. Cumming, and W. F. Wakeman, Dublin.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 14s. boards, the 2d edition of ECTURES on the ACTS of the APOSTLES, delivered in the Parish Church of Stockton-upon-Tees, during Lent, in the Vears 1803, 1804, 1805, and 1806.

Rector of Eggleschiffs, in the County of Durham.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
Practical Reflexions on the Ordination Son

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
Practical Reflections on the Ordination Services for Deacons and Priest in the United Church of England and Ireland. For the Use of Candidates for Orders, and of those who renew their Ordination Vows. With appropriate Prayers for Clergymen, selected and original. New edition, amall 8vo.
price 8s.

The Gentry of England.

A Companion to the Peerage and Baronetage.
On the lat November was published, elegantly printed in royal 800. with the Armorial Enalgas of each Family beautifully engraved by Thompson, the First Fart, price 72. 6d. of the HISTORY of the COMMON CRES of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, qualified by Landed Property to become Members of Parliament.

Author of the Dity JUHN BURKE, Eq.

Author of the Estinct and Dermant Perrage, &c.

the Extinct and Dormant Peerage, &c.

The novelty and utility of this undertaking combine to invest it with no common claims to public attention. The highly influential and extensive class to whom it refers have at present no work of reference exhibiting an entire and authentic account of heir respective families, athough it is obvicus how large a share of interest attaches to such an object, both for the parties themselves, and for all connected with them, by the ties either of alliance, friendship, neighbourhood, patrenage, or political constituency.

or arisatte, Friendamp, neighbourhood, patrenage, or postucal constituency. Those gentlemen who may have additional communications to make to the Editor, are requested to send their letters immediately, free of postage, addressed to Mr. Colburn, 18, Great Mariborough

Street.
Published for H. Colburn, by R. Bentley, New Burlington Street.

CHURCH REFORM.

Sya CHURCHMAN.

Comprising—I. Reform—II. Discipline—III. Law—IV. Bn.

downents—V. Pluralities—VI. Dignities—VII. Public Service

VIII. Liturgical Offices—IX. Edifices—X. Property of the Church. Church.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

New Work by the Author of the " Brentful Bistory of the Muliny of the Boundy," With a Portrait, price &s.

THE THIRTY-FIFTH No. of the FAMILY LIBRARY, containing the Life of Poter the Great.

By JOHN BARROW, Esq. F.R.S.

No. XXXVI. is nearly ready. It contains "Six Months in the West Indies," by Heary Nelson Coloridge.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

New Series of Museum Criticum. Price 5s.

THE PHILOLOGICAL MUSEUM,
No. IV. November, 1839.
Contents: — Imaginary Conversation; P. Sciplo Emiliama, Polybius, Panelius—Dr. Arnold on the Spartan Constitution—On the Homeric use of the Word "Heast — On Affectation in Ancient and Modern Art—De Arail Ganner Aug. Backbill Prolusie Academics—Anecdous Baroccians—On the Roman Coloni, from the German of Savigny—Memon—On the Position of Suas—One certain Tenses attributed to the Greek Verb—Quo Anni Tempore
Panathensa Minora calebrata sint, quartiur. Miscellaneous Observations: On the Death of Paches—On the Title of Xenophon's Greek History, from the German of L. Dindodr-One glish Preterites and Gentives.

Printed for Deightons, Cambridge; Rivingtons, London; and Parker, Oxferd.

Of whom may be had,

Of whom may be had,
Parts I. II. and III. forming the First Vol.
price 15s. in boards; or any Part singly, at 8s.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 7s. Published by Treuttel and Würtz, Soho Square Published by Treuttel and Wurts, Soho Square.

THE SOURCES of HEALTH and DISEASE in COM MUNITIES: or, Elementary Views of Hygiene, illustrating its Importance to LEGISLATORS and HEADS of FAMILLES.

Surgeon Extraordinary to H. R. H. the Duchess of Kent, &c. &c.

"This is one of the most interesting little volumes we have seen for some time."—Micital Classits, Aug. 18.

"This is a book which will repay perusal."—Speciator, July 7.

"This is a book which will repay perusal."—Speciator, July 7.

"It cannot be read without eminent advantage by every class of the community."—Literary Gassits, July 14.

"This is a most useful work."—Courier, June 20.

"The suthor draws deductions of the most useful application to society at large."—Morsing Post, Aug. 9.

"This volume contains many facts highly important."—Courf Journal, July 7.

"Highly interesting, relative to the preservation of health and extension of life."—Working Times, July 18.

Mr. Curilit's Works on the Ear and Eye.

A TREATISE on the PHYSIOLOGY and DISEASES of the EAR, with a Plate of Accounte Instruments. Sthe diliton, 70. 6d. beards.
2. An Essay on the Deaf and Dumb, shewing the necessity of Medical Treatment in early Infancy, with Cases and Plates. 100. 6d. boards.

3. A Lecture on the Physiology and Zoology of the Ear in Man and Animals, delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. 5s.

4. A New and Improved Map of the Anatomy of the Ear, designed for the Use of Students and Practitioners. 6s. coloured.

5. A Synoptical Chart of the various Diseases of the Ear, with the Modes of Care. 2s. 6s.
6. A Report of the Royal Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear, Dean Street, Soho Square; examplified by Cases. 11. Cases. 1s.
Published by Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, and Co.

A Treatise on the Diseases of the Eye, with new modes of Treatment, illustrated with a variety of interesting Cases of Persons who have been restored from total Blindness to perfect Vision. 2. An Essay on Amaurosis and Nervous

Digitized by Google

The third edition of
THE MESSIAH. A Poem, in Six Books.
By R. MONTGOMERY,
Asther of the "Omnipresence of the Delty," &c. &c.
John Turrill, Office of the British Magazine, 250, Regent Street.

In 4to. price $1s. handsomely bound, containing
Thirty-six highly-finished Engravings,
PISHER'S DRAWING-ROOM SCRAPBOOK for 1828. with Pastine University

BILER'S DRAW ING-ROOM SCRAFBOOK for 1838, with Poetical Illustrations
By L. E. L.
The great popularity of the Scrap-Book for 1839 has rightly encouraged the publication of another volume, still more pleasingly enriched with interesting works of art, and still more beautifully illustrated by the pen of the poet. —Literary Genetic.
London: Fisher, Son, and Co.

FRAGMENTS of VOYAGES and TRA-VELS.

By Captain BASIL HALL, R.N.
Second Series. 2d edition, in 2 handsome vols. Plates, 15s.
Capt. Hall's Fragments. First Series.

Capt. Hall's Fragments.

edition, 3 vols. 15s.

"This book is modestly recommended by the author to the use of possage persons chiefly; but we believe that few persons of any age, however advanced, will persue it without being conscious of a salutary spice of admonition silently penetrating to some distempered corner of their heart, and correcting a latent evil. It evinces throughout a delicate perception of the consequences of our conduct as it regards the feelings of others, which bears more particularly upon the duties of the higher stations of life."—

Evited Service Journal, July 1831.

Printed for Bobert Cadeli, Edinburgh; and Whitaker and Co. London.

Who have lately published,

Who have lately publish

w no nave lately published,
Capt. Basil Hall's Travels in North America.
Ed edition, with Additions. 3 vols. post 8vo. 16. 11s. 6d. Plates separately, 10v. 6d.

Mrs. Dalgairn's Cookery, adapted to everyday l.ife. A new edition, 7s. 6d.

Destiny; or, the Chief's Daughter. By the Author of "Marriage." 2 vols. 1l. 1ls. 6d.

8, New Burlington Street.

Mr. Bentley has just published the following Interesting Works:—
In 8 vols. 8vo. with fine Portrait, Maps, &c.

IFE of SIR DAVID BAIRD, Bart.
from his private Papers and Correspondence, in the possession of Lady Baird, including numerous Letters of the Duke of Wellington, the Marquess of Wellesty, Lords Meiville and Cattlereagh, Sir John Moore, and other distinguished Characters.

Wild Sports of the West.

by the Author of "Stories of Waterloo." 2 vols. 8vo. with numerous Illustrations.

"None but a thorough-bred sportsman could write this book, and very few sportsman could write such a book."—Sporting Magazine, None.

The East India Sketch-Book. 2 vols. "We recommend the perusal of this work to every cadet and voyager about to proceed to that alluring country."—Courier.

And on Tuesday next,

Companion to the Novels of Sir Walter Scott.

History of Scotland,
from the Karliest Period to the Present Time. By Robe Chambers, Author of "The Picture of Scotland." 2 small vo printed and bound uniformly with the Waverley Series.

11. Visit to Germany and the Low Countries, in 1839, 30, 31. By Sir A. B. Faulkner. 8 vols. Also, just ready,

The 4th Vol. of the English Translation of Madame Junot's Memoirs, containing the 7th and 8th Vols. of the Paris edition.

Major Rennell's Geography of Herodotus.

In 2 vols. prior 11. 8s. boards, a new edition, printed from the Author's revised copy, and containing the original Maps and Portrait, of

THE GEOGRAPHICAL SYSTEM of

In 8vo. price 1st. boards, a new edition of KEY to the OLD TESTAMENT and APOCRYPHA; or, an Account of their several Books, of the Contents and Authors, and of the Times in which the of the Contents and Authors, and of the Times in which they were respectively written.

By ROBERT GRAY, D.D.

Lord Bishop of Bristol.

2. A Key to the New Testament, giving an Account of the several Books, their Contents, their Authors, and of the Times, These, and Octasions on which they were respectively writer. By the late Rev. Dr. Percy, Bishop of Dromore.

8vo. 2s. 6d.: 15mo. 3s. beards.

• Times Works may be had together, in 1 vol. 8vo.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mail.

Of whom may be had.

Of whom may be had, The Connexion between the Sacred Writings and the Literature of Jewish and Heathen Authors, particularly that of the Classical Ages. By Robert Gray, D.D. Lord Bishop of Bristol. 2d edition, 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. le.

THE LANDSCAPE ANNUAL; OF, beautiful Engravings in Italy for 1838, illustrated with Twenty-six beautiful Engravings in Line, from Drawings by J. D. Harding. The Literary Department by Thomas Roscoe, Esq. Price do the Plates, regal Box green moreco, 21. 12. 62. The Control of the Plates, regal Box green moreco, 21. 12. 62. The Control of the Plates, regal Box green moreco, 21. 12. 62. Columbier 400. Jennings and Chaplin, 62, Cheapside.

In 8vo. price 2s.

UGGESTIONS respecting the Neglect Orders; respectfully addressed to Examining Chaplains, to the Clergy at large, and distributed to the Clergy at large, and with the American Market of the Clergy at large, and the Clergy at large and the Clergy at large, and the Clergy at large at large and the Clergy at large at and Canon of Christ Church; tate review and College.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail, London; Parker, Oxford; and Deightons, Cambridge.

A Literary Birth-day Present. 8vo. vols. compiled from upwards of 50,000 vols of the rare-t works extant, In two handsome 8v

THE AN NIVE RSARY CALENDAR,
NATAL BOOK, and UNIVERSAL MIRROR.
"A work of immense labour and research, which will very shortly find a place in the literary of every student and man of letters in the kingdom."—Monthly Review.
"It is also peculiarly adapted for the general reader, for it contains an inexhaustible fund of amusement and instruction, and is attainable at a very moderate price."—United Kingdom.
Published for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 239, Regent Street, and 51, Paternoster Row.

New and important Work on the West Indies.

Now ready, in 8vo. with numerous Lithographic Embellishments, a third edition of TOUR YEARS in the WEST INDIES, in 1826, 1827, 1828, and 1829; containing a full and authentic account of the late dreadful Hurricanes in Barbadoes, St. Vincent, and St. Lucia.

"A very clever and interesting a square and authentic account of the late dreadful Hurricanes in Barbadoes, St. Vincent, and St. Lucia.

t. Vincent, and St. Lucia.
A very clever and interesting volume."—Lit. Gaz.
Full of lively and graphic pictures of society."—Glasg. Free Press.
"Presenting also a very faithful record of slavery as it now exists in the colonies."—Chronicle.

Published for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 228, Regent Street, and 51, Paternoster Row.

The Public are respectfully informed that the new edition is now ready of HE DOMINIE'S LEGACY; a

THE DOMINIE'S LEGACY; a Collection of Tales, in 3 vols. post 8vo. price 2u.
"There heautiful tales deserve a place in every library."— Blackmood's Mug.
"We are rejoiced to find the world willing to patronise so unpretending and unpuffed a work as the 'Dominie's Legacy."— Althonorm.

likenaum. Published for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 228, Regent Street, and 51, Paternoster Row.

A Holyday Present,
Being the cheapest and most elegant edition of the "Pligrim's Progress" ever published.
Now ready, in watered silk, price only be,, or, in morocco, glt edges, lot. 6d. with 10 Engravings, a beautiful Portrait of the Author, and copious Notes, by W. Mason, Kidd's edition of UNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

"This edition is by far the cheapest and most elegant of any that have issued from the press since the first appearance of this extraordinary and popular work."—Observer.

Pablished for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 238, Regent Street,
and 51, Paternoster Row.

Christian Missions.

In a neat vol. price 5s. 6st. strongly bound in fancy cloth; or elegantly bound in moreoco, 7s. 6d. a second edition of TRAVELS and RESEARCHES of eminent ENGLISH MISSIONARIES.

6. This little volume having been divested of all dry, objectionable, and uninteresting matter, is strongly recommended to the notice of parents and teschers in schools.

1. A little work that will be read with a vidity: "Altenaum." is well conceived and extremely well executed," Speciator. "and must soon become popular."—Lit. Gaa.

Published for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 238, Regent Street, and 51, Paternoster Row.

In 19mo. a new edition, with six coloured Engravings, &c.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the GROWTH and CULTURE of the CARNATION, PINK, AURICULA, and other Flowers; with a Dissertation on Soils and Manures, &c.
By THOMAS HOGG.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

Of whom may be had,

The Greenhouse Companion. Third edition,

Main's Villa and Cottage Florist's Directory

Price 7s. 6d.

TABLEAU GENERAL, PROGRESSIF, et RAISONNE, de la LANGUE FRANCAISE; being a Collection of all Words used now in Paris in gentrel Circles; classed according to their Utility and Frequency in Conversation, and rendered into English in all their Meanings; with numerous Examples and Directions in the choice of Words, shewing their accurate construction and use: comprising Words used in famittar style, in military, sea; and legal affairs, politics, proper names, &c. A work supplying Students of every age and rank with subjects gradually suited to their wants, and enabling them to converse on every topic with the correct phraseology.

By Mons. J. L. DE LOLME.

Dedicated, by permission, to Her Mejesty Queen Adelaide.
Published by J. Souter, 73, 8t. Paul's Churchyard; and may be had of the Author, 8, 8oho Square.

Compendious French Dictionary.

In 18mo. price 10s. 6d. bound, the sixth edition of DICTIONARY of the FRENCH and ENGLISH LANGUAGES, in conformity with the French Academy; in two Parts, French and English, and English and French; in which are introduced many Thousand useful Words, not to be found in any other French and English Dictionary. With a copious Introduction on the Francaciation of the French Language, and on the Varieties in the Declinable Parts of Speech.

By M. DE LEUIZAG

Parts of Speech.

By M. DE LEVIZAC.

Thoroughly revised and greatly improved, by C. GROS.
London: Printed for Baldwin and Cradock; Longman, Rees, and Co.; Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.; Dalau and Co.; E. Williams; and Holdsworth and Ball.

But the complication and subsequent improvement of this work, it has been the aim of both the author and editor to adapt it for the purposes of tuition, by the exclusion or modification of all words which are unfit to be presented to the eye of youthful readers.

THE REFUGEE in AMERICA. A

By Mrs. TROLLOPE,
Author of the "Domestic Manners of the Americans."
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

JOURNAL of a PASSAGE from the PACIFIC to the ATLANTIC, crossing the Andes in the Northern Provinces of Peru, and descending the River Maranon, or Amazon.

By HENRY LISTER MAW, Lieut. R.N.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

GREEK GRAMMAR, for the Use of Schools, translated from the German of V Schools, translated from the German of V. C. P. Rost. To which is added, an Appendix on Greek Versification.

"This Grammar is distinguished by lucid arrangement, concleenest, and fulness. The author judiciously commences with prosody, and then proceeds to etymology and syntax. The system of accentuation, which is so slightly noticed in Matthie, he explains with the utmost clearness."—Monthly Magazine.

Printed for Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

Of whom may be had, Elements of Greek Accentuation. Translated from the German of Dr. K. Goetling, by a Member of the University of Oxford. 8vo. 15s. Elements of Greek Prosody. Translated from the German of Dr. F. Spitzner. 8vo. de. Epigrammata è purioribus Græcæ Anthologiæ

Fontibus hausit, Annotationes Jacobii, De Bosch, et aliorum instruxii: suas subinde Notulas et Tabulam Scriptorum chrone-logicam adjunxit Joannes Edwards, A.M. 870. 10s. 6d. Æschvli Prometheus Vinctus. To which are ABBLINA FOUNDMENT NOT THE TOWN THE ABBLINA TO Which are subjoined a Greek Ordo, a literal Prose Translation, and Notes, which contain the derivations of the more abstrate Greek words, and explanations of the difficulties of metre, grammar, &c. Opposite each verse of the chorus is placed the name of the system to which it belongs; and the ellipses of the Greek text are supplied in the ordo. 870. 55. 66.

In 16mo. price 4s. 6d. elegantly half-bound, with a beautifully engraved Frontispiece, Vignette Title, and a variety of En-

THE INFANT ANNUAL; or, a Mother's Offering, for 1823, principally intended for Children from four to ten years of age.

11.

In 18mo. 4s. 6d. in fancy half-binding, with Illustrati In 18mo. 4s. 6d. in fancy half-binding, with Illustrations,
The Excitement; or, a Book to induce Young
People to read, for 1833, containing remarkable appearances in Nature, Signal Preservations, and such incidents as are particularly fitted to arrest the youthful mind.

It may be proper to mention, that this Work, which has been published as an Annual for four years, and has been so favourably received by the public, has no connexion with a book designated by the same name, and edited by a person called "Keys," which appeared a few months ago.

Waugh and Innex, Edinburgh; Curry and Co. Dublin; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. London.

THE RHETORIC of ARISTOTLE, literally translated from the Greek, with Notas; to which is added, an Analysis of Aristotle's Rhetoric, by THOMAS HOBBES, of Malmesbury; and a Series of Analytical Questions. The 3d edition, very much improved, 8vo. boards, 14c.

Questions on the Rhetoric of Aristotle. 8vo. Æschylus, literally translated into English rose, with copious Notes, critical and explanatory. Svo. b De. 6d.

This is the only literal translation of the whole of Eschylus.

This is the only literal translation of the whole of racknysts. Euripides. The Hecuba, Orestes, Phoenian Virgins, and Medea of Euripides, literally translated into glish Proce, from the Text of Forson, with Notes. The third ition, revised and corrected, 8vo. boards, 8v.

The Hippolytus and Alcestis of Euripides, literally translated into English Proce, with Notes. 8vo. boards, 4s. 6d.

Aristophanes. Plutus and the Frogs, literally translated into English Prose, with copious Notes. Svo. St.
Livy. A new and literal Translation of Livy's Roman History, Book XXI.—XXX. inclusive, with Notes.
8 vols. 8 vol. 5 vo. boards, 18.

2 vols. 870. boards, 188.
Sophocles, literally translated into English
Prose, with Notes. The 3d edition, very much improved, 8vo.
boards, 15s.
Otierd: D. A. Talboys; Whitsker and Co. Le en.

FIVE MINUTES' ADVICE on the TEETH, and on the best Means of Preserving, Recovering, and, when lost, Restoring them. 3d edition, price 1s.

"This is a valuable little work, and should lie upon every destingtible." Methods. dressing lable."—Metropolitan.

"We hope it will find its way not only to every lady's toilettetable, but into families of all classes."—Court Magazine.

"It contains more real practical information than many volumes."—Standard.

Reushaw and Rush, Strand; and to be had of all Booksellers.

New Work by the Author of "Durnley," &c.

Just published by Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street,
In 2 vols, small 8to, price 18.

THE STRING of PEARLS.

By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.
"Rich in fancy, telling their story with great animation, these volumes deserve warm commendation."—Literary Gazette.
"Possessing all the attraction of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments."—Morning Post.

II.

II. Companion to the Italian Novelists, &c. The Spanish Novelists. By Thomas Roscoe,

A Bo Spaniss and Customar Bayes and Adventure, illustrating the Manners and Customs, at different Periods of Spanish history. Complete in 3 vols. handsomely bound in cloth, price 27s.

"As Spanish stories surpass all others in fertility of incident, perpetual bustle, intrigue, and intricacy of plot, the present work caunot fall to become a favoratie with our fair readers."—Sun.

Geraldine Hamilton. A Tale. 2 vols.
"The noble authoress has selected a touching theme, and treated it with all the deleasy and tact belonging to the most high-minded of her ser."—Morning Post.

Zohrab, the Hostage.

By the Author of "Hajji Baba." 8 vols.

"Superior to any work descriptive of oriental life."—Atlas.

"Novels of this stamp and character are valuable additions to literature."—Frastr's Mag. Nov.

And on Tuesday next, in 8 vols.

Otterbourne; or, the Early Days of Hotspur.

By the Author of "Derwentwater."

Also just ready, in 8 vols.

The Buccaneer. A Story of the Protectorate.

A Story of the Protectorate.

New Part of Encyclopadia Metropolitana.
Price 11. 1s. Part XXXV.

ENCYCLOP & DIA METROPOLITATANA; or, Universal Dictionary of Knowledge, on an original Plan, comprising the two-fold advantage of a Philosophical and an Alphabetical Arrangement.

Conducted by the Rev. EDWARDS MEDLEY,
With the assistance of many of the most distinguished Literary and Scientific Men of the British dominions, whose names are in this Part the following subjects are completed, viz.:—Painting, Meteorology, and Commerce; it includes also nearly the whole of the article Music, and brings down History to Richard the First, as regards England; and France, Germany, and Italy, to the end of the 18th Century. The Lexicon Department is brought down to the end of the Letter O.

 Nearly three-fourths of this important Work are now before the Public.

The following Volumes complete their respective subjects, and

The following Volumes complete their respective subjects, and are done up thus for the convenience of those who give preference to this mode of publication:— Pure Sciences, 1 vol. price 21. 2s.

Mixed Sciences, 2 volumes, price together.

History and Biography, 2 vols. price together,

Miscellaneous and Lexicographical, 9 vols.

price 31. 2s. and 11. 18s. each vol.

This great national Work is also published in Monthly Parts,

London: Printed for Bail 76. each.
London: Printed for Bail 76. each.
London: Printed for Bail 76. each.
vington; J. Duncan; B. Fellower, Suttabynd Co., E. Hodgson; J. Dowding: H. C. Hodgson;
J. Bowling: H. C. Hodgson;
W. Mason; F. C. Westpey Jam Richardson; J. Bohn; T. Tellowar; J. Bohn; H. Dison; and J. Bryant; and for J. Parker,
Oxford; and J. and J. Deighton, Cambridge

New and Cheap Edition, price Six Shillings.

Complete in 1 vol. small 3vo. neatly bound and embellished, price 6s. with a New Introduction and Notes by the Author,

A W R I E T O D D;

or, the Settlers in the Woods.
By JOHN GALT, Esq.
Author of the "Ayrshire Legatees," &c. forming the glat Vol. of the "Standard Novels."

The next Vol. (to appear Dec. 1) will contain Mr. Godwin's popular Story of Fleetwood.

With a New Introduction by the Author.

Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street (late Colburn and Bentley).

Washington Irving's New Sketch-Book.

Second and cheaper edition, in 2 vols. post 8vo. 10s.

THE ALHAMBRA.

By GEOFFRY CRAYON,
Author of the "Sketch-Book," "Tales of a Traveller," &c.

Contents.

| The Moor's Legacy | The Rose of the Alhambra, or the Page and the Ger-Fal-Interior of the Alhambra
The Author's Chamber
Inhabitants of the Alhambra
The Alhambra by Moonlight
The Tower of Comares
The Court of Lions
Prince Ahmed al Kamel, or the Mahamed Abou Alahmar
Published by Collars by Published by Moonlight
The Two Discreet Statues
The Two Discreet Statues
Published by Collars by Published By Moonlight
The Two Discreet Statues
Published by Collars by Published By Moonlight New Busington Street

Published for H. Colburn, by R. Bentley, New Burlington Street.

Simeon's Have Homiletice.

THE ENTIRE WORKS of the Rev. CHARLES SIMEON, M.A. Senior Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, under the general title of HORE HOMILETIC'E.

The Work wile different titles of "Helps to Composition," the contained of the contained of the composition, of the work wile different titles of "Helps to Composition," and the "Appendix to the Hore."

A considerable quantity of new matter will be introduced; and the whole will be now digested into one continued series, forming a Commentary upon every Book of the Holy Scripture, from Genesis to Revealation.

The Work will consist of twenty-one vols. octavo, and will be delivered in four portions—one of six vols. and three of five, at 10s, per vol.

The first six vols. containing Genesis to the Psalms, are now early for delivery.

The first six vols. containing Genesis to the second portion, consisting of vols. 7 to 11, (Proverbs to Matthew inclusive), will be ready next week.

The third portion is in a state of great forwardness; and the whole will be completed without delty.

Coplous Indexes will be given, applicable to every part of the Work, preparing by the five. Thomas Hartwell Horne, B.D.

Specimens of the Work and Prospectures may be had on antication.

application.

London: Printed for Holdsworth and Ball,
18, St. Paul's Churchyard.

HE WORKS of CHATEAUBRIAND;

1. The Spirit of Christianity, 3 vols. 8vo. 21s.

1. The Spirit of Chinasana, Ditto, French, 18s.

"The greatest work of this writer is his Spirit of Christianity; a work of consummate ability and splendid eloquence, in which he has enlisted in the cause of religion all the treasures of knowledge, and all the experience of ages."—Blackwood's Magazine, 2. Travels in Italy and America, 2 vols. 18s.

"We recognise in these Travels, the elegant and roman author of Atala—his fervid imagination and vivid description author of Atala—his revial imagination and vivid descriptions.

3. Celluta, or the Natchez; an Indian Tale.

3 vols. small 8vo. 34t. French, 18t.

"There are access and postraits in this romance which the pencil of genius has exquisitely touched, and which will insure it fame and favour of no trivial description."—Litterary Chronicle.

Fublished for H. Colburn by R. Bentley, New Burlington Street.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

On the 1st of Dec. price &s. uniform with Byron, &c. PLENDID VILLAGE, CORN - LAW
RHYMER, EXILE, BOTHWELL, SPIRITS and MEN,
WHARNCLIFFE, and other Poems.

"This work contains more correct versification than could be distilled from all the volumes of all the prodigles that ever were brought out."—Altheratm.

"A poet in some respects superior to Burns."—Morning Chronicle.

e. Is not the Corn Law Rhymer already a king?"—Edinburgh

"One of the most noble efforts of genius which has adorned an age distinguished for high literary attainments."—New Monthly Magazine.

sugatine.

1 In his feeling for natural beauty, and an exquisite power of investing those feelings in words, can constitute a poet, he is one, in the best and purest acceptation of the word."—Literary Gazette.

Almanac for 1833.
On the 20th of November will be published, price 2s. 6d.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S ALMANAC; or. THE ENGLISHMAN'S ALMANAC; or, Daily Calendar of General Information for the United Kingdom for the Year 1183, contains Tables shewing the State of the Population of Great Britain for 21 Years, including its Comparative Amount at certain intervals; the number of Births, Marriages, and Deaths; the number of Persons committed on Criminal Charges, and of those who were either not Prosecuted, or were Tried, or who were Acquitted or found Guilty, with an Account of the various Penantics inflicted. The List of Reform Act, is digested in a manner so as to form a convenient source of reference respecting all the important changes effected by that Measure. Amongst the articles of a miscellaneous nature will be found several Tables, entirely new, exhibiting the nature and extent of the Commerce of this Country with Forreigners, most of them being documents of permanent value.
Nothing, however, has been done to impair the character of this generally sought for in such a publication.

Printed for the Company of Stationers, and sold by George Greenhill, at their Hall, in Ludgate Street.

B The usual variety of Almanaca will be published at the same time.

Almanac for 1883.
On the 20th of November will be published, price 2s. 6d.

THE TRADESMAN'S and MECHANIC'S THE TRADESMAN'S and MECHANIC'S ALMANAC for the Year 1823, is occupied, to a considerable extent, in exhibiting the condition of the Industrious Population of this foountry, in respect of their Numbers, and the Places in the Place in the Pl

In the month of December will positively be published, illustrated with a New Portrait, engraved by Lupton, from the original in the Bodleian at Oxford, 6 vols. 8vo. uniform with Gifford's Massinger and Ben Josson,

THE PLAYS and POEMS of SHIRLEY. now first collected and chronologically arranged, and the Text carefully collated and restored. With occasional Notes, Biographical and Critical,
By WILLIAM GIFFORD, Esq.
To which is prefixed, some Account of the Life of Shirley and his Writings,
By the Rev. ALEXANDER DYCE.
John Murray, Albemarle Street.

ROMANCE in IRELAND: the Siege of 11,

The Geology of Scripture; in which the unering Truth of the Mosalc Narrative is exhibited, and fully proved by the distinct corroboration of Physical Facts on every part of the Earth's Surface. By George Fairholme, Esq. 1 vol. 8vo. Plates, 14s.

Magna est veritas, et prævalebit.

James Ridgway, Piccadiliy; and through every Bookseller.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopedia.
In monthly volumes, small 8vo. 6s. in cloth.
On Dec. i, forming Vol. 37 of the above, Vol. III. of
I S T O R Y of E N G L A N D.
By the late SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.

Sy the late Old Values 2 and Section 2 in American Spain and Portugal, Vol. V. and last.

Naval History of England, by R. Southey, Vol. I.

Treatise on Astronomy, by Sir John Herschel.

Treatise on Heat, and its Applications. By Dr. Lardner.

History of Ireland, by Thomas Moore, Vol. I.

London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

In the month of December will be published, in crown 8ve.
uniform with Bitson, Ellis, &c.

HRISTMAS CAROLS; Ancient and Modern; including the most Popular in the West of England, and the Airs to which they are sung. Also, Specimens of French Provincial Carols. With an Introduction, and Notes,
By WILLIAM SANDYS, F.A.S.

Lately published, with an Introduction by the same Author. Specimens of Macaronic Poetry.

Printed for Richard Beckley, 49, Piccadilly; and sold by Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Hall Court.

Early in December will be published,
OOD'S COMIC ANNUAL for 1833.
Charles Tilt, 86, Fleet Street.

New editions of Hood's Comic Annuals for Hood's Whims and Oddities, a new edition. The Two Volumes now printed in One, uniform with the Comic Annual, price 12.

Nearly ready for publication,

POBERT HALL'S WORKS. The concluding Volume, which has been unavoidably delayed, in consequence of the lamented death of Sir James Mackintosh, will be published early in December.

Memoirs of the Life of Mr. Hall, including several of his Letters not yet published. By Dr. Gregory.

Observations on Mr. Hall's Character as a Preacher. By the Teenty-one Sermons, preached by Mr. Hall on various occasions, and communicated by Friends who were in the habit of taking down his public discourses.

A copious general Index of the various subjects treated of in the entire Works.

A List of Subscribers.

A beautifully engraved Portrait of Mr. Hall, by W. Finden, from a Drawing by Brauwhite.

Horæ Otiosæ; or, Thoughts, Maxims, and Opinions.

Le jugement est un outil à tous sujets, et se méle par tout."...

Montaiene. Contents.

Part I. On Character
II. On Mind, Studies, and Intellectual Habits
III. On Life, Men, and Manners
IV. On Happiness
V. On Fancy and Imagination
VI. On Authors, Style, and
VI. On Mathematical Matter Style, and VI. On Stocker and Poverty
XI. On Miscellaneous
Points in Morals
XII. On Studies and Poverty
XII. On Subjects connected with Religion.

Pastor Oberlin.

The Fourth edition of Memoirs of John Frederic Oberlin, Pastor of Waldbach, in the Ban de la Roche. Compiled from authento Sources, chiefly in French and German. With a Portrait and a highly finished Vignette. London: Printing for Holdsworth and Ball, 18, St. Paul's Churchyard.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTR OPPICE, 7. Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand and 18, Scale Bridge, Strand and 18, Strand Street; add also by J. Chappell, 28, Royal Scales S. Mariborogh, Aw Maria Lane, Ludgate Mariborogh, Aw Maria Lane, Ludgate Mariborogh, Aw Maria Long, Ludgate Mr., Edinburgh: Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Alkinstand Co. Glasgow; and J. Cumming, Dublin.— Agent for America, O. Rich, 12, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 38, Castle Street, Leicester Square-

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 827.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

The Buccaneer; a Tale. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Bentley.

HISTORIC fiction is the most indigenous of literary tastes - the first and the most constantly preserved shape taken by composition. From the days of Homer down to the present, we have ever loved to have the illustrious dead brought again before us by the vivifying power of the imagination. With us it has been a peculiarly national predilection. The ballad, which is essentially our English school of poetry, has chiefly chosen historical subjects witness the popular ones of "Chevy Chase,"
"Robin Hood," and the "Brave Lord Willoughby." The drama succeeded to the ballad; and Shakespeare owes his fame not only to his extraordinary genius, but also to the delight taken in his scenes once still more actively represented on the great stage of existence. grant that the antiquary finds much to rectify that Richard II. certainly had no Queen Anne, of whom to take a pathetic farewell, &c.: but still the outline and the details were intensely English - the nation recognised its feelings and its characteristics, and took the delight we all take in a personal resemblance. A singular interregnum now took place in our literature; the past was for a while forgottenthe past, which we hold does so much to elevate and to beautify; and to this neglect we attribute the unpoetical tone, and the want of the imaginative and high branches of composition, during the reign of Anne and the first two Georges. But the spirit was only slumbering over the dim waters of the past, and many concurring circumstances were preparing its re-The exquisite acting of Garrick again made the noble personifications of Shakespeare familiar. Chatterton's forgeries and fate, and Percy's charming relics, all prepared the way for the great revolution in taste about to ensue. The first adventurers had little merit and much luck: the historic novel made its appearance, and was rewarded with instant popularity; though, like the very old monastic and rhyming chronicles, nothing could well be worse than these productions were, both in taste and in execution. To name two peculiarly successful instances, could there be more wretched trash than Miss Lee's Recess, or Clara Reeve's Old English Baron? Improbable in plot, incorrect in detail, bad in style, and utterly deficient in character, nothing could be more calculated to give false impressions, and limit their attraction to a foolish story. In the Recess, especially, there is committed, in our opinion, the novelist's gravest fault - a thoughtless vilifying of an eminent individual, without sufficient historical ground: we allude to the character of Queen Elizabeth. Yet even the success. of such works proves how strong was the English taste for drawing our materials from history. A period followed of ghosts and dungeons, heroines and harps, outrageous crime, or equally outrageous virtue; when the destroyer There was an atmosphere of silence, not of purer happiness! My father's house! The arose in the shape of Sir Walter Scott, and repose, within the apartment, at once awful fairly cleared out the Domdaniel caves of literature, never again to be filled with vain delusions and false images, while

"One universal darkness covered all."

We now expect from historic fictions accurate pictures of manners and customs; we look to pleasantly increasing our knowledge of the time, and demand truth as the foundation of any known personage introduced. Of late, faults of another extreme than the former errors have prevailed, viz. writing has been overlaid by reading; the book has been filled with antiquarian details, the hero has been lost in his armour, and the heroine merged in her velvet and embroidery. Attraction gave way to accuracy; they treated the story as the young painter of old did his Helen; and we might address them in the words of Apelles, "Ne pou-

The work now before us belongs to the historic school; but it has that talent which bestows its own attraction on whatever subject its peculiar taste may select. The past can only be reanimated by present feeling, and the mind of the writer must bestow its own originality. There are two principal characteristics belonging to this narrative; first, the great dramatic skill evinced in the progress and effect of the principal scenes; and, secondly, the delicate yet deep tone of feminine feeling running through the whole. Men and women are entirely opposed in their perceptions; both may arrive at the truth, but both will arrive by different roads; both will feel, but a man's feeling more approximates to passion—that of a woman to sentiment. Like all general rules, this, of course, admits of exceptions; still it is the general rule, and peculiarly illustrated by these volumes. There is one character in the Buccaneer which appears to us equally beautiful and original: we allude to the little puritan Barbara Iverk; it is something like Newton's Dutch Girl-a creature that must perforce be good, guileless, and affectionate; touched with the most gentle and subdued colours, destined for a character conceived in the very poetry of prose, if we may so use the expression. We have but one fault to find with this exquisite delineation - that we can give no idea of it in our limits; the sweet picture must be seen as a whole: still we are at no loss for extracts; witness the following death-scene:

" Hearth, and heart, and home content;"

" The brow of Lady Cecil was calm, smooth, and unclouded, white as alabaster, and rendered still more beautiful by the few tresses of pale auburn hair that escaped from under the headtire. The features were of a noble yet softened character, although painfully emaciated; and not a shadow of colour tinged her upturned lip. Her sleep, though occasionally sound, was restless, and the long shadowy fingers that lay on the embroidered coverlet, were now and for ever, how my heart clings—I fear, sinfully then stirred, as if by bodily or mental suffering. clings, to the remembrance of our earlier and and oppressive.

Lady Cecil had existed for some days in a state of frightful delirium, and, during that time, her ravings had been so loud and con-tinued, that her present repose was elysium to those who loved her. Constance bent her knees, and prayed in silence, long and fervently, for support. Sir Robert, leaning back in the richly cushioned chair, covered his face with his hands, withdrawing them only when the sleeper groaned or breathed more heavily. At length both felt as if death had indeed entered the chamber, so motionless lay the object of their love: they continued gazing from each other to the couch, until the misty light of morning streamed coldly through the open shutters.

Another hour of sad watching passed, and, with a long and deeply drawn sigh, the sufferer opened her eyes: they were no longer wild and wandering, but rested with calm intelligence on her husband and her child. ' It is long since I have seen you, except in strange dreams,' she said, or rather murmured; ' and now I shall be with you but for a very little time!' Constance put to her lips a silver cup containing some refreshment, while Sir Robert supported her head on his arm. 'Call no one in. Constance - Cecil - my moments now are numbered: draw back the curtains, that I may once more look upon the light of morning! Constance obeyed; and the full heams of day entered the room. 'How beautiful! how glorious!' repeated the dying woman, as her sight drank in the reviving light: 'it heralds me to immortality, where there is no darkness—no disappointment—no evil! How pale are the rays of that lamp, Cecil! How feeble man's inventions, contrasted with the works of the Almighty! Constance rose to extinguish it. Let it be,' she continued, feebly; 'let it be, dearest; it has illumined my last night, and we will expire together.' The affectionate daughter turned away to hide her tears; but when did the emotion of a beloved child escape a mother's notice? 'Alas, my noble Constance weeping! I thought she, at all events, would have spared me this trial: leave us for a few moments; let me not see you weep, Constance-let me not see it - tears enough have fallen in these halls; — do not mourn, my child, that your mother will find rest at last. Lady Cecil had much to say to her husband during the remaining moments of her existence; but her breathing became so feeble, that he was obliged to lean over the couch to catch her words. 'We part, my own and only beloved husband, for ever in this world; fain would I linger yet a little, to recount how much I have loved you - in our more humble state - in this, oh! how falsely termed our prosperity! My heart has shared your feelings. In our late bitter trials, more than half my grief was, that you should suffer. Oh, Robert! Robert! now, when I am about to leave you and all under whose shadow we first met! The stream, where you and Herbert—wild, but affectionate brother! Oh, Robert, do not blame me, nor start so at his name; his only fault was his devotion to a most kind master! but who that lived under the gentle influence of Charles Stuart's virtues could have been aught but devoted? And vet what deadly feuds came forth hope of day! Your pardon, lady; but is it not from this affection! Alas! his rich heritage has brought no blessing with it. I never could look upon these broad lands as ours. Would that his child had lived, and then—but they are all gone now - all gone! Alas! what had we to do with courts, or courts with us? Our domestic comforts have been blighted - our hearth left desolate - the children for whom you toiled, and hoped, and planned, have been removed from us—nipped in the bud or the first blossoming! And oh, Cecil! take the words of a dying woman to heart, when she tells you, that you will go down childless to your grave, if you do not absolve our beloved Constance from her promise to him whom she can neither respect or love. She will complete the contract, though it should be her deathwarrant, rather than let it be said a daughter of the house of Cecil acted dishonourably - she of the house of Cecil acted disnonourany—will complete it, Robert—she will complete it, Robert—she will complete it — and then die.' Lady Cecil, overcome by duced him to pause at the top of Greenwich emotion and exertion, fell back fainting and Hill, and look around on the richness and beauty of the prospect. Flowing to the right, Constance entered unbidden, but most welcome. She knelt by her mother's side, and took the hand so feebly but affectionately extended towards her. The fearful change that had occurred during her short absence was but too visible. The breath that touched her cheek was cold as the morning mist. The sufferer would have folded her hands in prayer, but the strength had departed before the spirit was the whole world, rendered us homage and gone. Constance, seeing that the fine expression of life with which her upturned eyes had glittered was gradually passing away, clasped her mother's hands within her own: suddenly they struggled for freedom, and as her eye followed the pointing of her parent's finger, she saw the lamp's last beam flicker for a moment, and then expire !- Her mother, too, was dead! It is ill to break upon the solitude of the dying, though it is good to enter into the solemn temple of death: it is a sad but a useful lesson to lift the pall; to raise the coffin-lid; to gaze upon all we loved, upon all that was bright, and pure, and beautiful, changing with a slow but certain change to decay and corruption. The most careless cannot move along the chamber of death without being affected by the awful presence of the King of Terrors. The holy quiet that ought to characterise a funeral procession, is too frequently destroyed by the empty pomp and heartlessness which attend it; but in the death chamber there is nothing of this; the very atmosphere seems impregnated with the stillness of the time when there was no life in the broad earth, and when only 'God moved on the face of the waters.' Our breath comes slowly and heavily to our lips, and we murmur forth our words as if the spirit watched to record them'in the unchanging book of immortality."

Milton is introduced in a most touching manner; but we can only give two or three brief passages:

"' How beautiful!' said your sister, as she showered on the now sleeping earth. 'Yes, beautiful!' repeated Milton; and his voice so musical, yet melancholy, thrilled to my inmost handed a rude spy-glass from one to another, noble oak where the ring-doves built, and soul. 'Beautiful!' he said again, as if the word was pleasant in his ears; 'and yet the time is coming fast when I shall behold that beauty no more; when I shall be more humbled than the poor worms upon which I may now heedlessly tread: they creep, but see; I shall be a thing of darkness in the midst of light irrevocably dark !-total eclipse !-without the and there are few who would engage in a quarstrange, that life's chiefest blessing should be enthroned in such a tender ball, when feeling is diffused all over us?' 'The maker must be the best judge,' replied your sister. 'Tis true,' he said; 'and the same hand that wounds can heal. I will not sorrow, if I can refrain from grief, though it is hard to bear; yet often, when I look upon my daughters, I think how sad 'twill be when I no more can trace their change of form and feature. And this deep affliction comes upon me in my manhood's prime. Life in captivity-all around me grows darker each fair day I live. A bunch of violets was given me this morning; their fragrance was delicious; yet I could not discern the little yellow germ that I knew dwelt within their dark blue petals, and I put them from me because I could not see as well as smell. 'Twas foolish, but 'twas natural."

the broad and glorious Thames turned its liquid mirror to the skies, and reflected every passing cloud upon its translucent bosom. But our noble river had more than clouds to shadow it; the treasures of the universe floated for us upon its wave-the spoils of conquered and humbled nations left their track along its shores; Spain, France, and either India paid us tribute; and proud was our own father Thames to bear that homage and that tri-bute to his favoured city. Well might the great cupola of St. Paul erect its heavy but majestic head, and peer forth through the first heams of day upon the rich and blessed river! Robin felt his heart swell within his bosom when he looked down upon the waters and the land of which every Englishman is so justly proud. 'It is my own country!' was his emphatic ejaculation, as he gazed on this picture of English wealth and English cultivation.

The little village of Greenwich, straggling at the foot of the hill, approaching closely to the palace, and then wandering along the great Dover and London road, formed a more pleasant object than it does now that it has been magnified into a great and populous town. Many wooden cottages nested under the parkwalls, and sent their smoke curling through the foliage of the fine trees that formed a bold, rich back-ground. The palace, extending its squares and courts along the river's brink, gave an air of dignity to the whole scence; while the tinkling music of the sheep-bells, echoing from the heath, lent to it a soft and harmonising effect. On the river, in the extreme distance, an English vessel was towing up some of the Spanish prizes which the gallant Blake had forwarded to their future home. They trailed the water heavily and gloomily, like captives as they were; and their dismantled and battered aspect afforded ample subject for "'How beautiful!' said your sister, as she discourse to a group of old sailors, who, though raised her eyes to the glorious heavens, spark-not yet possessed of their palace-hospital, found

" And told how ships were won."

The character of Cromwell is so well summed up, that we must find room for it.

"There are two things that to a marvellous degree bring people under subjection — moral and corporeal fear. The most dissolute are held in restraint by the influence of moral worth, rel if they were certain that defeat or death would be the consequence. Cromwell obtained, and we may add, maintained his ascendency over the people of England, by his carnest and continually directed efforts towards these two important ends. His court was a rare example of irreproachable conduct, from which all debauchery and immorality were banished; while such was his deep and intimate, though mysterious acquaintance with every occurrence throughout the commonwealth, its subjects had the certainty of knowing that, sooner or later, whatever crimes they committed would of a surety reach the ear of the protector. His natural abilities must always have been of the highest order, though in the early part of his career he discovered none of those extraordinary talents that afterwards gained him so much applause, and worked so upon the affections of the hearers and standers-by. His mind may be compared to one of those valuable manuscripts that had long been rolled up and kept hidden from vulgar eyes, but which exhibits some new proof of wisdom at each unfolding. It has been well said by a philosopher, whose equal the world has not known since his day, ' that a place sheweth the man.' Of a certainty Cromwell had no sooner possessed the opportunity so to do, than he shewed to the whole world that he was destined to govern. 'Some men achieve greatness, some men are born to greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them.' With Cromwell greatness was achieved. He was the architect of his own fortunes, owing little to what is called 'chance,' less to patronage, and still less to crime, if we except the one sad blot upon the page of his own history, as connected with that of his country. There appears in his character but a small portion of that which is evil, blended with much that is undoubtedly good. Although his public speeches were, for the most part, ambiguous - leaving others to pick out his meaning or more frequently still, having no meaning to pick out, being words, words, words - strung of mouldy sentences, scriptural phrases, foolish exclamations, and such-like; yet when necessary, he shewed that he could sufficiently command his style, delivering himself with so much energy, pith, propriety, and strength of expression, that it was commonly said of him under such circumstances, every word he spoke was a thing.' But the strongest indication of his vast abilities was, the extraordinary tact with which he entered into, dissected, and sorutinised the nature of human kind. No man ever dived into the manners and minds of those around him with greater penetration, or more rapidly discovered their natural talents and tempers. If he chanced to hear of a person fit for his purpose, whether as a minister, a soldier, an artisan, a preacher, or a spy, no matter how previously obscure, he sent for him forthwith, and employed him in the way in which he could be made most useful, and answer best the purpose of his employer. Upon this most admirable system (s system in which, unhappily, he has had but few imitators among modern statesmen,) depended in a great degree his success. His devotion has been sneered at; but it has never been proved to have been insincere. With how much more shew of justice may we consider it to have been founded upon a solid and upright | scarcely the right to enter. Alas! alas! the | anxiety, the ravages of invading troops, the basis, when we recollect that his whole outward deportment spoke its truth! Those who decry him as a fanatic, ought to bethink themselves that religion was the chivalry of the age in which he lived. Had Cromwell been born a few centuries earlier, he would have headed the crusades, with as much bravery, and far better results than our noble-hearted, but wrongheaded Coeur de Lion. It was no great com-pliment that was passed on him by the French minister, when he called the protector 'the first captain of the age. His courage and conduct in the field were undoubtedly admirable : he had a dignity of soul which the greatest dangers and difficulties rather animated than discouraged, and his discipline and government of the army, in all respects, was the wonder of the world. It was no diminution of this part of his character, that he was wary in his conduct, and that, after he was declared protector, he wore a coat of mail concealed beneath his dress. Less caution than he made use of, in the place he held, and surrounded as he was by secret and open enemies, would have deserved the name of negligence. As to his political sincerity, which many think had nothing to do with his religious opinions, he was, to the full, as honest as the first or second Charles. Of a truth, that same sincerity, it would appear, is no kingly virtue! Cromwell loved iustice as he loved his own life, and wherever he was compelled to be arbitrary, it was only where his authority was controverted, which, as things then were, it was not only right to establish for his own sake, but for the peace and security of the country over whose proud destinies he had been called to govern. The dignity of the crown,' to quote his own words, was upon the account of the nation, of which the king was only the representative head, and therefore, the nation being still the same, he would have the same respect paid to his ministers as if he had been a king.' England ought to write the name of Cromwell in letters of gold, when she remembers that, within a space of four or five years, he avenged all the insults that had been lavishly flung upon her by every country in Europe throughout a long, disastrous, and most perplexing civil war. Glo-riously did he retrieve the credit that had been mouldering and decaying during two weak and discreditable reigns of nearly fifty years' continuance gloriously did he establish and extend his country's authority and influence in remote nations — gloriously acquire the real mastery of the British Channel—gloriously send forth fleets that went and conquered, and never sullied the union flag by an act of dishonour or dissimulation. Not a single Briton, during the protectorate, but could demand and receive either reparation or revenge for injury, whether it came from France, from Spain, from any open foe or treacherous ally; not an oppressed foreigner claimed his protection but it was immediately and effectually granted. Were things to be compared to this in the reign of either Charles? England may blush at the remembrance of the insults she sustained during the reigns of the first most amiable, yet most weak -of the second most admired, yet most contemptible-of these legal kings. What must she think of the treatment of the elector palatine, though he was son-in-law to King James? And let her ask herself how the Duke of Rohan was assisted in the Protestant war at Rochelle, notwithstanding the solemn engagement of King Charles under his own hand!

page of history is but a sad one; and the Stuarts and the Cromwells, the roundheads and the cavaliers, the pennons and the drums, are but part and parcel of the same dust—the dust we, who are made of dust animated for a time by a living spirit, now tread upon! Their words, that wrestled with the winds and mounted on the air, have left no trace along that air whereon they sported :-the clouds in all their beauty cap our isle with their magnificence, as in those by-gone days; the rivers are as blue, the seas as salt; the flowers, those sweet things! remain fresh within our fields, as when God called them into existence in Paradise, and are bright as ever. But the change is over us, as it has been over them: we, too, are passing. O England! what should this teach? Even three things-wisdom, justice, and mercy. Wisdom to watch ourselves, and then our rulers, so that we neither do nor suffer wrong; justice to the memory of the mighty dead, whether born to thrones or footstools; mercy, inasmuch as we shall deeply need it from our successors."

We have intentionally abstained from the most stirring scenes-the reader will be sufficiently attracted towards them by the quick interest of the story - and have preferred such quotations as shew either the peculiar thought or taste of the writer, and whose merits might scarce be dwelt upon in the excitement of following a narrative full of spirit. Among the characters we must mention with especial praise the bold Buccaneer himself, so beautifully drawn towards good by his strong and purifying affection for his child. Robin Hays, the Lady Frances Cromwell, the very beau ideal of a coquette, and placed in such contrast with the noble Constance, and the darker-tinted and more passionate Zillah, Springall the young sailor, and the rough trooper Roupall, are all full of individuality. We must again say how well the Buccaneer is calculated for dramatic effect. The scene in the chapel, that of the arrest, and those of the concluding chapters, would tell well on the stage; so would most of the characters-that, perhaps, of Robin Hays excepted, for natural and true as is Barbara's love, it would be difficult to give it theatrical development. We now conclude, sincerely congratulating Mrs. Hall on the industry (for industrious she must have been to make her so completely acquainted with the period), the interest, and the talent displayed in the Buccaneer.

The Year of Liberation: a Journal of the Defence of Hamburgh against the French Army under Marshal Davoust, in 1813; with Sketches of the Battles of Lutzen, Bautsen, &c. &c. 2 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Duncan.

Wr. could hardly have supposed that any sketch of the circumstances and events of which these volumes treat could have interested us so much as they have done; but the talents of the writer, whoever he may be, have invested his Journal with such vivacity, that we read its most trivial details with a degree of pleasure we did not anticipate for its more important matter, and certainly rather referable to the mode of treatment than to the subject. Yet the narrative, so ably written, is not without its own intrinsic value. It appears to be a close and faithful account of what the author himself witnessed during a short residence in Germany, at a period when the destinies of Europe hung upon the turn of a day. At a But we are treading too fearlessly upon ground moment when war is again threatened, it is front of the fatal platoon, when suddenly the sa which, in our humble capacity, we have well to recall its evils to memory — the public report of musketry was heard outside the ram-universal waste of property, and the universal wretchedness spread over private life, - all vividly sketched in these pages. The gallantry of the citizens of Hamburgh also deserved the record it has here received; and we are led to fancy what Englishmen would do in a similar emergency. Would not there be the same precipitation in throwing off the voke? the same great awkwardness and blundering in the use of new expedients against an oppressor? and the same honourable determination to resist the imposition of chains and slavery? moral of the work, thus applied, is valuable to every nation which has liberties to defend or enemies to encounter; and England, which is but a larger Hamburgh, may take a lesson, in case of need, from the simple fortitude displayed by these honest German traders.

The volumes are further recommended by sketches of Napoleon and his battles, and of the scenery and habits of the country, together with some translations of German poems, &c.; the whole forming a very agreeable narrative. We have only to observe, that the author is eminently anti-Buonaparte, anti-French, and anti-revolutionary, before we begin by quoting the defeat of General Morand, one of the most brilliant affairs of the time. " Morand, the commander of the division. was a fierce ruffian of the revolutionary school; and no man could have been more fitted to clip the wings of rash patriotism. He had been left with the remnant of the French garrisons in Pomerania, from which, on the evacuation of Berlin, he had moved, carrying the French civil establishments with him, and determined to revenge himself wherever he could. His first object was Hamburg, rich, helpless, and patriotic, to the full measure of high treason. He had three thousand men, and eighteen pieces of cannon, which would have robbed and slaughtered to the most complete extent. On his advance, too, he had met the expelled garrison and douaniers; and with this reinforcement to his strength, and probably to his indignation (for a Frenchman stripped of his office is as little likely as any individual on earth to bury his sorrows in his bosom), Morand hurried on to chastise the contumacious territory. But he found an unexpected obstacle. The Danish government remembered that Altona was within sight of Hamburg, and that a French force was at all times a hazardous neighbour. Trifling and tardy as the Danish politics were, the government could not willingly see Hamburg in the hands of a French brigade. A message was accordingly sent to Morand, intimating that the city would be protected. He had then turned off to Lunenburg, blown in the gates, seized the principal inhabitants, and, without an hour's delay, ordered them to be brought before a military tribunal. The law of the drumhead is expeditious; those gentlemen were found guilty on the spot, and before set of sun they would have been where tyranny could touch them no more, but for the Frenchman's desire for a spectacle. They were ordered to be shot next day at noon, in the principal square, in the presence of the troops and people. Yet the man of blood is sometimes disappointed: and there are few instances of thwarted atrocity more striking than the fate of Morand. The next day all was anxiety and melancholy, of course, among the inhabitants; and the condemned, whose friends had in vain made the most strenuous applications to the Frenchman's mercy, were already ordered out to stand in front of the fatal platoon, when suddenly the on horseback to attend the execution, rode off to ascertain the cause. The scene of murder waited for the general's return, but he still delayed; the firing grew heavier, and in various directions. It was soon evident from its approach, and from the number of wounded who were continually dropping back into the streets, that the city was attacked in force by the allies. What must have been the feelings of the condemned men and their families, while the struggle was going on which to them made the difference between life and death! At last, an aide-de-camp rode in, crying out that the general had fallen, and ordering the last troops to move to the gates. The affair was now acknowledged 'to be serious;' and though the French officers ridiculed the idea of their being heaten by the 'ragamuffin Cossacks,' their soldiers took good care to prepare for all contingencies, by packing up all the plunder that they could carry. But it was too late; after a short and desperate conflict, the allies carried the gates; a hurrah, a rush of the French battalions back into the streets, and a crowd of Cossacks and Russian dragoons coming pellmell after them, and cutting them up in all quarters, fully explained the story. All was now triumph; the condemned were brought to their homes with acclamations, and Lunenburg was once more free and German.'

The Cossack commander and governor of more in our way, as it speaks of literature, amburgh was the gallant Tettenborn, who is which we like, and of smoking, which we hate. Hamburgh was the gallant Tettenborn, who is thus painted :-

"Tettenboin's own story is thoroughly continental; gallantry, good luck, adventure, promotion, and all of a rapidity that might move the bile of our tardy service. The peace principle is nearly the same every where, grumbling, ennui, and half-pay, in Germany, half paid; but in German war the Dalgetty prin-ciple carries all before it. Tettenborn, at the beginning of the year, was a simple half-pay captain in the Austrian service. Nothing was to be done there, for Austria had been so completely eviscerated by the French, in her last experiments in the field, that her policy was pacific per force. Tettenborn offered his sword. according to the custom of the country, to the Russian emperor, then rushing upon France with the impetus gained by a march of a thousand miles through the snow. A crowd of German officers had already done the same; but the demand was overmatched by the supply; and when Captain Tettenborn presented himself, even the emperor had nothing to offer him but a handful of Cossacks. Nothing could seem more unfortunate, nor be more lucky. Another hero, accustomed to the pomps of the regular cavalry, would have scoffed at the Bashkirs, torn up his commission, and finished his history by putting a pistol to his head. But Tettenborn was wiser; he took fortune in whatever shape she came, mounted his horse, determined to ride at every thing, fell on the French without ceremony, became a favourite of his Bashkirs, who found the productiveness of following a 'lucky officer,' and, from mastering their rugged souls, became a favourite of the emperor, who was, to the last, half a Tartar himself. The Cossack makes reconnoissances of two or three hundred miles ahead. On the news of the expulsion of Carra St. Cyr and his donaniers from Hamburg, Tettenborn was sent forward with his pulk as the advanced patrol of the grand army at Berlin! At Hamburg he was received with rapture, and at Hamburg he lived in the first style of the Dal-getties. The simple Austrian captain was sud-Morand and his staff, who were getting | the king of the whole senatorial territory. Thus exalted, he now loftily disdained to look like a Cossack: he had the handsomest coat, the handsomest horses, and kept the handsomest table that ever dazzled the republican eye of Hamburg."

We add a touch of military life.

"The continent is, after all, the place to see the high style of soldiership. An English general officer, with his aide-de-camp and couple of grooms, makes a most diminished figure beside your true continental brigadier, with his three or four britchskas, his crowd of aides-decamp, valets, and secretaries, and his half dozen led horses; and all those but a moderate provision for him. He lives by billet wherever he goes; all postmasters open their stables at his bidding; he feasts, and every body round him feasts, with no more care for the morrow than the fowls of the air; he is clothed, fed, and lodged, with no more trouble to himself than one of his own chargers; and when he rolls with his suite through one of the German cities, the thunder of his wheels over the aboriginal pavement prepares the world to expect an emperor."

We pass over the warlike details, which tell of the fatal results of the battle of Jena and death of Prince Louis, in 1806, of Napoleon's conduct at the battle of Lutzen, and of the bombardment of Hamburgh, &c., for a sketch

"It is (says the author) impossible to refuse the Germans all the praise due to good-nature, kindness of manner to strangers, and especially to general intelligence. Every one reads, almost every one writes, and altogether there is more of the active power of education visible in general society, than, perhaps, in any other country of the world. But they have two désagrémens, for nothing but the word can express the thing, too slight to be called vice, and too vexatious to be entitled to tolerance; which very considerably undo the spell of German society; and those are — smoking and stocking knitting. A few mornings since, I visited a man of letters, I found him in his study, entrenched up to the chin in books and papers, and surrounded with all the printed wisdom of his country, in bindings that had evidently known a good deal of the 'midnight lamp.' The nocturna versate manu, versate diurna, was in every thing. In short, all was as it ought to be in the sacellum of literature. The master of the shrine was a very intelligent person, I believe a very learned, and certainly a very industrious one; for in a list of his daily pursuits, which he shewed to me, there was scarcely an hour out of the twenty-four which had not its appropriate study. But the genius of tobaccosmoke was there, writing his death-warrant, as legibly as my learned friend ever wrote a line of high Dutch. His pipe was in his hand; his goblet of eau sucrè, its never-failing, and almost equally sickening companion, was beside him; and with a lack-lustre eye, and a cheek as yellow as the yellowest page he was poring over, was this able and valuable man sadly smoking himself into the other world. chamber, his books, his clothes, every thing about him, were tobacco; and I left the interview in sorrow, and half suffocated. Argument in this distemper is but loss of time. No logic can pierce the integument that smoking wraps round the brain. Nothing will ever be effectual, except a general fusillade of the cri-

too, is declared by the physicians to be actually one of the most efficient causes of the German tendency to diseases of the lungs. In point of expense, its waste is enormous. In Hamburg alone, 50,000 boxes of cigars have been consumed in a year; each box costing about 3/. sterling: 150,000l. puffed into the air! And it is to be remembered, that even this is but a part of the expense; the cigar adorning the lip only of the better order, and even among those, only of the young; the mature generally ab-juring this small vanity, and blowing away with the mighty meerschaum of their ancestors. This plague, like the Egyptian plague of frogs, is felt every where, and in every thing. poisons the streets, the clubs, and the coffee-houses; furniture, clothes, equipage, person, are redolent of the abomination. It makes even the dulness of the newspaper doubly narcotic; the napkin on the table tells instantly that native hands have been over it; every eatable and drinkable, all that can be seen, felt, heard, or understood, is saturated with tobacco; the very air we breathe is but a conveyance for this poison into the lungs; and every man, woman, and child, rapidly acquires the com-plexion of a boiled chicken. From the hour of their waking, if nine-tenths of the population can ever be said to awake at all, to the hour of their lying down, which in innumerable instances the peasantry do in their clothes, the pipe is never out of their mouths; one mighty fumigation reigns, and human nature is smokedried by tens of thousands of square miles. But if it be a crime to shorten life, or extinguish faculties, the authority of the chief German physiologists charges this custom with effecting both in a very remarkable degree. They compute, that of twenty deaths of men between eighteen and thirty five, ten originate in the waste of the constitution by smoking. universal weakness of the eyes, which makes the Germans par excellence a spectacled nation, is probably attributed to the same cause of general nervous debility. Tobacco burns out their blood, their teeth, their eyes, and their brains; turns their flesh into mummy, and their mind into metaphysics. The superior part of the creation, the ladies, do not often smoke; but then they have their scarcely less obnoxious indulgence—eternal stocking knit-ting. The needles are never out of their fin-gers. Every hour of the day is filled up with this work, as if the whole soul of the sex were made for nothing but stockings. Some 'Reformers' have attempted to reason down this infinitely peddling and graceless employment. They have argued, that it ought to be left to those who can do nothing better with their faculties or fingers; that the labour of the most industrious baroness is not worth twopence a-day; that the fabric, at the best, is abominable; and that the knitting of an arch-duchess would be spurned by her own footmen. But the reformers are routed by a countless majority. Through every corner of Germany, ninety-nine in a hundred of the sex, be their condition what it may, spend the chief part of their waking hours, and possibly of their sleeping ones, in making stockings. They are to be seen knitting in all times and seasons, 'from dewy morn to dusky eve,' from January to December. On they go, looping and twisting, with remorseless industry; and if they could take their knitting-needles with them to church, they would probably consider them highly advantageous associates to their piety. Hamburg he lived in the first style of the Dal-getties. The simple Austrian captain was sud-denly the governor, the commander-in-chief, cation of the continental soul. The propensity, females to look out of the window on all occasions, is vanquished by this master-passion; and the most showy promenador through a German city, will see whole dens full of women, machinelike, eternally twisting and looping, who no more think of glancing at his display than if they were so many spinning jennies. But the more dexterous sometimes contrive to reconcile the two enjoyments, and by the help of a mirror placed outside the window, which they call an espion, the fair knitter can reconnoitre the external world, luckily, without deducting a single moment from the grand business and pleasure of life. When, by any accident, the stocking is laid down, they seem the most distressed of beings. As this never happens but in compliment to the presence of some English stranger, it only increases the natural embarrassment of all parties. The fingers, unneedled as they are, are still in a sort of instinctive manipulation. The eye of the reluctant desourrée is dropped upon her pendant knitting case, as over the memorial of something ineffably dear; an eel stripped of its skin could not be more difficult to reconcile to the novelty of its circumstances; and the moment that the stranger takes his leave, the fair sufferer eagerly uncases her implements, and is in the full delight of looping and twisting again for the day.

Of Napoleon, an immortal name in history, we have sundry anecdotes. Take the following:-"At Dresden, while the allies were in the neighbourhood, he was up at day-break, toiling like a captain of engineers. While the staff were constructing a bridge in place of the one burnt by the Russians, he took his stand beside a building which had served for a depôt of ammunition. The Russian fire was drawn upon this point, and a shell had nearly closed the campaign; it burst over the spot where he stood, struck the side of the building, and dashed a large fragment of wood or stone at his feet. While all round him were alarmed at his hazard, he coolly turned the fragment over, and observed, 'a few inches nearer, and it would have done its business.'" night, by which we detect the writer to be a poet, though he has here chosen to be incognito.

"But night grows apace; the cathedral chimes toll duller than ever through the mist, like the bells over Lethe, a knell to the departing honours of the city, where they have jangled through so many hundreds of lazy years. But, 'Invida terra madescat.' What man can look upon the world kindly in a day like this, when the very air is saturated with the spleen? Let me turn to the moon. To see her on a night like this, in the lulling of the tempest, lifting up her horned front in troubled majesty, through piles of solemn vapour, that roll and swell round her in shapes and grandeurs innumerable and unspeakable, continents of cloud that look like the upbreaking of some superior world, is a noble exchange for the dripping earth below. Of all the idolatries that ever beguiled the imagination of man into substituting the things of the Divine hand for the great invisible King, the worship of Selene was the most imaginative. Waning as she is at this moment, what can be more lovely than to see her rising, like a spirit from the grave, from depths of darkness that seemed made to bury her for ever; then adding lustre to lustre, till she stands, like the risen spirit, clothed in her full light, the splendid denizen of the blue empire of suns and stars above? But no Italian moonlight for me - no sheets of unspeckled azure-no night, when all unstained,

The glowing planets roll,
And not a cloud disturbs the solemn pole.

Give me the night of clouds, and of clouds in their wildest commotion. Is it only in her rule over this turbulent royalty that the moon shews herself the true sovereign? Who can doubt that half her original honours, as Hecate, arose from her dominion over those 'wild creatures of the element?' She is the true light, limner, creator, of the great landscape, that reaches from one end of heaven to the other. What are the purple pavilions of the sunset, and the highways of pearl and diamond that lead to them, compared with the grey Mont-Blancs, and unfathomable valleys, and myriads of apparitions that I now see moving over them with pale and ominous banners, like a general insurrection of the tomb? Dian, Luna, Hecate, the Tergemina! is the true 'cloud compeller,' after all; the mother of shades; the mighty wizard, touching airy nothing into castles of ivory and pyramids of phosphor; brightening giddy vapour into 'shapes unutterable, nameless, dire,' phantom hosts, and superb monsters. At this moment she is flooding with sudden silver, right over Russia, the pinions of an eagle ninety degrees from point to point, with Sirius flashing like a burning diamond, for its eye, and a beak heavy with thunder."

We offer no example of the poetry in verse; but once more very cordially recommend these interesting and clever volumes to the general

Becket, an Historical Tragedy; the Men of England, an Ode; and other Poems. Moxon, 1832. pp. 206.

INTELLIGENT and well-informed, we yet think the talents of the writer now before us will scarcely receive their just appreciation from his present work. A long drama, destined for the closet, not the stage, is not a popular form for poetry; and, moreover, the scene is laid at that early period in history when our interest is but half awake.

Nevertheless, the author has displayed much ability in his treatment of the subject; a pure, We conclude with the picture of a gusty poetical vein, a cultivated judgment, and a ght, by which we detect the writer to be a refined taste, with considerable faults in the structure of his blank verse. We cannot quote so much as we wish, without occupying a larger space than we can spare, but select a few passages which are capable of separation from the dialogue. A papal bull is thus announced:

"Each English subject
Is loosed from his obedience—duty, oaths,
And loyal love, made sacrilege. No bell
Shall call the living to the house of prayer,
Nor grace the unsainted burial of the dead;
No babe shall be baptised; each holy office,
Each hallow'd thing, will fly the land (razed out
From Christendom), and to the rage of demons Leave it, and men accurst, the prey of demons."

Becket is characterised by Young Henry as "Liberally endow'd

By nature with most rarely-lavish'd gifts,
Had he been destin'd to a crown, he had Achieved a reign illustrious to all time
King Henry.
So did we rate him ever; for which cause
We placed him second only to the crown.
Young Henry.
A place too high, or low, for such a mind.
Fla'd to that second sphere in secular power,
His check'd ambition found another path;
Seeking to rule the liner world of men—
Their hopes, their will, their ignorance, their faith.
King Henry.
You paint the man too true.

You paint the man too true.

Geoffry (aside to De Barre).

Can Henry talk thusMy light and wilful brother? De Barre.

Peace, and listen!

Young Henry.

To embody such aspirings the fit means
Is Rome's soul-tyranny. Such was, then, the shape
To which occasion moulded his huge passions.

The boundless grasp of that untemporal sway, Which calls itself the master—not of a province, A kingdom, the whole earth—but bears a sceptre, Such is its boast, that reaches up to heaven And down to hell—he found so meetly match'd With his aspiring faculties, that at length 'Tis grown into that madness, he mistakes The daring wishes of his fiery soul For ordinances and oracles divine; And hence rebellion, perfidy, and blood, Are seemly in his eyes, and sanctified, So they but work his end."

The following is a fine thought :-Take comfort, madam.

Sir,—and so I shall:
Sir,—and so I shall:
Sir,—and so I shall:
Back from the tearless and indiguant queen,
To all the weeping helplessness of woman.
-You've done your thankless office, sir; and we Do thank you not. Leave us—with our affliction."

The smaller poems are very graceful; the author, we believe, the Rev. Mr. Cattermole, Secretary to the Royal Society of Literaturean ornament both to literature and his profession.

The Infant Annual; or, a Mother's Offering: principally intended for children from five to ten years of age. Edinburgh, 1833. Waugh and Innes; Dublin, Tims, Curry and Co.; London, Whittaker and Co.
This is a charming little book for the youngest of our readers; and for friends to give them in holyday or any other times. It is prettily embellished with nice juvenile subjects; and the best affections of the heart in children are likely to be awakened to virtue and deterred from vice by the well-written stories. Though not often our custom to quote from productions of this class, we will copy the "Angry Child" as a specimen, and for the sake of the anecdote on which it is founded.

" Little Harriet M- was between four and five years old; she was in many respects a very good little girl. She was obedient, very affectionate to her friends, and very obliging and kind; but the had a very violent temper. When any thing teased or provoked her, she would get into a perfect transport of fury, and tear and strike whatever was in her way. day her mamma was passing the nursery door, she heard a great noise within, and her little Harriet's voice speaking in a tone that made her sure she was bad; so she opened the door, and there she saw Harriet, with her little face swelled and distorted with rage, her curly hair all torn into disorder, while with feet and hands she was kicking and striking with all ber force at one of the servants, and crying out, 'I don't love you, Mary, I don't love you; I hate you.' She stopped when she saw her mamma. 'What is the meaning of all this?' said Mrs. M. to the servant. 'It is just this, ma'am,' said the servant, ' that Miss Harriet kept throwing water about the room, out of her little new jug; when I forbade her, she threw the water that was in the jug in my face, and when I attempted to take hold of her to carry her to you, as you desired, when she did wrong, she flew at me and struck me as you have seen.' Mrs. M. looked very grave, and lifting the sobbing Harriet in her arms, carried her into her own room. She sat down with her on her lap, and remained quite silent till the angry sobs had almost ceased. She then placed her on her knees, and in a very solemn voice told her to repeat after her the following words: 'Oh, my heavenly Father, look down in mercy, with pardoning mercy, on my poor little silly wicked heart, at this moment throbbing with such dreadfully bad feelings as only the spirit of all evil could put into it : oh, my heavenly Father, drive away and pardon me the evil I have done this day, for Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.' Harriet trembled exceedingly; but she repeated the Mrs. M. solemnly, 'how dare you say you are words after her mother, and, as she did so, in not so wicked as Eveline? You are more her heart she wished that God might hear them. Her mamma again placed her on her lap, and asked if her rage was away. Harriet answered in a soft voice, 'Not quite, mamma; but its better.' 'Very well,' said her mother, until it is quite away, I shall tell you a story that I was told when I was young, and I hope it will make as deep an impression on your mind, my poor child, as it did on mine, and cause she was bigger and stronger than yourself tend as effectually to make you try yourself to that you did not actually do so; and only think check your bad and furious temper. Lord for a moment on the difference between the and Lady — were very great and rich people. provocation poor Eveline received, and that They had only one child, and it was a daughter. They were very, very fond of this child, and she was in truth a very fine little creature, very she was right; whereas, no one can wonder lively, and merry and affectionate, and exceedlively, and merry and affectionate, and exceedlively sports of rage, when any thing vexed her, and when she was spoken to by the person she saw like you, would turn at, or strike, whoever pro- in her mamma's room, she would then have voked her; like you, after every fit of rage she heard, that it was from no change in her mam-was grieved and ashamed of herself, and re- ma's love that she had not seen her for several solved never to be so bad again; but the next days, but because she was confined to bed.' temptation all that was forgotten, and she was 'And, mamma, what did Eveline's poor mamma as angry as ever. When she was just your age, say to her for killing the baby?' 'Eveline never her mamma had a little son-a sweet, sweet again saw her dear and beautiful young mamlittle tender baby. Here papa and mamma ma; she died that night of grief and horror on were glad, glad —and little Eveline would have hearing that her sweet and lovely infant was been glad too, but the servants very foolishly murdered—and by whom.' 'Oh, dear, O dear and wickedly teased and irritated her, by tell- mamma—was Eveline sorry? 'My love, how ing her that papa and mamma would not care can you ask such a question?' 'But, mamma, for her now; all their love and pleasure would I mean how sorry was she? what way was she be this little brother, and they never would sorry enough?' 'Indeed, Harriet, it is not mind her. Poor Eveline burst into a passion easy to know or to tell how she could be sorry of tears, and cried bitterly. 'You are a wicked enough. All I know is, that she lived to be a woman to say so; mamma will always love me, big lady—she lived to be herself a mother—and I know she will, and I'll go this very moment in her whole life no one ever saw her smile.' and ask her, I will; and she darted out of the 'And, mamma, was it a quite true story? it is nursery and flew to her mamma's room, the so dreadful, mamma.' Yes, my child, it is a servant in the nursery calling after her, ' Come, come, miss, you needn't go to your mamma's throom; she wont see you now.' Eveline burst Einstantly caught hold of by a stranger woman my knees again, and pray to God to take away she had never seen before. 'My dear,' said this person, 'you cannot be allowed to see your mamma just now;' she would have said will hear and bless you; but also thank him more; she would have told Eveline that the for preserving you hitherto from the endless reason she could not see her mamma then, was because she was very sick, and must not be disturbed. But Eveline was too angry to listen; she screamed and kicked at the woman, who, finding her so unreasonable, lifted her by force out of the room, and carrying her into the nursery, put her down, and said to the servant there, as she was going away, 'that she must prevent miss coming to her mamma's room.' Eveline heard this, and it added to her rage; and then this wicked servant burst out a laughing, and said, 'I told you that, miss; you see mamma doesn't love you now!' The poor child became mad with fury; she darted at the cradle where lay the poor little innocent new-born baby. The maid, whose duty it was to watch over it, was lying asleep upon her chair; and oh, Harriet, Harriet! like as you did to Mary just now, she struck it with all her force-struck it on the little tenand breathed no more.' 'Why, mamma, mamma,' cried Harriet, bursting into tears, 'why did it breathe no more?' 'It was dead — killed by its own sister.' 'Oh, mamma, mamma! what a dreadful, what a wicked little known. girl! Oh, mamma! I am not so wicked as this bad spirit, help me with thy good spirit, her; I never killed a little baby,' sobbed Harriet, as she hid her face in her mother's bosom, and clung to her neck. 'My dear child,' said wicked; and, but for the goodness of God to you, might have been at this moment as miserable. Were you not in as great a rage when I came to the nursery as she was? Were you came to the nursery as she was? not striking Mary with all your force, not one blow, but repeated blows? and had Mary been like the object of Eveline's rage, a little baby, you would have killed her. It was only bewhich you supposed Mary gave you. Indeed, Mary gave you none - you were wrong, and in her mamma's room, she would then have quite true story; that unfortunate child was the great-grandmother of the present Earl of E---l.' My dearest mamma,' said Harriet, open the door of her mamma's room, but was once more bursting into tears, 'let me go upon and incalculable wretchedness so often produced by one fit of sinful rage."

This, we believe, is perfectly true. The unfortunate angry child was Anna, countess of Livingston. She was also Countess of Crawford; and, in her right, her son succeeded to the Earldom of Errol. It was a smoothingiron which, in her paroxysm of rage and terror, she snatched up and flung into the infant's cradle. A sad chance directed the blow, and the baby was murdered. No other child was ever born to the family; and the poor girl grew up, fully informed of the fatal deed by which she had attained so many deplorable honours. She was most amiable, and highly esteemed; but in all her life was never known to smile. When very young, she was married to the unfortunate William, earl of Kilmarnock beheaded in 1746 - who, whatever might be the motives of his loyalty to his king, was most disloyal to his wife, being as bad a husband as it is possible to conceive. Notwithstanding this, his excellent, unhappy lady hurried to London, and made every possible effort to obtain his pardon. Her want of success is Dreams and Reveries of a Quiet Man. By one of the Editors of the "New York Mirror." 2 vols. 12mo. New York, 1832. Harper.

A PLEASANT collection of miscellaneous papers, which would do credit to any periodical, and, what on this side the Atlantic is a great merit, containing many touches of national manners and taste. Its fault is, that it imitates too much the style of a by-gone literature, abounding in moral essays, and characters with appropriate names and appropriate qualities such papers as swamped the Lounger, Mirror, &c. American writers are too prone, like Orpheus, to look back, and thereby lose the Eurydice of the mind-originality. But there is obviously great and rising talent among our Transatlantic contemporaries: let it throw itself upon its own resources; paint their own manners, their own scenes, their own traditions: their theme and model should be from themselves. We now proceed to a few varied extracts.

American Deer-hunt.—" During a week's rest at a retired village, I casually mentioned that I had never seen a deer-hunt. A party was immediately formed; and the next morning, after an early breakfast, we set out under a perfectly cloudless sky, and through these immense woods, whose dying leaves, betraying the touch of the autumn frosts, covered the whole face of nature as with a mantle of the most brilliant and opposite colours. Here a tree, with foliage of the brightest orange, mingled its branches with one of the deepest gory red; while among the oaks, which dislayed all the various shades of the rainbow, here and there towered the erect and lofty pine, with its deep, dark, and unfading green. This tract of land was but a few years ago owned and occupied by the Indians, who, in order to facilitate their hunting by clearing the ground, were accustomed to set on fire what they term the under-brush. The pine-trees frequently suffered in the operation; and their burnt and blasted stumps are often discerned by the solitary traveller, like the frowning ghosts of that high-spirited and ruined race, lingering among the places, hallowed by habit and tradition, where the ashes of their heroic fathers sleep. In the summer they contrast strangely with the bright and tender green, the delicate sweet flowers which spring up around their root, and the fresh and feminine loveliness of the vines, which sometimes cling with living tendrils to their scathed, dead trunks. At a large and commodious dwelling, although constructed of logs, and by its appearance fully entitled to the appellation of hut, we found a good-natured, hospitable old gentleman, with horns, guns, and hounds. A dozen of the latter were assembled in the road before the house, fully prepared to enter into the spirit of the sport. No one could comprehend what was going on more clearly than these worthy, impatient gentlemen. They were fine animals, with fine names, and in their eagerness and joy frequently drew upon them the rebuke of the old man. Scarcely any brute creature expresses his sensations with more manifest meaning than a dog. • • It is necessary that a hunting party should consist of at least six or seven. One or two, termed drivers, with horns, horses, and hounds, ride to the grounds frequented by the deer, and the dogs soon catch the scent. There are certain known passages of the forest through which the timid animals, when affrighted, generally attempt to escape. One individual of the party is stationed at each of these; and in such an opening I found myself that bright morning, alone in the midst of these hushed and pathless forests, lurking, I almost thought, like a murderer, with my loaded piece, till the defenceless flying creature should spring upon his death. The silence around me was perfectly delightful. I could hear nothing not even the warbling of a bird-not the murmuring of a rill, for the stream by my side, instead of brawling and bubbling over its channel, had spread itself out into unbroken transparency. Across its bank, and accidentally answering the purposes of a bridge, a fallen tree was lying. Sometimes a playful fish leaped up from the brook, or glistened near the surface, as it turned its silver side to the sun; and sometimes a leaf, loosened from its branch, fell, and floated slowly to the ground in silence. I was thinking how many millions of my fellowcreatures drop off even thus in the shadowy places of life, and go down to the church-yard with as little notice or interruption to the general business and joy and beauty of nature,when the barking and yelping of the hounds came faintly through the distance, then nearer and nearer, till the whole chorus swelled on the breeze, and rung through the quiet wood, breaking strangely in upon its impressive stillness with discordant sounds of riot and death. You cannot conceive, unless you have experienced a similar moment, the almost painful eagerness and anxiety with which I watched to behold the victim appear through the trees. I 'I am the editor,' said I. 'I am very happy to heard a rustling among the dried leaves, and know you, sir,' he said. 'This is my first visit with desperate speed, and the whole bloody to your city, and my friends have been so kind pack close at her heels, a large doe broke from as to furnish me with letters to many of your the thicket, and passed near the place where I citizens. Do me the favour to peruse this. stood. Fleet as the wind she was springing by, He handed me a letter, tapped his boots with when I gave a low whistle; on a sudden she his rattan, yawned, and cast his eyes about, stopped, and the fatal ball lodged in her shoul- with the air of a self-satisfied fop, while I read der; another and another stretched her on the the following: 'Dear sir,-This will make you ground. She was a most lovely and feminine acquainted with my excellent friend, Mr. Thocreature. Nothing could exceed the grace, mas Jenkins, editor of the ——, of this place. cleanliness, and beauty of her form and limbs. He is a gentleman of education; and I should The dark silky brown of her back, the snowy whiteness of her neck, throat, and chest, and the almost human intelligence of her face, struck me with a strange feeling, of which those more familiar with the sight can form no idea. I confess, however unmanly it may have been, that a momentary horror ran through my frame, as the long lids, with their long lashes, fell over those large, dark, and beautiful eyes, while the swarthy huntsmen, with rough grasp and merry jokes, bound together her slender, tapering limbs, and one drew his long and glittering knife across her throat.'

The diary of an American editor is exceedingly amusing and characteristic.

"One of my contemporaries found something to displease him in an article which I published, and, in a very coarse and insulting paragraph, held it up to public scorn. In reply, I remonstrated with him very temperately, and assured him that he had given the phrase an erroneous construction. In his next paper I read the following, which I suppose I am to consider as characteristic of the independence of the press:—'Mr. ——, of the ——, is a base assassin. He is one of your half-horse, half-alligator, and a little of the steam-boat men. He always goes the whole hog. This polluted wretch, whom I would not take hold of with a pair of tongs, nor then unless to give him the chastisement his impudent andacity so richly merits-this degraded outcast from all human society, who talks about our institutions and our country, is him-whip him as soon as our leisure will permit us to visit the city which he infests with his pestilential presence. Nor must he suppose that until then he can escape the exposure his long train of cowardly falsehoods deserves. We, Thomas Jenkins, pledge ourselves to shew our readers that he is a perjured scoundrel, so totally destitute of every common feeling of humanity, that the earth groans under him as he walks.' Now, Mr. Thomas Jenkins may be a very decent name, but I never heard of it before. I was naturally very indignant, and inwardly vowed that if I should ever meet with the gentleman, I would give him some slight testimonial of my regard. One afternoon I was waited on by a little, diminutive dandy, with a rattan and whiskers. He was pale and consumptive-looking, and had that kind of cough which reminds a man of a quiet corner in a country church-yard, and makes him inclined to moralise. Yet a long collar protruding over his chin, and the air of studied grace with which he rapped his slender instruments of perambulation with his rattan, taught the observer that while the precarious personage before him did remain on earth, it was his wish to appear to every possible advantage. 'Pray, sir,' said he, taking off his hat, and looking very amiable and interesting, 'have I the honour of addressing the editor of the ---?' esteem myself greatly obliged by any attentions you may have it in your power to render him during his stay in your city. Yours truly, P. B.' 'Why, you impudent scoundrel,' said I, as soon as my surprise suffered me to speak, 'how dare you, sir, presume to trust your body within reach of one whom you have so deeply insulted and aggrieved?' I laid my hand on his collar, and paused at the expression of utter astonishment which appeared in his face, as he replied, 'Insulted! aggrieved! who? I? My dear sir, I beg your pardon. Some mistake, I presume. You have mistaken the person: my name, as you will perceive by the letter which you hold in your hand-my name, sir, is Jenkins-Mr. Jenkins-Mr. Thomas Jenkins.' I took down a file of his paper. 'Are you, sir,' I asked, 'the editor of this infamous, coarse, brutal, disgraceful, and lice ous journal?' 'Why, here's my paper, sure enough,' said Mr. Thomas Jenkins. 'Yes, sir, I am the editor of this journal; but, sir, upon my soul—why, you use language in reference to it, I confess—I'— 'Look here,' said I, dragging Mr. Jenkins by his collar to a position where the article which I have taken the trouble to copy above, stared him full in the face; 'look here, sir, at its licentiousness. Did you write that article, sir? answer me that.' 'What! that article? Let's see:' and he hummed over the conspicuous words-' base assassin - alligator - steam-boat —goes the whole hog—chastisement—vile tool —cowardly falsehoods—ah! yes, I remember ha, ha, ha! What! that's the way the wind my soul, sir, I meant no harm. Why there is not a single human being, I do assure you, sir,' laying his hand on his heart, 'whom I respect more sincerely than I do you. I always respected you, as every man must who knows you, but—this paragraph was written in a hasty moment. Perhaps I was a little warm; but that's the way we editors do these things; they give spirit to the paper. People always understand them; they mean nothing; but, if you were offended, I beg your pardon, and assure you it was unintentional.' Although I did not admire Mr. Jenkins's style of giving spirit to his paper, I could not proceed after such an humble apology, and so we parted.

The author is, we understand, a gentleman of the name of Fay; he has for many years been associate editor of the New York Mirror, a paper conducted with much talent and spirit.

Cartonensia; or, an Historical and Critical Account of the Tapestries in the Palace of the Vatican, copied from the Designs of Raphael of Urbino, and of such of the Cartoons whence they were woven, as are now in preservation. Second edition. 8vo. London, 1832. Ridgway. THE approbation we expressed in our journal for October last of the first edition of this work, induces us to refer with yet higher satisfaction to the appearance of a second. Besides the ostensible object which Cartonensia professes, it embraces others of a far more elevated nature; and as we before expressed it, "is calculated not only to improve the taste and delight the mind, by inspiring a love for the higher departments of the arts, but has obviously, throughout every portion of it, the nobler end of amending the heart, by making the Muses the handmaids of Virtue."

This edition is introduced by a preface, neatly and elegantly written; and the additional notes are such as naturally arise from the subject. That on pp. 18 and 19, replies to a public inquiry in the Gentleman's Magazine for May 1831, set on foot to discover whether any tapestries woven from the designs of Raphael, and but little known, existed in this country. By the favour of friends, the author is enabled to point out a fine collection of them at Forde Abbey, Devon, which consists of four pieces-the Death of Ananias, St. Paul and St. Barnabas at Lystra, St. Peter and St. John healing the Cripple, and Christ delivering the Keys to Peter. They are said to have been presented to Charles I. by the King of Spain. During the commonwealth they fell into the hands of Prideaux, the attorney-general, who purchased the abbey of Forde, and employed Inigo Jones to make considerable additions to the buildings, among which was a magnificent saloon for their reception. These tapestries are also described in Polwhele's History of Devon-

In the Guide to Burgley House, we find an account of three more of these splendid works: Christ delivering the Keys to St. Peter, St. Peter and St. John healing the Cripple, and St. Paul and St. Barnabas at Lystra. How these came into the possession of this noble family, the Marquess of Exeter professes himself ignorant.

Page 33 of the new edition of Cartonensia contains some curious particulars relative to the earthenware commonly called delft, the articles of which are painted with designs traditionally by the hand of Raphael. We find self an Englishman;—and, if he possessed blows, is it? Yes, sir, I certainly did write sufficient wit to know the name of the corrupt party whose filthy principles he circulates like a Tory. We shall horse- vileged to a little freedom of speech; but, bless of that it has the way the wind much interesting information, also, respecting much interesting information, also, respecting the prevalence of this manufacture in Italy in his time, and an account of some of the more eminent professors in this department of art. The collections at Loretto are adverted to with more ample details, as is also that distinguished assemblage which embellishes Narford Hall, in this county, which was made in Italy by Sir Andrew Fountaine in the reign of George I.

Mr. Gunn judiciously remarks on the national importance, whether considered in a scientific or pecuniary point of view, of establishing fine collections of painting and sculpture in this country, as exemplified on the continent by the galleries at Dresden, Dusseldorf, Florence, and Rome. He adverts also to the distinction which we justly claim from the possession of the Elgin and Phigalian marbles, and feelingly regrets that those of Ægina are not also ours, as they ought to have been.

STATE PAPERS. HENRY VIII.

In looking over some parts of this work, we have reproached ourselves for having omitted, in our review of it, the letters of Grafton and Coverdale about the printing of the Bible, which are entirely new, and of extreme inter-est, in biblical history. We now make the amende, by quoting them in a "fifth notice."

"After moost humble and hartie commendacions to your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand that we be entred into your worke of the Byble, wherof (accordynge to our moost bounden dutie) we have here sent unto your lordship 2 ensamples; one, in parchement, wherin we entende to prynt one for the kynges grace, and another for your lordship; and the second, in paper, wherof all the rest shalbe made; trustynge that it shalbe not onlye to the glorye of God, but a synguler pleasure also to your good lordship the causer therof, and a generall edefyenge of the kinges subjectes, accordynge to your lordshipes moost godlye request. For we followe not only a standynge text of the Hebrue, with the interpretacion of the Caldee, and the Greke, but we set also in a pryvate table the dyversite of redinges of all textes, with suche annotacions, in another table, as shall douteles delucidate and cleare the same, as well without any singularyte of opinions, as all checkinges and reprofes. The prynt, no doubt, shall please your good lordship. The paper is of the best sorte good lordship. The paper is of the vess solve in France. The charge certaynly is great; favourable helpe, at this present, with whatsoever yt shall please your good lordship to let us have, so trust we (yf nede requyer) in our just busynes, to be defended from the Papistes by your lordshipes favourable letters, which we most humbly desyer to have (by this berer, Wyllyam Graye), ether to the Bysshop of Wynchester, or to some other whome your lordship shall thinke moost expedyent. be dayly threatened, and looke ever to be spoken withall, as this berer can farther enforme your lordship; but how they will use us, as yet we knowe not. Neverthelesse, for our farther assewrance, where thorough we maye be the abler to performe this your lordshipes work, we are so moche the bolder of your good lordship; for other refuge have none, under God and our kynge, whom, with noble Prynce Edward, and all you, their most honorable councell, God Allmightie preserve, now and ever. Amen. Wrytten at Parys, the 23 daye of Juyn, by your lordshipes assured and daylye oratours,

" (Signed) MYLES COVERDALE,

(Signed) MYLES COVERDALE,

"(Signed) RYCHARD GRAFTON, Groce'."

(Superscribed)

"To the Right Hon. and their
synguler good lorde, the Lorde
Cromewell and Lorde Prevaye Scale."

your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand that your worke going forward, we thought it oure moost bounden dutie to sende unto your lordship certayne leaves therof, specially seynge we had so good occasyon, by the returninge of your beloved servaunt, Sebastian. And as they are done, so will we sende your lordship the residue, from tyme to tyme. As touchynge the maner and order, that we kepe in the same worke, pleaseth your good lordship to be advertised, that the merke of in the text signifieth that upon the same (in the later ende of the booke) there is some notable annotacion, which we have written without any pryvate opinion, onlye after the best interpreters of the Hebrues, for the more clearnesse of the texte. This marke to betokeneth, that upon the same texte there is diversitie of redynge amonge the Hebrues, Caldees, and Grekes, and Latenystes; as in a table, at the ende of the booke, shalbe declared. marke to sheweth that the sentence, written in small letters, is not in the Hebrue or Caldee, but in the Latyn, and seldome in the Greke; and that we, neverthelesse, wolde not have it extinct, but higlye accept yt, for the more explanacion of the text. This token +, in the Olde Testament, geveth to understand that the same texte which followeth it is also alledged of Christ, or of some apostle in the New Testament. This (amonge other oure necessarie laboures) is the waye that we take in this worke, trustynge, verely, that as God Allmightie moved youre lordship to set us unto yt, so shall it be to his glorie, and right welcome to all them that love to serve him and their prince in true faithfull obedyence. As is onlye knowen to the Lorde of Heaven, to whom we moost hartely praye for your lord-shipes preservacion. At Parys, the 9 daye of August 1538, by your faithfull oratours,

"(Signed) MYLES COV'DALE.
"(Signed) RICHARD GRAFTON.
"(Signed) WILLM. GREY."

(Superscribed)
"To the Right Hon. and their
synguler good Lorde, Lorde Prevye Seale, be this delyvered."

"After most humble and due salutacions to your moost honorable lordshippe. the same to understand that we are instantly desyred of oure hoste (whose name is Fraunces Reynold, a Frenchman) to make supplication for him unto your lordshippe. Where as, of long tyme, he hath bene an occupier in to England more then 40 yere, he hath allwayes provyded soche bookes for England as they moost occupied; so that he hath a great nombre, at this present, in his handes, as prymers in Englishe, misseles, with other soche like, wherof now (by the Company of the Booksellers in London) he is utterly forbydden to make sale, to the utter undoyng of the man. Wherfore moost humbly we beseke your lordshippe to be gracious and favourable unto him, that he maye have lycence to sell those which he hath done allready; so that, herafter, he prynte no moo in the English tong, onlesse he have an English man that is lerned to be his correctour, and that is the man well contented with-all. He is also contented, and hath promised, before my lord elect of Harfford, that yf there be founde any notable faute in his bookes, he will put the same out, and prynte the leafe Thus are we bolde to wryte unto your lordshippe, in his cause (as doth also my

"After moost humble and due salutacion to | shall geve attendaunce upon your lordshippes most favorable answere. Yf your lordshippe shewe him this benefyte, we schall not fare the worsse in the readynesse and due expedicion of this your lordshippes worke of the Bible, which goeth well forwarde, and within few monethes will drawe to an ende, by the grace of Allmightie God, who preserve your good lord-shippe, now and evermore. From Parys, the 12th daye of Septembre.

"(Signed) MYLES COV'DALE.
"(Signed) RYCHARD GRAFTOR."
(Superscribed)
"To the Hight Hon. and their synguler good Lorde, the Lorde
Prevye Seale."

"My veray singuler good lord. After my moste hartie commendations, their shalbe to signifie unto your lordeship, that Bartelett and Edward Whitecherche hath ben with me, and have by thair accomptes declared thexpensis and charges of the pryntyng of the great Bibles; and by thadvice of Bartelett I have appoynted theym to be soulde for 13s. 4d. a pece, and not above. Howebeit, Whitechurche enformeth me that your lordeship thinketh it a moore conveniente price to have theym solde at 10s. a pece, which, in respecte of the greate chargis both of the papar (which in very dede is substanciall and good), and other great hinderaunces, Whitechurche and his felowe thinketh it a small price. Nevertheles, they ar right well contented to sell theym for 10s.; so that you wolbe so good lorde unto theym as to graunte hensforth none other lycence to any other printer, saving to theym, for the printyng of the said Bible; for els thei thinke that thei shalbe greately hindered therbye, yf any other should printe, thei susteynyng suche charges as they al redie have don. Wherfore, I shall beseche your lordeship, in consideration of their travaile in this behalf, to tender thair requestes; and thei have promysed me to prynte in thende of their Bibles the price therof, to thente the kinges lege people shall not hensforth be deceyvid of thair price. Farther, yf your lordeship hath known the kinges highnes pleasure concernyng the preface of the Bible, whiche I sent to youe to oversee, so that his grace dothe alowe the same, I pray you that the same may be delyvered unto the said Whitechurch unto printyng: trusting that it shall both encorage many slowe readers, and also stay the rash judgementes of theym that reade therin. Thus our Lorde have your good lordesihip in his blessed tnition. Att Lambeth, the 14th day of November. Your own, ever assured, (Signed) T. CANTUARIEN'."

(Superscribed) To my singuler good lorde, my Lorde Privie Seale."

"After moost humble commendacions. Pleaseth it your lordship to undrestand that it chaunsed, sence oure commynge into these partes, that James Nycolson, that dwelleth in Southwark, put in prynt the Newe Testament, bothe in Latyn and Englyshe. Which booke was delyvered, unto us by a straunger; and when Master Coverdale had advysed and consydered the same, he founde his name added therunto as the translatour, with the which he never had to do, nether sawe he it, befor it was full prynted and ended; and also founde the booke so folyshly done, ye, and so corrupt, that yt did not only greve him that the prvnter had so defamed him and his learnyng, by addynge his name to so fonde a thinge, but, also, that the commen people was depryved of the true lord elect of Herfford) beseeching your lord and syncere sence of Godes true worde, and shippe to pardon oure boldnesse, and to be good also that soche an occasyon was mynstred to and syncere sence of Godes true worde, and lorde unto this honest man, whose servaunt the enemyes of Godes worde, that rather seke occasyons to rayle and sclaunder then to be edefyed. And, therfore, at his moost honest and lawfull request (although I had ynough to do besyde), I have prynted the same agayne, translated and corrected by Master Coverdale him selfe. Of the whiche bookes, now beynge fynesshed, I have here sent your lordship the fyrst (and so have I also sent unto my Lord of Cantourbury another, and almost to every Christen bysshop that is in the realme; my lorde of Harfforde, also, hath sent to Mr. Rychard Cromwell one of the same)-the which I moost humbly desyer your lordship to accept, havyng respecte rather unto my harte then to the gifte; for it is not so well done as my harte wold wysshe it to be. I have also added, as your lordship maye perceave, these wordes—

Cum gratia et privilegio regis.' And the day before this present, came there a post named Nycolas, which brought your lordshippes letters to my lorde of Harfforde, with the which was bounde a certen inhibition for pryntynge of bookes, and for addynge of these wordes 'cum privilegio.' Then, assone as my lorde of Harfforde had receaved yt, he sent ymedyatlye for Mr. Coverdale and me, readynge the same thynge unto us, in the which is expressed that we shuld adde these wordes-'ad imprimendum solum; which wordes we never heard of before, nether do we take it that those wordes shuld be added in the pryntynge of the Scripture (if yt be truly translated); for then shuld yt be a great occasyon to the enemyes to saye, that yt is not the kynges acte or mynde to set yt forth, but only lycence the prynters to sell soche as is put forth. Wherfore moost humbly we beseke your lordship to take no dyspleasour for that we have done, for rather then any soche thynge shuld happen we wolde do yt agayne; but I trust the thynge yt selfe is so well done that it shall not only please your lordship, but also the kynges highnes, and all the godly in the realme. And where as your this regulation caused, two years ago, a revolordship hath added in the sayd inhibicions, lution among the women, who were much disthat your lordship and all the kynges most honorable councell wylleth no booke from their ornamental locks; but the execution of henceforth to be put in prynt, but that fyrst yt be alowed, at the least, by one bysshop; we moost humbly beseke your lordship to apoynt certen therto, that they may be as readye to reade them as other good men be to put them forth. For yt is now 7 yere sence the bysshopes promysed to translate and set forth the Byble, and as yet they have no leasour. I praye God they may have. Howbeyt the Christen bysshops in dede have small leasour. Thus I commyt your lordship to the tuicion of All-myghtie God, who evermore preserve your good good lordship. At Parys, the firste daye of December. Your humble and faythfull servytour, RYCHARD GRAFTON."

(Superscribed)
"To the Right Hon. and their singuler good lorde, my Lorde Prevaye Seale."

The Excitement for 1833. pp. 394. Edinburgh, Waugh and Innes; Dublin, Curry and Co.; London, Whittaker.

This volume, which, being the fourth of a series, may be considered as an Annual, is intended and well calculated to induce young people, particularly boys, to read and improve their minds. The editor cites the opinion of a professor of the University of Edinburgh, that it is desirable to fix languid or straggling attention by tales of marvel and interest; and he might have quoted the powerful authority of Dr. Johnson to the same effect. It is obvious We would particularly direct our readers' attenthat youth cannot be cultivated by mere dull tion to the articles on the Amygdalaceæ and

We highly approve of appealing to the imagination, as well as to the sense; — the latter faculty will never do much without the aid of the former. The Excitement contains a number of attracting selections, and illustrates foreign countries by narratives of much personal interest.

The Botanical Miscellany, Part VIII. By W. J. Hooker, LL.D., &c. Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow. London, 1832. Murray.

THE present Number of this excellent periodical contains, among other articles, a very valuable paper from the pen of the learned editor and Mr. Arnott, on the Flora of South America and the islands of the Pacific, and also an interesting sketch of the province of Emerina, in the island of Madagascar, by Hilsenberg and Bojer. We regret to learn that the former distinguished botanist has since died on the east coast of Africa. The following account of the costume of the natives, as well as the ideas of taste of the ladies, will be found amusing.

"The native costume is simple. The men. who are robust and well-proportioned, wrap themselves in a cloth, which they throw like a cloak over their shoulders, and another that is wound round the waist. These garments, being very rarely changed or washed, harbour a great quantity of vermin, of which the wearers are so little ashamed, that they make no scruple of standing in the sun, in the open streets, and employing their slaves to rid them of the an-noyance. Their hair is platted in little locks, which are becoming in appearance; but as it is the custom to anoint the head with ox-grease, and to wear no covering, the heat of the sun renders the scent intolerable. The beard is suffered to grow on the chin only, being eradicated on other parts of the face with pincers. The king's guard have now their hair cropped: seven of these females, with several men, who were the instigators of the disturbance, restored tranquillity. Both men and women adorn the upper part of the arms and the belly with scars, differing according to taste, and resembling bas-relief. Many individuals also pierce their ears, and dilate the perforations so as to admit the three forefingers. Their principal finery consists in decorating their feet, hands, and neck with chains of silver, coral, and pieces of money, from a franc to a piastre in value, amounting sometimes to 200-300 francs. They keep these jewels as their most precious possessions, often not parting with them even after their death. Children of both sexes go naked to six or seven years of age, and the slaves are generally in a state of perfect nudity, and disgustingly filthy."

A General System of Gardening and Botany, &c. &c. By George Don, F.L.S. In 4 vols. Vol. II. 4to. pp. 875. London, 1832. Rivingtons; Clarke; Longman and Co.

Mr. Don's second volume amply justifies the opinion which we pronounced on the appearance of the former one. It continues the arrangement of the vegetable world according to the natural system, from the subclass Calyci-floræ, order Celastrinææ, down to order Lecythidea, containing ample descriptions of the individual species and their mode of culture. labour, utilitarianism, and dry abstract reason. the Pomacea, orders which supply our desserts with the most delicious fruits, such as the almond, the peach, nectarine, plum, greengage, &c. in the former, the pear and the apple in the latter. To the unlearned in horticulture the amazing number of cultivated varieties of the two last-named appears almost incredible: there are no fewer than 677 of the pear, and 1400 of the apple. We have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Don's work is of immense value to the botanist and gardener.

A Manual of Medical Jurisprudence, &c. By M. Ryan, M.D. London. 8vo. pp. 309. Renshaw and Rush.

A VERY useful compilation, on an important subject; though the author digresses occasionally, and discusses topics which are any thing but suited to the sober and dignified tone of a scientific work. In this volume there is rather too much of what we may term medical polemics. Notwithstanding these blemishes, however, Dr. Ryan has furnished a large body of useful information.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY.

EDWARD FORSTER, Esq. in the chair. A technical paper, of which no epitome can well be given, entitled a Monograph of the East Indian Solaneæ, by Dr. Nees von Esenbeck, Professor of Botany at Breslau, was read. The original specimens here treated of by the learned professor are contained in the Society's collection, and lately presented by the East India Company, as noticed by us in a former Literary Gazette.

ROYAL ASTRONOMICAL SOCIETY.

F. BAILY, Esq. in the chair. First meeting of the season.—The following communications were read: Observations on the occultation of Saturn, 8th of May last, taken at the observatory, Cambridge, by Professor Airy: observations of Biela's comet, by Sir John Herschel: on the method of ascertaining the rates of chroon the method of ascertaining the taxes of carbonometers, by Mr. J. Epps: three papers on the transit of Mercury in May, observed by Mr. Henderson, at the Cape of Good Hope; Capt. Belcher, at Cavalho, Island Bijoogas; and by Professor Quetelet, at Brussels. We subjoin the following notice of certain observations of the solstices, from Dec. 1829 to Dec. 1830, and on moon-culminating stars, during the same period, made by Lieut. Johnson, at the Hon. E. I. C. observatory, referring our readers for more ample details to the Monthly Notices, published by the Society's booksellers. Latitude 16° 55' 24" N. is the result of several observations, direct and by reflexion, of the principal stars in the Greenwich catalogue. longitude has hitherto been assumed 22m 30s W., but a mean of three observations of moonculminating stars, with corresponding observa-tions at Greenwich, gives 22^m 57° 5 W., which corresponds very nearly with that given by Capt. Owen. The mean obliquity at the different solstices is as follows:

Dec. 1899-30-31... St. Helena 23° 27′ 38″ 96 Greenwich 40″ 19 Dift. 1″ 93 June 1830-31... St. Helena 23° 27′ 43″ 95 Greenwich 42″ 56 Diff. 1″ 99

If Bradley's refractions had been used, the obliquity at the northern solstice would have been

Apropos: we see there are some law proceedings against the author for piracy. We thought that in the existing state of literature and literary property, every writer might not only pillage any other with impunity, but abuse the robbed into the bargain.—Ed. L. G.

reduced about 0.65, and that at the southern the names of those persons in India to whom it 04.14.

MEDICO-BOTANICAL SOCIETY.

EARL STANHOPE in the chair. Notices of the proceedings of this laudable institution are more suited to the pages of a medical journal than to those of the Literary Gazette. Subjoined, however, is a précis of the first meeting this season. A communication from W. Twining, Esq., secretary to the Medico-Physical Society of Calcutta, was read. It detailed several new cases in which madar had been administered with success by Mr. Geddes, of the Madras service, and by Dr. H. Mackenzie. The case in which the madar proved wonderfully successful with the former of these gentlemen, was in the cure of obstinate ulcer, situated on the upper part of the lip: the medicine was administered in pills, in the dose of four grains three times a-day. By the time that two drachms and a half of the madar had been taken, the patient was completely cured. Dr. Mackenzie's case was still more remarkable. The bones of the left fore-arm of his patient (a native boy, thirteen years of age) were bare, and in a state of caries: by the administration of three grains of madar-powder, twice a-day, the ultimate recovery of the boy was effected. Several other papers were read. Amongst them was an interesting one by Dr. Hancock, entitled, "notices of different medical plants, principally natives of British Guiana." From this communication it appears that many efficacious medicines, for the cure of various diseases, have not yet found a place in our pharmacopœia.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A New Atlas of England and Wales. To be completed in eleven Parts. Part I. 1832.

A CLEAR, well-engraved set of large county maps, the distinguishing quality of which quality that must render them exceedingly useful in the approaching general election. thus described in the prospectus:-

"The great aud important changes that have so recently taken place in the parliamentary representation of the kingdom, are rendered obvious to the eye on these county maps by the insertion of various distinguishing marks and Thus the wholly disfranchised boreferences. roughs will be known from such as are partially disfranchised; while those places which now for the first time return either one or two members, will be as easily discovered. addition to this, the different polling-places are marked, and the district-divisions may be seen by referring to the hundreds; so that, in fact, each map carries with it the local alterations effected by Schedules A, B, C, &c. of the Reform-bill."

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

THE ABBOTSFORD SUBSCRIPTION.

THE ABBOTSFORD SUBSCRIPTION.

THE design of securing Abbotsford for ever in the line of Sir Walter Scott, is so feelingly and forcibly illustrated by the annexed letter, which having the good fortune to hear read, we solicited and obtained for our page, that we beg particularly to call the public attention to it. It was written by that patriotic and distinguished Scotsman, Sir John Malcolm, in answer to an application from the Secretary of the Committee formed in Edinurgh for erecting a monument in that city; and we rejoice in being able to state that the rejoinder from Edinburgh sasures the London Committee of cordial support, in what our northern friends declare to be "the most important memorial" which could be devised to perpetuate the universal admiration felt for the mighty ministrel whom we have lost.—Ed. L. G.

London, Nov. 4, 1832. Sir,—Being in the country, your letter did not reach me till two days ago. I shall suggest might, in my opinion, be useful to send your DR. Bostock in the chair. A paper by Mr. circular: but I regret that my being one of a Bates, jun., on his improvement on the Amerifew gentlemen who met some time ago to pro- can machine for delineating on a plane surface mote the same object as your committee, will prevent my affording that influence and cooperation the latter wish me to do to further their object with my friends abroad : but I entreat you to assure the committee that this arises from no want of zeal in the cause they have undertaken. I most fully participate in their feelings of admiration for that genius whose loss we all deplore; and I shall personally never be found wanting in giving my aid to any plan for marking respect to his memory: but my influence, which is not much, will be given to the effecting of this object in the mode that I deem at once most honourable to the living and the dead. I have, from the first, thought, and continue to think, that making Abbotsford and all its appurtenances a grant from the public to the descendants of Sir Walter Scott, is the noblest tribute we can pay to the memory of that wonderful man. I view this place as one of his works; and it was, beyond all others, the one in which during his existence, he most delighted. There is no fear but that his other works will perpetuate themselves: we and our children's children shall continue to derive pleasure and gratification from them. By purchasing Abbotsford, while we honour his memory, we shall inspire, through a recur-ring sense of benefit, his children's children with the same sense of gratitude to us which we entertain for their father: we shall perpetuate the only fabric he ever raised of perishable materials: it will be a lasting abode to his descendants; and this shrine of genius-for such it is, and will remain—will never pass into the hands of strangers to his blood. preservation of this place of his own creation to his family, is known to be in accordance with the last and most cherished feelings of his heart; but were there no danger (which I fear is not the case) of its ever passing from his family, I should still advocate its purchase, and its grant to them. We can raise no monument to his fame so appropriate: with it are associated all that belongs to his life, his death, his character, and his inspired works. In viewing a statue we may mix our admiration of the subject with those feelings which are excited by the success or failure of the sculptor: it is, besides, a species of tribute that has been paid to the memory of numbers. My enthusiasm may mislead my judgment; but I desire that this, the primary object of a nation's gratitude to one who has raised its name throughout the civilised world, should be of a description distinct from all others; and also that it should be of a character that banished from the mind every feeling except of him to whom it was dedicated.

With the sentiments I have expressed, should the purchase of Abbotsford be resolved upon, I must give what little influence and support I can to promote that object. I do earnestly hope, for the sake of that noble cause in which both are alike ardent, that the committees of London and Edinburgh will accord with each other; but should it be otherwise, I shall readily subscribe to the statue; for, whatever preference I may give to the other plan, I shall never personally withhold my contribution to the commemoration, in any shape, of one whom it was my pride to esteem as a friend, and honour as a countryman.-I am, &c.

(Signed) JOHN MALCOLM. ROYAL SOCIETY.

objects in relief, was read. The communica-tion was illustrated by an exhibition of the celebrated Napoleon medal as the subject of delineation; of drawings made according to the American method, without the improve-ment,—the same with the improvements (the total absence of that distortion which characterised the American drawings was remarkable in these); lastly, the medal itself divided into sections, for the purpose of exhibiting the principles of Mr. Bates's theory. There was also read a paper by Mr. Barlow, on his fluid lens telescope. To both of these important communications we shall hereafter return.

A list of donations to the society occupied nearly half an hour in the reading; it embraced a variety of valuable foreign works, amongst them, La Place's Méchanique Céleste, by Bowditch, claimed particular attention. Auditors were selected, and the meetings were adjourned until the anniversary.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

On Thursday, as we noticed last week, this Society resumed their sittings, Mr. Hallam in the chair. The secretary announced a long list of presents; among which were some very fine foreign medals. Mr. Adamson, secretary to the Society of Antiquaries of Newcastle, communicated the discovery of a large collection of Saxon brass coins in the churchyard of Hexham. A very interesting paper from Mr. Rickman was read, on the ancient ecclesiastical buildings of Picardy and Normandy, from notes made on a tour lately taken through those countries. Mr. R. described the principal points of difference from buildings of the same class in England; and, among others, observed, that the east and west direction, so generally followed in the plans of English churches, was in many instances widely departed from. This paper was the first of a promised series on the same subject.

November 22d, Mr. Hallam in the chair.

Mr. Robinson exhibited two engravings of Hatfield House - one an exterior view, the other the interior of a magnificent gallery. Lady Manton presented a drawing of a monumental slab discovered at Dover; on it was carved a rude cross of equal dimensions with the stone, inscribed with runic characters. Lord Mahon communicated an account of an ancient poem preserved in the Royal Library at Paris, giving a fabulous account of the conquest of Britain by the Greeks; his Lordship observed, that the Byzantine writers were particularly ignorant of Britain, or any thing relating to its history. Mr. Leathes exhibited a stone discovered in the foundation of the tower of the church of St. Dunstan's in the West, taken down for the erection of the new edifice; with a brass plate which had been rivetted to the stone, bearing the letters IHU surrounded by the crown of thorns. The date of the foundation of the old structure is uncertain; but it appears to have been one of the earliest churches dedicated to St. Dunstan, about the middle of the eleventh century. The letters, &c. on the plate are in relief, and it was, probably, originally enamelled. A continuation was read of Mr. Rickman's essay on the ecclesiastical buildings of Picardy and Normandy; this portion related to the fonts, and was accompanied by sketches of nine, being all that Mr. R. could gain access to during his late tour.

FINE ARTS. NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Richmond and its surrounding Scenery; en graved by and under the direction of W. B. Cooke; from Drawings of eminent Artists: with descriptive Letter-press by Mrs. Hofland. Part II. London, 1832: W. B. Cooke.

This work, with its beautiful scenery and summer associations, is now complete. The views, selected with taste and executed with skill, cannot fail to be highly attractive to every one who has the power to appreciate A wind-blown leaf, a desert-tree or spring, what is excellent in art or beautiful in nature. In a former Number of our Gazette (Aug. 20, 1831), we gave, at some length, high and deserved commendation to the first Part, with respect both to its graphic and to its literary character; and we can with as much truth And thou, dost thou upbraid me? thou, the commend that under our notice. The plates are twenty-four in number; the vignettes, beautifully cut on wood, are eleven. The same artists, Messrs. J. D. Harding and G. Barnard, have been employed, and equal talent has been displayed throughout.

The work is dedicated, by permission, to her grace the Duchess of Northumberland-a circumstance equally creditable to her grace's condescension and taste; and we cordially recommend it, as well to the amateur as to the public, as one of those cheap pleasures which, like the scenes of nature, are always at hand, and without any mixture of alloy.

The English School, No. XLII. Tilt. THERE is not the slightest falling-off in the neatness and accuracy with which these pretty little outlines have from the first been executed.

The Right Hon. Lady Charlotte Butler. Engraved by Dean, from a painting by Morton. Bull.

THE ninety-sixth of the Series of the Female Nobility. Full of gentle and lady-like expression.

Landscape Illustrations of the Works of Sir Walter Scott; with Portraits of the principal Female Characters, Parts VIII. and IX. Chapman and Hall.

THE head of "Miss Wardour" strikes us as being too childish for the character; that of "Rowena" (from a design by Stone) is sweet As bright for them the dews beneath their feet? and feminine.

Henri Hers. Deveira. A VERY characteristic portrait. We have For their dull spirits were not touched by the seldom seen the lithographic chalk handled in They sought thee not out in the dewy prime, so masterly a manner.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

THE POET AND POESY: A FOREST COLLOQUY.

AUTHOR of all sweet songs and solemn, thou To whom was paid my fond and earliest vow, Glad universal spirit, child of light! Thou com'st as thou wast wont unto my sight. When here in happy youth I took my way, Pleased thus to roam through many a summer's day : Here, in old Sherwood Forest, by the streams Of Man and Rainworth haunted with thy dreams;

For thou wast with me in those happy days, When shunning man's pursuits I sung thy Renouncing all things; seeking but to be, Midst these wild haunts, with Nature and with thee.

And what has been thy guerdon, year by year, Midst changing seasons, solitary here? A lonely dreamer, without hope or aim, In boyhood, and in manhood still the same. 'Tis thine to think, not act-to see and hear, But have no portion in man's hope or fear; A form of life without one tie to bind Thee by strong kindred feeling to thy kind; As man's existence were a sullen thing; Diverging widely from wise nature's plan, At home, abroad, a solitary man.

cause.

If I have warred with nature's steadfast laws? Thou, that didst frame my mind, and fix my mood.

And mad'st my life one thoughtful solitude? When first I wandered in my infant hours Out in the spring, midst spring's first-coming flowers,

And with light heart a childish song I sung, Ere words were framed to music on my tongue, Thou then wast present, fair but undefined, And mad'st that early twilight of the mind; By thee in that sweet season was I found, Thou wast within me there, and wast around: And when, with grudging heart and gloomy face,

On the school form I took my daily place And felt that check upon life's free delight, Where the first tyrant had the power to smite, With thee in thought I sought each shady nook.

Poring with eyes that saw not on the book Warm violet-banks and primrose-scented dells, Wild glimmering heaths, and tinkling mossy wells; earn. For these, for thee, 'twas mine harsh words to And blows for dulness when I did not learn. And called by thee, before the school began, From field to field, from hedge to hedge, I ran; Shunning all comrades, there alone to see The earliest nest in bank, and bush, and tree. These rudest lads might seek, and with quick

And clamorous shouts discern the hidden prize; But was for them the morning's breath as sweet? As pure and free the early clouds in light? And filled their eyes with rapture at the sight? Yes, these they saw but as they did not see, We have For their dull spirits were not touched by thee. Ranging the pastures of the moorland thyme, Before the lark his matin song had sung, Upon the rosy skirts of darkness hung; Nor came they here thy gentle lore to learn, Companionless among the heath and fern. Led early forth, I saw thy lustrous eyes In starry flowers and in the starry skies, And heard thy voice in every waving wood, In winds, and in the murmurs of the flood, In sigh of leaves, and in the gush of springs, And felt thy present spirit in all things. Fair are the dewy leaves, the blossoms fair, And fair the skies, and sweet the vernal air, Beauty and joy at every turn we meet, Yet without thee is nothing fair or sweet. What pride was mine, what triumph, and what

> To roam the earth with thee when but a boy; When earth by spring created seemed anew In green, fresh green, in blossome and in dew;

Or, like the sight to tranced Peter given, When all I saw seemed new " let down from heaven."

For thou to nature giv'st diviner grace, As soul adds beauty to the fairest face But many years have o'er me past, and now Mine is a duller frame and sadder brow; And I have felt of manhood's cares the stress, Yet may not, cannot, do not love thee less; For thou to me hast dearest forms supplied My mother, and my sister, and my bride. To thee I ever fly in care and strife, And, living not in thee, I have no life. I have not sighed for wealth, nor sought for sway, But loathed alike to rule or to obey Nor sought precedence, form, nor idle state, Which may be found in small things as in great. These loved I not, nor aught save here to be, Midst these wild haunts, with nature and with thee.

At home, abroad, with man, or in the wild, Whate'er esteemed, I still was all thy child.

Poesy. Enough: __and I have loved thee; thou hast known

That I for thee like constant love have shewn; And I have warmed thy heart with views sub-

With views eternal, borrowing wings of Time; And I have shewn thee steadfast life, and bliss In other regions-never found in this; And so have filled thy soul with love and power, That thou hast known no solitary hour.

R. HOWITT.

SONG: FROM THE BUCCANEER.

O'ER the clear quiet waters My gondola glides, And gently it wakens The slumbering tides. All nature is smiling, Beneath and above : While earth and while heaven Are breathing of love!

In vain are they breathing, Earth, heaven, to me, Though their beauty and calmness Are whispers of thee: For the bright sky must darken, The earth must be gray, Ere the deep gloom that saddens My soul pass away.

But see, the last day-beam Grows pale ere it die; And the dark clouds are passing All over the sky. I hear thy light footstep, Thy fair form I see; Ah! the twilight has told thee Who watches for thee.

DRAMA.

DRURY LANE.

THE drama is struggling with too many difficulties to permit us, without much regret, to condemn any of the efforts made to sustain it. But it is impossible for a public journalist, with regard to truth and propriety, to pass over the offence in the performance of Who wants a Guinea? at this theatre on Saturday, without severe animadversion. We will not dwell on the injustice done to the American débutant, Mr. Hackett, by the utter want of study or memory in several of the other characters; who (hardly uttering one sentence of the author, but speaking extempore whatever came into their own heads) certainly placed the new cues to answer them, in a very curious predicament. Improvising a comedy may be very funny in parts; but for general effect, it has been considered better to learn something of the author. It is not, however, even of the want of this essential that we most complain: the vulgarity and indecency introduced were so gross and disgusting, that no modest woman could listen to them without feelings of shame and disgust. The poor licenser has been accused of writing licentiously enough in his younger days; but he never penned the perpetual oaths, and the witless ribaldry, which were repeated as his on this occasion. We trust this notice will not be without its just influence: if not attended to, we will, as is sometimes threatened in the House of Commons, " name the honourable parties."

Of Mr. Hackett, who substituted a Yankee called Solomon Swap, for the original Solomon Gundy, we have formed a very favourable opi-There is much of dry, quaint humour about him; and his personation of a genuine Jonathan is life itself. He seems an inimitable teller of American stories; and this, with his "rotten" queer phraseology, frequently set the audience into roars of laughter. His asserting that a person smelt so strong of rum, that you might hang your hat upon it; his poetry on a mill carried down by a flood, that it came down the water A great deal firther than it ought-er,

and his denunciation of the housekeeper's incapacity, because she could not answer his question, whether the dog's tail, about four inches long, was cut off, or druv in? -- were most ludicrously given, as well as many other points of a similar kind. Mr. Hackett also looked the part well: his constant watchfulness of eye, his gait, and his mingled cunning and boorishness, were very cleverly portrayed. Farren, as Jonathan Oldskirt, was the perfection of a querulous old remnant-seller; nothing could surpass his look and acting. Harley, in Andrew Bang, was also highly entertaining; and Cooper, in the sententious Barford, did all that could be done. The female characters are not prominent; but Mrs. Jones, Miss Kenneth, and Miss Faucit, made the most of them.

A new comic entertainment, called the Militia Muster, succeeded the play and em-bodied Mathews' popular song on that subject. The piece itself is very indifferent; and the drill of the awkward American militia-men appeared to be too long continued to please. Strong marks of disapprobation were consequently exhibited by a portion of the audience; and if with cause on some points, we must observe certainly without either cause or courtesy to a stranger on some others. For ourselves, we shall be glad to see Mr. Hackett's admirable delineation of the Yankee at full length; and we trust he will have opportunities afforded him of shewing the talent he really possesses that, at least, of a capital and amusing imitator. In the afterpiece of Born to Good Luck, Power's Padeen O'Rafferty, as usual, threw the house into fits of laughter.

On Wednesday the tragedy of the Revenge was revived, for the purpose of exhibiting a foreign gentleman in the character of Zanga. The débutant has a good figure and fine countenance; and delivered the text so well that the foreign accent was not often observable. His performance altogether was highly respectable; but it does not seem to us that there is any line in our drama open to him to pursue actor, as well as others who were prepared with | which has not had, and still has, more able entitled the Old Gentleman.

COVENT-GARDEN.

To enable this theatre to carry on successfully, and without accumulating loss, this week it has been open on three nights only; and it is intended to follow the same course till Christmas, for which great attractions are preparing. the author sustained the part of the hero. In repetition. It does him great credit. this performance Mr. Knowles displayed great energy, and was very much applauded by a full and voice refused to execute his conceptions. Miss Ellen Tree played the wife delightfully, and Miss Poole was no less charming in the son.

The Pilot has restored the great popular favourite, T. P. Cooke, to us for a few nights. Captain Boroughcliff, by Meadows, is excel-lently done; and the piece altogether as successful as ever.

a broad and droll burlesque on the melodrame elaborate criticism, observes: school, with a comic prelude, jesting at the de-plorable estate of dramatic literature, and at formance, we will sum up all 'in little.' theatres. tation) by Mr. Yates. There is a good deal of drollery in this prologue; and though we have the Adelphi; and a very laughable affair it is. of spitting two of his adversaries on one sword; of Kemble." and no little fun is occasioned by much of the action being carried on with printed rolls of calico. Thus, O. Smith, after he is slain, unof laughter was the sudden appearance of Yates, as manager, and as Mathews, in the centre of the actors' rehearsing, and squabbling about what they should do. On the whole, we were what they should do. On the whole, we were exceedingly entertained, notwithstanding a little halt on the first night, in consequence of Mrs. was heartily given.

OLYMPIC.

The old gentlenative masters. Cooper's Alonzo and Miss man himself was chastely and ably personated Phillips's Leonora were as well performed as by the author; while Miss Murray performed they could be.

The Forty Thieves has been revived, in a manner likely to pillage the public of its loose much plot in this agreeable piece. The old gent., by getting Angelina's consent to marry him, manœuvres to reconcile and unite her to a more youthful and suitable lover, with whom she has quarreled; which he ultimately effects. The talent most obvious is discrimination; the dialogue is neat, without being pointed, and the acting unambitiously pleasing. Mr. Webster dressed and looked the principal character well, On Monday we attended William Tell, in which and was much applauded on announcing it for audience. In the finer parts there was either CHARLES KEMBLE and his daughter have been not so much discrimination, or his countenance very warmly welcomed in America. Notwithstanding the ravages of the cholera, the New Yorkers rallied to support them. They played twelve nights to an average of 280l.—the box price being 4s. 6d., and the pit 2s. 3d.; the greatest average since the time of Cooke, young Burke's first engagement excepted. The opinions of the New York Evening Post, a paper edited by Bryant the poet, are generally considered as law upon these matters in America; ADELPHI. and we take what that journal says as pretty fair

NEW YORK THEATRICALS.

THE Adelphi has illustrated its heinous career evidence of the public opinion. Of Mr. Kemthis week by the performance of Crimson Crimes, ble's Hamlet, the summing up, after a very

" And now, in dismissing Mr. Kemble's perthe want of encouragement felt by the major did not express our conception of Hamlet, he A committee of lessees, authors, expressed his own with great ability; a rarer actors, fiddlers, &c. meet to discuss the ques- quality than, at first blush, it would appear tion, and call in Mr. Yates, Mr. Laporte, Mr. His school of declamation is not the one we Mathews, O. Smith as Paganini (an admirable have been accustomed to admire; but it is pocaricature), Mr. Reeve, &c. &c., to give them lished, critically studied, and impressive. We their opinion, the first three being imitated (if doubt if our stage has ever before witnessed so we can count his own proper person as one imigallant and the finished gentleman. We think Mr. Kemble's appearance in America will do a seen some objection taken, we do not think that service to the art—that it will raise and refine the good-humoured sketch of Laporte is cal- its style; and if our predispositions are likely culated either to give him pain, or do his to preserve us from imitating what may seem theatre a disservice. On the contrary, by less estimable in the school of which he is now piquing some curiosity about the latter, it is the head, that portion which is sure to be adlikely to promote its interests. At the conclust mired and adopted may correct the abruptness sion of this introduction, the parties adjourn to and elevate the homeliness, sometimes almost see the rehearsal of a genuine melodrame at touching vulgarity, of the intenser manner to which we are wedded; and a system grow out Reeve, as a sanguinary bandit captain, commits of the two, chastening the fiery out-breakings every crime in the calendar, even to the length of Kean with the grace, and ease, and elegance

The same paper thus notices Miss Fanny Kemble's first appearance in Bianca:—
"Miss Fanny Kemble made her first appear-folds a roll, which tells that he is not dead, but ance last evening as Bianca, in Milman's tra-listening to what is said. Another great source gedy of Fazio. The house was fuller of ladies than we have seen it since the season began; but the apprehension of a crowd made it, perthe pit and in several boxes, finding fault with haps, not altogether equal in point of numbers to that on her father's debut, the night before. Never, however, have we seen a more delighted audience, or heard more enthusiastic applause. The part of Bianca affords splendid oppor-Fitzwilliam being taken suddenly ill, and her tunities for an actress of genius,—and Miss part read by Miss Daly, who acquitted herself Kemble made the most of them. It is a chaextremely well in her arduous task. The piece racter of no complexity: from the beginning to is, we believe, by Haynes Bayly. The theatre the end, Bianca is the wife, but the sensitive racter of no complexity: from the beginning to was crammed in every corner, and the applause and the impassioned young wife of Italy. She is the prey, from the outset, of a succession of domestic anxieties: anxious at first that her husband should not look above his fortunes, On Monday, a novelty called, as is now the but be content with poverty, her anxieties custom, a burletta, was produced at this theatre deepen into jealousy and delirium as riches from the pen of Mr. Webster the actor, and pour in upon him so strangely, until they tor-

Dowton volunteered a pun on this—that the joke belonged to the back settlement.

re her to madness, and she dies heart-broken. Every variety of interest and anguish growing out of these situations was expressed by Miss Fanny Kemble with an intensity and truth, never, we believe, yet exhibited by an actress in America-certainly never by one so young. Part of her last act was in the spirit of the finest performances of Kean. When, from the prison of death, she bursts upon the frolicking group, to seek the duke and supplicate for her husband, her wildly laughing shriek—' Ha! ye've been dancing !'-was perfectly appalling; and one of her speeches to Aldabella, even in its whisperings awfully audible, called forth a sudden burst of reiterated shouts, equally complimentary to the powers of the artist and the taste of her applauders. Of the same matchless character was the hoarse and choked tone in which she denounced her husband. The way, too, in which she drops her arms and stands mute and immovable, struck into sudden stoniness by the sound of the death-bell, spoke the blood of Siddons.—The person of Miss Fanny Kemble is short, nearly as short as that of Miss Clara Fisher; but it is well proportioned, and managed with an exquisite grace, in which a foreign air seems native. We doubt whether altogether her bearing and her gesture, even out of an Italian character, would not give one the idea of her being less English than the provincial newspapers, in various parts of Italian. Her face, if not precisely 'what the world calls beautiful,' is beautifully expressive: it is also in perpetual and in eloquent action. Of her voice we cannot speak so favourably; and perhaps its inadequacy would be less frequently apparent under her skilful management, did not the stately and measured enunciation of the Kemble school, especially in the declamatory passages, require a continuous supply of breath, which only great physical power

Both Mr. Kemble and his daughter went through their engagements with nightly increasing popularity. Perhaps Miss Kemble's Julia, in the Hunchback, and her father's Orlando, in As You like it, gave the most un-mingled delight; though the last scene of his Young Mirabel is mentioned as having been admirably impressive. They are now playing with equal success in Philadelphia, although a rival theatre is open, and crowded nightly, to hear a much-praised American tragedian of the name of Forrest, who has just made a great hit there, in a new North American play, upon a South American subject.

The fashionables of New York at present are occupied principally with an Italian opera-house: a company of fifty-two performers arrived there from Italy in the midst of the cholera. An establishment as remote from the centre of New York as Sadler's Wells is from that of London, and about the size, standing, and appearance of the Wells, was taken for them; and the box tickets sold at six and ninepence sterling, and those of the pit for four and six: a whole box, for three months, brought at auction nearly 160l. sterling. They opened to tion nearly 1601. sterling. They opened to about 1400 dollars (3001.). They have an admirable bass, excellent tenor, fine buffo, very good chorus, and superior orchestra; but their best females are not yet come, and those who appeared did not satisfy the audience: still, it is expected they will become very popular. The celebrated old Lorenzo da Ponte, who resides in New York, started the speculation. The poet of the Italian company, when they caught the first sight of the American shores, burst into the following improvisation, which was instantly repeated by the rest in an improvisatorial piece of music :--

"Oh, piacer! oh, vista! oh, giubbilo! Ecco alfin la terra amata, Giunta è l'ora sospirata, Ogni duol bandisca il cor Della giola alziamo il grido, Intoniamo uniti il canto Gloria eterna, eterno vanto A Colombo, a Washington. Già son l'aure che spiriamo, Aure libere, e beate De' tiranni qui fiaccate Son baldanza e crudeltà. Viva ognor gl' Uniti Stati! Vero asil di libertà."

A poet of New York has made better verses of it in English :-

Oh, rapture! oh, vision! oh, voice of delight!
The land we have loved in our dreams is in sight!
And the moment long-sighed for has come, when the heart Away from its temple bids sorrow depart.

Let us breathe, then, together in transport our song To the shores that the voice of our greeting prolong; All glory and triumph, fair land, is thy meed, Which Columbus discovered, and Washington freed! Where could use the seed, ye are two inhale! There is life in the zephyr, and joy in the gale That kisses the soil, or that sweeps from the coast, Where crushed, and for ever, was tyranny's boast.

Oh, union, whose triumph the free heart adores! Asylum of liberty, hail to thy shores!"*

VARIETIES.

Atmospherical Phenomena. - It appears from the country, that very remarkable atmospherical phenomena were seen, both north and south, on the morning of Tuesday week. Fiery meteors and falling-stars (as they are called) issued from the west, and illuminated the heavens in their course, leaving behind them trains of brilliant white. The appearances seem to have been very grand, and to have excited much admiration in the beholders.

Scarpa. - The celebrated physician Scarpa died at an advanced age, on the 31st ult., in

Scott and Cuvier .- It is rather a remarkable coincidence, that these great men were born in the same year; and that public feeling in England and France is now engaged at the same time in raising subscriptions for monuments to their memory.

Professor Bernays, of the London University, has just been made a doctor of philosophy by his native university—Giessen, in the grand duchy of Hesse.

The Indus. - Great beds of coal have been discovered, both near the mouth of the Indus and as high up its course as it is navigable for vessels of any burthen. This is the more remarkable, as preparations are making to navigate the river on a considerable scale by steam.

Cambridge Philosophical Society. - At a meeting on Monday week, Professor Sedgwick, the president of this Society, in the chair, a number of presents were noticed. A communication, by Mr. Green, was laid before the Society, on the laws of the equilibrium of fluids analogous to the electric fluid; and a memoir, by Augustus De Morgan, Esq. of Trinity College, on the general equation of surfaces of the second order. After the meeting, Professor Henslow gave an account of various observations of geology and natural history made in the course of a residence at Weymouth during the past summer; noticing especially the burning cliff, the "dirt bed' among the strata, the remains of fossil trees in a vertical position, and the various "faults," dislocations, and contortions, in the position of the strata.

Prize-Cattle Shows .- Our custom of having prize-cattle shows is now followed in some parts of Germany, and particularly in Bavaria.

The Jews. — A Jewish colony, on an extensive scale, is, it is said, about to be established in Van Diemen's Land.

Animal Weather-glass .- In Germany there will be found, in many country-houses, an amusing application of zoological knowledge for the purpose of prognosticating the weather. Two frogs are kept in a glass jar about 18 inches in height, and 6 inches in diameter, with the depth of 3 or 4 inches of water at the bottom, and a small ladder reaching to the top of the jar. On the approach of the dry weather the frogs mount the ladder; but when wet weather is expected, they descend into the water. These animals are of a bright green.— Anglo-German Advertiser.

An Interesting German Village. - There is near Halberstadt, in the kingdom of Prussia, a village named Ströbeck, where all the inhabitants, boys and girls, are chess-players. They were converted to the game some centuries since by a dignitary of the Cathedral of Halberstadt, who allowed them exemption from imposts as long as they should be winners in this game, and every year a person was sent down to try them. Since the secularisation of the bishopric of Halberstadt, and its union with the kingdom of Prussia, they lost a game, and since that time their immunity ceased, but their predilection for this useful amusement continues .- Ibid.

Matrimony: a Catch. Fire! fire!—What's the matter?
I've a burning at the heart:
'Tis the raging flame—desire;
Haste and quench it—heal the smart! Stony—stony—flinty-hearted!
What are all the maids about?
Where's the engine—matrimony?—
That will quickly put it out. Lines addressed to Susan. By Ralph Rigmarole, Esq.

Thy lover's inconstant,
And 'tis in this manner;
Yes! hear him confess it,
He sues you—Sues-Anna. But this is not all!

He—alas! 'tis too tru —

The whole of the sex Thinks it nothing to Sue. Yet the worst is to come! For no heart he e'er took, But he soon left the fair one, The fond one-for-Sook.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Mr. Murray is preparing for speedy publication a new monthly illustrative work, consisting of Views of the most remarkable Places mentioned in the Bible, called Landscape Illustrations of the Old and New Testament. The Drawings, by J. M. W. Turner, R.A. are copied from original and authentic Sketches taken on the spot by Artists and Travellers; and the Plates are to be engraved by william and Edward Finden, and other eminent Artists under their superintendence.

An Historical and Descriptive Account of the Coast of Sussex, including Brighton, Hastings, Worthing, Arundel, Goodwood, &c. with a particular Description of the Royal Pavilion, &c. by J. D. Parry, M.A.

The Invisible Gentleman, by the Author of "Chartley the Fatalist."

the Fatalist."

the Fatalist."

Lights and Shadows of German Life.

Mortal Life, and the State of the Soul after Death, conformable to Divine Revelation, &c.

A New Exposition of the Apocalypse, so far as the Prophecies are fulfilled, by Dr. Park.

Pictures of Private Life.

A Memoir of Sir Thomas Gresham, with an Abstract of his Will, and a Sermon preached at the Commemoration, by the Rev. W. M. Blencowe.

Mr. Taylor's Life of the Poet Cowper, now completed in one volume.

The third Number of the Parent's Cabinet of Amuse-

The third Number of the Farent's Caoline of Admissement and Instruction; with Harry the Shrimper; Geography, No. I.; Chat in the Play-room.

The Tropical Agriculturist.

The Charteged History of the Twelve Great Livery Companies of London, principally collected from their [•] We observe that our contemporary of the Sunday Times has had a communication from America very simi-lar to this, which want of room prevented our inserting last week; but as the subject is interesting to dramatic folks, and tells us news of persons of public note, we have pleasure in printing the intelligence.

Grants and Records, by William Herbert, Librarian to the Corporation of London.

The Journey of an Invalid from Calcutta through the Straits of Sunda to Van Diemen's Land.

A View of the Early Parisian Greek Press, including the Lives of the Stephani or Estiennes, and Notices of the other contemporary Greek Printers of Paris, &c. by the Rev. W. Parr Greswell.

The mylicidal Memoirs in Vol. XVII. of the Appual

Rev. W. Parr Greswell.

The principal Memoirs in Vol. XVII. of the Annual Blography and Obluary, are announced to be those of Sir Richard Bickerton, Crabbe, Sir W. Grant, Bishop Huningford, Lord Henry Paulet, Liveraeege, Dr. A. Clarke, Sir William Bolton, Muzio Clementi, Sir J. Mackintosh, Munden, Admiral Freeman, Dr. Walsh, Sir A. Cochrane, Charles Butler, Sir Walter Scott, Bishop Turner, Miss Anna Maria Porter, Earl of Donoughmore, Sir Albert Pell, Mr. Daniel Sykes, Sir Israel Pellew, Jereny Hentham, Mr. John Syine, Lord Tenterden, Sir John Leslie, &c. &c.

Mr. Hurst announces, in monthly volumes, the Dramatic Library, comprising all the Standard Dramas in the English Language, with Remarks, Critical and Blomanical Library, and Company of the Company of t graphical.

The Dramatised Works of Sir Walter Scott, Bart., uniform with the Dramatic Library, are also announced.

Mr. Atkinson announces a second series of the Chameieon.

A New-year Book, named the Epigrammatist's Annual, to consist of an original epigram for every day of next year, is also promised.

Count Pecchio's Observations on England, by an Exile, Count Pecchio's Observations on England, by an Exile, translated from the Italian. America, a Moral and Political Sketch, by Achilles Murat, son of the late King of the Two Sicilies. Goethe drawn from near personal intercourse, Falk's posthumous work, translated by Sarah Austin.

A Collection of the most approved Examples of Doors, from Ancient and Modern Buildings in Greece and Italy, expressly measured and delineated for this work, preceded by an Essay on the Usages of the Ancients respecting Doors, &c. by T. L. Donaldson, Architect.

America and the Americans, by a Citizen of the World.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

America and the Americans, by a Citizen of the World.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Heath's Book of Beauty for 1833, with 19 Portralts, 31s. morocco, elegant; royal 8vo. India proofs, 21. 12s. 63s.; before letters, 41. 4s.—Otterbourne, a Story of the English Marches, by the Author of "Derwentwater," 3 vols. post 8vo. 11. 11s. 6d. bds.—Chambers' History of Scotland, 2 vols. fcp. 15s. cloth.—Family Library, Vol. XXXVI. Six Months in the West Indies, 5s. cloth.—The Waning Church, 12moc 6s. bds.—Simeon's Works, second portion, Vols. VII. to XI. Proverbs to Matthew, 22. 10s. cloth.—Hayward's Tenterden's Acts, with the new Orders, 6c. 12mo. 5s. bds.—Currle's Burn's Works, diamond edition, 18mo. 7s. 6d. cloth; 9s. satin.—Statutes at Large, in 4to. Vol. XII. Part 4, 2 and 3 Will. IV. II. 1s. 6d. bds.—Sprague on Revivals of Religion, with Introductory Essay, 12mo. 5s. bds.—Moth.—The Young Christian, by J. Abbott, 12mo. 5s. bds.—Memoirs of Louis XVIII. written by Himself, 2 vols. post 8vo. 21s. bds.—Simpson's Christian Directory, 24mo. 2s. bds.—Hansard's Debates, (Third Series,) Vol. XII. 4th Vol. Sess. 1831-32, royal 8vo. 11. 10s.; II. 13s. 6d. bds.—Sprague on Part I. plain, 4s.; coloured, 8s.—Nicolas' Report of the Claim to the Earldom of Devon, 12s. bds.—Arnold's Thucydides, Vol. II. 8vo. 14s. bds.—Gurney's Sermons and Prayers, 18mo. 1s. Cd. cloth.—Paris, or the Book of the Hundred-and-One, 3 vols. post 8vo. 21s. 6ds.—Morison's Portraiture of Modern Scepticism, royal 18mo. 4s. cloth.—Powell on Optics, 8vo. 10s. 6d. dos.—Morison's Portraiture of Modern Scepticism, royal 18mo. 4s. cloth.—Powell on Optics, 8vo. 10s. 6d. dos.—Morison's Portraiture of Modern Scepticism, royal 18mo. 4s. cloth.—Powell on Optics, 8vo. 10s. 6d. dos.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

November.	Thermometer.		Barometer.
Thursday 15	From	42.	to	49.	29.72	to.	29.98
Friday 16		33.	• •	47.	30.09	• •	30.22
Saturday · · 17	• • • • •	31.	• •	45.	30.30		30.25
Sunday 18		33.	• •	45.	30-09	• •	30.00
Monday · 19		34.		45.	29.90	• •	29.82
Tuesday · · 20	• • • • •	37.	• •	48.	29.73		29.64
Wednesday 21		39.	••	48.	29.59	• •	29.55

Prevailing wind, S.E. Except the 16th and 17th, generally cloudy; a little rain in the evening of the 16th, Rain fallen, 2 of an inch.

CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

To Mr. De Lolme we beg to answer, that the novelty of his plan in teaching the French language (see Review in our last No.) by presenting the words, illustrated by phrases, in the order most fit to be learnt in society, &c. meets with our sincere approbation; and if we did not say so, it was only on account of our custom of not going into details on all occasions in such a publication as the Lit. Garatte.

into details on all occasions in such a publication as and Lit. Gazette.

2. The third volume of the Life of Dr. Burney, not having been completed till Thursday, we have deferred our further review till it is published. Other novelties also reached us too late in the week. We want the authenticity of the Life of Louis XVIII. to be verified. Faulkner's Tour, and Sheridan Knowles's Tales, in our next.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S PORTRAIT,
by Sir Thomas Lawrence.
His Majeaty has been graciously pleased to grant to Moon, Boyt, and Girares the loan of the above celebrated Picture, from which a splendid Line Engraving, by J. H. Robinson, is now far advanced, and will be speechly inside in a siyle worthy of the house, No.6, Pail Mall, or at Mr. Moon's, 30, Threadneedle Street, by whom, as well as by all Printeellers in the United Kingdom, Subscribers' Names are received. As the Engraving is on copper, it is necessary for Names to be entered to insure Proofs. Price, to subscribers, It. Is.; Proofs, 31, 2s.; India, 34, 2s.; before letters, 44, 4s.
The paragraph beneath is from the Times of Nov. 16, 1833:—
"Yesterday evening the members of the Gity of London Artist's Society held their first meeting for the season at the London Collec-house. The intention of this Society is merely to afford artists and amateurs an opportunity of assembling together for they are brought more unequivocally under public notice. Many specimens of the talents of the members were last night they are brought more unequivocally under public notice. Many specimens of the talents of the members were last night observable in the room; but as any thing like destiled criticism on such an occasion would be out of place, we will merely an nounce that a proof of an engraved portait of Sir Walter Scott, from a painting by Lawrence, excited general attention and nelsa admiration. The portrait, we understand, was executed about thirteen years since, though it was not generally known that our great portrait painter had ever had the author of Wavefley for a sitter, and nuch regret has frequently been expressed at the supposed omission. In comparing this portrait of familiar, one is struck with the immense apperiority of Lawrence over all his competitors in the power which peosesses of sizing upon and conveying to his canvas the most intelectual expression of his subjects. The admirers of the novelist will be pleased to fi

This day is published, price 2s. 6d. the Eighth Part of ANDSCAPE ILLUSTRATIONS of the PRUSE and POETICAL WORKS of SIR WALTER SCOTT, centralining Four beautiful Views by Roberts, Harding, Daniell, and Prout; a Portrait of Rowens, by Stone; and Dryburgh Abbey, a Poem, by C. Swain.

Chapman and Hall, 186, Strand.

On the ist of December will be published, price &s. &d.

Part IV. of

THE BYRON GALLERY; a series of splendid Historical Plates to illustrate the Poetical Works of Lord Byron; beautifully engraved from Drawings and anintings by the most celebrated Artists, and adapted, by their size and excellence, to bind up with, and emb. llish every edition of Lord Byron's Works.

A limited number of Proofs have been taken on royal 4toprice, on piain paper, &s.; India, 7s. &d.; India, before the letters, 10s. &d.

Published by Smith. Elder. and Co. Combill.

Published by Smith, Elder, and Co. Cornhill.

THE PERUSAL of NEW PUBLICA

TIONS.
On the recommencement of the Fublishing Season, it may be necessary to inform the Nobility and Gentry, that all New Books may be obtained for Perusal, in Town or Country, immediately on Public Lairary, Conduit Street, Hanover Square.
Terms of Subscription and Catalogues of the English, Prench, Italian, and German Books contained in this extensive Library, may be had on application to Messrs. Saunders and Otley, Conduit Street, Hanover Square.

TO the SUBSCRIBERS to the ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA.—That portion of the last pars of the Encyclopædia Britannica, which was shipped by the "Adelaide," to be published in London on the lat of the present month, has been so much injured by the fire which broke out on board that vessel, that some days must elapse before the damaged parts can be replaced; but the Proprietors beg to assure the Subscribers that no time shall be lost in having them supplied.

supplied.

Bdinburgh, Nov. 5, 1832.

Mr. Collins's New Print.

December the 1st will be published, by Francis Collins,
53, Great Marlborough Street,

THE FISHERMAN'S DEPARTURE;

Jainted by W. Collins, R.A. and engraved in the line manner by J. Pheips.

To be had of Messrs. Colnaghl, Son, and Co. Pall Mali East; Messrs. Moon, Boys, and Graves; Molteno and Graves; and al Printsellers. Frints, It 1.e.; Franch proofs, $2. Set, India ditto.

84, High Holborn, removed from Red'Lion Street.

TWENTY PER CENT DISCOUNT allowed off all Books as soon as published.

J. T. Cox has the following on hand:—M'Culloch's Commercial Dictionary, 21. Loudon's Gardening, 22.; Ditto Agriculture, 21.; Ditto Piants, 21. 12.; Qualin's Anstomy, 14. 6d.;
Turner's Chemistry, 17.2; Thomson's Material Medica, 122.;
Byton's Werrier, 4s.; Lardner's Cyclopedia, 51. Editor's Cyclopedia, 51. Editor's Cern-Law Rhymes, 4s. sells

55. (Authority) Corn-Law Rhymes, 4s. sells

55. (Authority) Corn-Law Rhymes, 4s. sells

56. (Authority) Corn-Law Rhymes, 4s. sells

57.; Pictureque Annual, 17s.;

Shatapeare 4s. L. Keepaske, 17s.; Pictureque Annual, 17s.;

Literary Souvenir, 10s.; A mulet, 1us.; Porget hie Not, 10s.

N.B. A Cassiogue gratia.

On the 30th inst. (continued Monthly) No. IV. of MAJOR'S CABINET GALLERY of PICTURES; containing three Engravings and three Descriptions by Alian Cunningham, viz. A. Caracci, St. John the Wilderness. by Worthington — Ferdinand Bel, "Datch Lady with Fruit," E. Smith—and Gainsborough, Clanderspe, "The Market Waggon," by W. R. Smith, new exhibiting in

This day is published, Part V. price 11. 1s. with English and German Letter-Bress, of WEBER'S ANATOMICAL ATLAS, containing Two Bodies of Ligaments, one exhibiting an Anterior, and the other a Posterior View. In addition to the Two Skeletons, not only are all the Ligaments exhibited isdividually, but also all the principal Joints are displayed, in highly instructive Sections. Plates 94 to 28—the Norves of the Neck and Chest, the Male and Female Urinary and Generative Organs, and the Breast.

Monday next, the 20th Instant, will be published.

Part I. whole sheet demy, in boards, containing 33 Plates, price
18. 124. 6d. with English and German Letter-press, of
The Anatomy of the Horse. By Dr. E. F.

Gurlt, Professor in the Veterinary College at Berlin. Translated from the original German, by J. Willimett, Member of the University of Berlin, &c. &c.; and dedicated, by permission, to Edward Coleman, Eug. Professor of the Veterinary College, London.

To work will be completed in Two Parts, the last being in great for wachness.

A large Assortment of Articulated Skeletons Skulls, &c. &c. at very reasonable Prices.

Just ready, A New Catalogue of the extensive and inte-resting Collection of Anatomical Preparations in Wax, which may be had gratis.

A. Schloss, Foreign Bookseller, 103, St. Martin's Lane, Charing Cross.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

The Child's Own Book.
Embellished with Three Hundred Cuts, price 7s. 6d. in fancy boards, or 8s. 6d. bound,

THE CHILD'S OWN BOOK. The 2d

edition.

London: Frinted for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside; N. Hailes, Piccadilly; Bowders and Kirby, Ozford Street; R. Griffia and Co. Glasgow; and Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh.

Where may be had,
The Girl's Own Book, with 120 Cuts, price
4s. 6d. in fancy boards, or 5s. 6d. bound.

Published by Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Maria Lane, London.
In 18mo. price 4s. 6d. elegantly half-bound, with a beautifully engraved Frontispiece, Vignette Title, and a variety of Engravings,

THE INFANT ANNUAL; or, a Mother's Offering, for 1833, principally intended for Children from four to ten years of age.

In 18mo. 4s. 6d. in fancy half-binding, with Illustrations,
The Excitement; or, a Book to induce Young
People to read, for 1833, containing remarkable appearances in Nature, Signal Preservations, and such incidents as are particularly fitted to arrest the youthful mind.

III. In 12mo: price 5s.

The Young Christian; or, a Familiar Illustration of the Principles of Christian Duty. By Jacob Abbett. IV. In 18mo. price 8s.

A Mother's First Thoughts. By the Author of " Faith's Telescope."

Cheapest Picture of London ever published. Price only 4s. 6d. in morocco, with gilt edges (being, without a single exception, the chespest "Picture of London" ever pub-Lished),

LONDON; or, the Stranger's Directory to all the Places of Public Amusement, Exhibitions, &c. in London and its Environ; with a beautiful Engraving of each, by G. W. Bonner.

"This little work may with justice be called 'London in Miniature.' It is so useful and elegant a volume, and so cheep, that it must shortly superside all the 'Pictures of London' hitherto in use."—Littrary Guardian.

Published for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 298, Regent Street, and 51, Paternoster Row.

In 1 thick vol. 8ve. price 20s. boards, SYSTEM of MATERIA MEDICA and PHARMACY, including Translations of the Edin-London, and Dublin Pharmacoporias.

By JOHN MURRAY, M.D. &c. &c.

Sixth edition, adapted to the present state of Chemical and Medical Science,

By JOHN MURRAY, M.D.

Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, Lecturer on Chemistry, Member, and formerly Fresident of the Reyal Physical Society, &c. &c.

Adam Black, Edinburgh; and Lengman and Co. London.

Management of Plants and Bulbs in Rooms. Fifth edition, 16s. cloth, boards,

WEET'S GREENHOUSE and HOTHOUSE MANUAL; or, Plain Instructions for the Cultivation of all Plants and Shrubs, Mixture of Soils, &c.
By R. SWEET, F. L.S. Practical Nurseryman.

"It may be considered as the ultimatum by the British gar-ener."—Gardener's Mag.

Sweet's Hortus Britannicus; a Catalogue of every known Plant, both Foreign and British, arranged according to Natural Orders, with the colour of the flowers, habit, &c. &c. Scond edition, 21.

"It is ccertainly the most complete and useful catalogue that has yet appeared."—Genlieman's Mag.

James Ridgway, Piccadilly; and through every Bookseller in the Empire.

Price 3s. boards,

Y R I C L E A V E S.

By CORNELIUS WEBBE.

"There are few writers of the present day who are in the enjoyment of a more poetical spirit. The poems on the Seasons are priced for Nov. I.

Specialor, Nov. I.

T. Griffiths, 13, Wellington Street, Strand,

Of whom may be had.

Original MS. Sermons, on any occasion.

"The fuvourile Annual."

In 4to. price 31s. handsomely bound, containing
Thirty-six highly-finished Engravings,

FISHER'S DRAWING-ROOM SCRAP-BOOK for 1833, with Poetical Illustrations
By L. E. L.

"The great popularity of the Scrap-Book for 1838 has rightly encouraged the publication of another volume, still more pleas-incity enriched with interesting works of art, and still more beau-tifully illustrated by the pen of the poet."—Literary Gazette. London: Fisher, Son, and Co.

Svo. 18s.

OURNAL of a PASSAGE from the PACIFIC to the ATLANTIC, cressing the Andes in the Northern Provinces of Peru, and descending the River Maranon, nazon. By HENRY LISTER MAW, Lieut. R.N. John Murray, Albemarle Street.

In 3 vols. post 8vo. PARIS; or, the Book of the Hundred-and-One; being translations from the celebrated French work, Le Livre des Cent-et-Un, now in course of publication at Paris, and to which many of the most distinguished French writers have already contributed.

Whittaker, Tracher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

In an 8vo. vol. price only &c. 6d.

THE MAXIMA CHARTA of 1832; comprising the new Reform Acts for England, Ireland, and Scotland. Also, the Statutes which describe the Boundaries. With Explanatory Notes.

With Explanatory Notes.

In 1 thick vol. 8v. with numerous Plates, bound in cloth, 18t.

Biographical Sketches of the Reform Ministers; with a History of the passing of the Reform Bills, and a view of the State of Europe from the close of 1811. By William Jones, M.A. Author of the "History of the Waldenses," "Continuation, M. A. Author of the "History of the Waldenses," "Continuation, and times and Smellett's England," "Russell's Modern Europe."

London: Fisher, Son, and Co.; and all Booksellers.

FAMILY MANUAL and SERVANTS'

"ANTHUE MACANAGE COMMENT OF THE METERS OF TH gestions on the

The Arcana of Science for 1832, price 5s. Printed for John Limbird, 148, Strand.

Pablished under the Direction of the Committee of generature and Education, appointed by the Society for P Christian Knowledge.

ORIGINAL FAMILY SERMONS, No. 1. containing Pive Sermons. Price 1s. To be continued menthly.

The Bible Spelling-Book.

Part I. Words and Sentences of One and Two Syllables, price 4d.

Part II. Words and Sentences of Three, Four, and Five Syllables, write 4d.

price 4d.

The Two Parts bound together in cloth boards, is. The Bible Lesson Book.

Part I. The Old Testament, with Engravings, price 4d.

Part II. The New Testament, with Engravings, price 4d.

The Two Parts bound together in cloth boards, 1s.

Every Word and Sentence contained in each of these little Works is taken from the Bible.

Sadoc and Miriam. A Jewish Tale. Price

The Saturday Magazine, price One Penny, published under the Direction of the Committee, is sold by all Booksellers and Newsmen in Town and Country.

London: John W. Parker, 445, West Strand,

In 8vo. 15e. OBSERVATIONS on the NATURE and DESERVATIONS on the NATURE and TREATMENT of INFLAMMATION; being the 2d edition, very considerably enlarged.

By J. H. JAMES,
One of the Surgeons of the Devon and Exeter Hospitals.
London: Printed for Renshaw and Rush, 356, Strand, Publishers of the Weekly Medical Journal, price 6d.; and Upham of Exeter.

In 8vo. price 10s. 6d. boards,

SERMONS on Miscellaneous Subjects, preached before the University of Oxford.
By the Rev. EDWARD HURTON, D.D.
Regius Professor of Divinity, and Canon of Christ Church.
London: Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall; and sold by J. H.
Parker, Oxford.

American Journal of Geology, &c.

Just imported by Treuttl and Co. 30, Soho Square, price 21. 64. each,

THE MONTHLY AMERICAN

JOURNAL of GEOLOGY and NATIONAL OF JURNAL of GEOLOGY and NATURAL SCIENCE, for May and June, exhibiting the present state and progress of Knowledge in Zoology, Botany, Mineralogy, Comparative Anatomy, Chemistry, Meteorology, Physical Natural Agenta, and the Antiquities and Languages of the Invitance of this Continent. Conducted by G. W. FEATHERSTONHAUGH, Esq. F.G.S.L. Member of the American Philos. Soc. of Philadelphia, &c. &c.

In 8vo. 9s. boards, the Third and concluding Part of LEMENTS of SURGERY.

By ROBERT LISTON,
Fellow of the R. C. of Surgeons in London and Edinburgh, Surgeon to the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, Lecturer on Surgery, &c.

gery, &c.
Parts I. and II. of the same work, 9s. each.
Printed for Longman and Co. London; and Black, Edinburgh.

In 8vo. 15t. boards, Vol. XVII. of

TRANSACTIONS of the MEDICAL and CHIRURGICAL NOCIETY of LONDON, comprehending a mass of valuable and important Papers on Medicine and Surgery. With Engravings.
London: Longman, Rese. Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman; of whom the former volumes may be had.

The Friends' Annual.
In foolscap 8vo. price 7s. 6d. neatly bound, THE AURORA BOREALIS, a Literary Annual.

Edited by MEMBERS of the SOCIETY of FRIENDS.

Illustrated by Two beautifully engraved Plates.

Charles Tilt, 86, Fleet Street, London; and Charles Empson, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

*Christmas Presents, Being a Collection of Facetim, &c. for 1833.

CRUIKSHANK'S COMIC ALBUM,
First Series; being a Collection of Humorous Tales, with upwards of Sixty Illustrations, price only 6s. in silk, with gilt edges.

"There is enough fun in this elegant little volume to dispel all the blue devils in Christendom."—Courier.

Nor can it fail to draw forth many a hearty laugh from both young and old."—Globe.

Cruikshank's Comic Album. Second Series, with upwards of Sixty Illustrations, price 7s.

"In this unique little volume will be found an admirable burlesque on the 'Unknown Tongues,' in Cruikshank's happlest vcin. This alone is worth the price of the work."—Morning Post.

"a" The two volumes may now be had, uniformly bound, price 13s.

111. Facetim; a Collection of Droll Stories, with 190 Illustrations, by Robert Cruikshank. 2 vols. gilt edges, price 12s.

rice 12s.
"A complete encyclopedia of fun and humour."—Observer,
Published for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 226, Regent Street,
and 51, Paternoster Row.

THE GENTLEMAN in BLACK! with warlous characteristic Robes, from Patterns farnished by Mr. George Cruikshank, and cut out by Thomson. "Our here will be readily recognized as a lawyer, holding a high official situation in this country. The likeness is undeniable."—Gobbe.

high official situation in this substitution and his company will be eagerly sought for."—Atheneum.

Published for W. Kidd by James Gilbert, 228, Regent Street, and $1, Paternoster Row.

Architecture and Building.
In 4to. price 12s. with Twenty-six Engravings, TREATISE on ARCHITECTURE and BUILDING, from the Encyclopædia Britannica. The 7th edition.

By WILLIAM HOSKING, Esq.

Adam Black, Edinburgh; and Simpkin and Marshall, London.

In 8vo. price 10s. 6d. boards, the 3d edition of ERMONS on various Subjects.

By the late Rev. THOMAS RENNELL, B.D.

Vicar of Kensington, Prebendary of South Grantham, and Chaplain to the late Lord Bishop of Salisbury.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mail.

With a Map, 5s.

THE FAMILY LIBRARY, No. XXXVI.

It contains Six Months in the West Indies, by Henry Nelson Coleridge, M.A.

No. XXXV. Life of Peter the Great.

No. XXXIV. Lives of Scottish Worthies,

No. XXXIII. Natural Magic, by Sir David

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

DE RAYO; or, the Haunted Priory. A Dramatic Remance.
W. Kenneth, Dramatic Repository, Bow Street, Covent Garden.

Professor Scholesied's Æschylus.
In 8vo. price 12s. boards, the 2d edition of SCHYLI TRAGEDIÆ SEPTEM.
Cum Fragmentis et Indicibus. Recensult suasque

alas adjecit
JACOBUS SCHOLEFIELD, M.A.
Coll. S.S. Trin. nuper Socius et Graccarum Literarum
Professor Regius.
Cambridge: Pinted for J. and J. J. Deighton; and J., G., and F. Rivington, London.

Constant F. Rivington, London.

Of whom may be had,

Euripidis Tragcediæ priores quatuor. Edidit

Ricardus Porson, A.M. Recensuit J. Scholefield. Editlo secunda, 8vo. 14s.

Now ready, complete, in 2 vols. 8vo. with fine Portrait, engraved by Finden, from an original Painting by Sir H. Raeburn, Maps, &c.

IFE of SIR DAVID BAIRD, Bart.

from his private Papers and Correspondence, in the possession of Lady Baird, including numerous Letters of the Duke of Weilington, the Marquess of Weilesley, Lords Melville and Castlereagh, Sir John Moore, and other distinguished Characters.

Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street (late Colburn and Bentley).

8, New Burlington Street.

Mr. Bentley (late Colburn and Bentley), has just published the following New Works:—

In 8 vols. post 8ve.
T T E R B O U R N E; or, the Early Days of Hotspur.
By the Author of "Derwentwater."

Visit to Germany and the Low Countries, in 1829, 30, 31. By Sir A. B. Faulkner. 2 vels.

The String of Pearls.

By G. P. R. James, Esq. 2 small vols. 2vo. price 15s.

"Possessing all the attraction of the Arabian Nights' Enter-tainments."—Morning Post.

Companion to the Novels of Sir Walter Scott.
In 2 small vols. printed and bound uniformly with the Waverley Series,
The History of Scotland,

from the Barliest Period to the Present Time. By Robert Chambers, Author of "The Picture of Scotland."

The Spanish Novelists. By Thomas Roscoe,

Eq.
A Series of Tales of Life and Adventure, illustrating the Manners and Oustoms, at different Periods of Spanish history. Complete in 3 vols. handsomely bound in cloth, price 37s.
"The tales are all of them remarkable, and many of them admirable."—New Monthly.

Wild Sports of the West.

By the Author of "Stories of Waterloo." 2 vols. Svo. Plates.
"One of the most amusing and soul-stirring works—to the portuman at least—ever published."—Buffe Life.

VII. Geraldine Hamilton. A Tale. 2 vols. "The rare beauty and tenderness of this story can hardly fail to find its way to the hearts of readers in general, more especially to those of the softer sex, to whom the interest peculiarly addresses itself."—Sun.

The East India Sketch-Book. 2 vols. "We recommend the perusal of this work to every cadet and voyager about to proceed to that alluring country—India."—Courier.

And on Tuesday next, in 8 vols-The Buccaneer.

Also, just ready, Recollections of a Chaperon. Edited by Lady Dacre. 8 vols.

II.
The 4th Vol. of the English Translation of Madame Junot's Memoirs, containing the 7th and 8th Vols. of the Paris edition.

On Dec. 1st, complete in 1 vol. small Sve. neatly bound and embelished, price 62.

Fleetwood. By Godwin.

With a New Introduction by the Author, forming the 294 Vol. of the * Standard Novels.*

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Published on the 1st of every Month, price Two Shillings,

MAGAZINE. THE BRITISH

RELIGIOUS AND ECCLESIASTICAL INFORMATION.

The British Magazine forms a Monthly Register of useful Information for the Clergy and Parochial Authorities, and a complete Biblical, Ecclesiastical, and Literary Miscellary of Religion and Morals for Churchmen and Families, combining the several provinces of a Magazine, a Review, and an Historical Register.

Vol. I. price 12s. 6d. cloth boards, is now ready.

The First Volume being now published, an opportunity is presented to such of the Clergy and Members of the Church of England as have not yet become Subscribers, to commence the Work; but as several of the Numbers are nearly out of print, to secure perfect Sets, an early application is necessary.

No. X. will be published on the 1st of December.

It will contain, among many curious and valuable Articles, by eminent and learned Writers, both Divines and Laymen, the following original Papers:-

CHURCH of St. MARTIN, CANTERBURY, (Accompanied by a beautiful Engraving);

ON CHURCH REFORM-ON THE ENDOWMENTS OF THE CHURCH-STATE OF RELIGION IN RUSSIA.

NOTICES OF THE OLDEN TIME,
and Antiquarian Researches, in Extracts from original Papers,
and Antiquarian Researches, in Extracts from original Papers,
the Condition of the Poor;

SACRED POETRY:

REVIEWS and NOTICES of NEW BOOKS;

CLERICAL TRIALS, &c. comprising Proceedings in the Courts of Law and Parliament, on matters of Ecclesiastical interest;

CORRESPONDENCE, on subjects highly interesting, raluable, and useful to the Clergy, Scholar, Antiquarian, Landowner, Magistrate, County Gentleman, Parochial Officers, and Religious and Benevolent World; Barbs, Friendly Societies, the Allotment System, Commission-craft Religious and BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES; thereto, State of the Dioceses, &c. &c.

Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, King's Coilege, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, America, Prusias, &c.

ECCLESIASTICAL INTELLIGENCE;
Preferments, Clerical Appointments, Ordinations, Clergy deceased, sliphabetically arranged in Tables; Marriages and Births;

EVENTS of each MONTH, arranged under COUNTIES, nfined to matters relating to the Clergy, the Church, and the LIST of NEW BOOKS and ANNOUNCEMENTS; MISCELLANEOUS INTELLIGENCE; State of the Funds, London Markets, &c. &c.

* The Proprietors will continue to bestow on it every care and pains, and will spare no expense to render it useful and interesting to their numerous readers, trusting that the best interests of the country may be promoted by its circulation. Other arrangements have also been made, so as further to improve it in attraction; and such exertions are in progress, as will make it yield to no periodical publication in the Kingdom.

The Volume contains 640 octavo pages, and either that or the Numbers (which are published on the First of every month), may be had of all Booksellers, Stationers, and Newsman. London: John Turrill, 250, Regent Street; and Mr. Smith, 12, Berners Street, to whom Communications for the Editor (post-paid), Books for Review, and Advertisements, are to be directed; Parker, Oxford; Grant, Cambridge.

Messrs. Saunders and Otley have just published the following interesting Works:—

RECORDS of TRAVELS, in Turkey, Greece, &c. in the Years 1889, 30, 31; and of a Tour in the Black Sea with the Capitan Pasha.
By ADOLPHUS SLADE, Eq.
In 2 vols. 8vo. Plates.

Memoirs of Louis XVIIIth. Written by Himself. 2 vols. post 8vo.

Characteristics of Women. By Mrs. Jameson. "Two truly delightful volumes; the most charming of all the works of a charming writer."—Blackwood,

In 8vo. — Patacheous.

In 8vo. — IV.

In 10 your ce 16s. bound,

Mr. Lodge's Peerage for 1833.

The new edition, considerably augmented, and corrected to the present date.

"A work which corrects all errors of former works."—Times.

Bellegarde; the Adopted Indian Boy. A

Golden Legends; containing the Bracelet, the Locket, and the Signet Ring. 3 vols. post 8ro.
British and Foreign Public Library, Conduit Street.

At this extensive Establishment, the perusal of all New Publications, English and Foreign, may be obtained in Town or Country. Terms on application.

History and Romance. In 2 vols. post 8vo. price 16s. THE SIEGE of MAYNOOTH; or, Romance in Ireland.

"The times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die;
But now, they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools."

James Ridgway, Piccadilly; and through every Bookseller in the Empire.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

Flower Garden, Fruit Cultivator, &c.

OTICE.—The List of Subscribers intended OTICE.—The List of Subscribers intended to accompany the splendid Work describing the Gardens and Grounds of Woburn Abbey, preparing for publication early in 1833, under the Patronage of their Graces the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, will be closed after Dec. 31, and the Frices named in the Prospectures (which mast still be had gratis of the Publisher, James Ridgway), will be raised on publication.

Subscribers' Names will continue for exceived by the Author, J. FORBEN, Head Gardener, Woburn Abbey, Bedfordshire.

James Ridgway, Piccadilly: and through every Bookseller in the Empire.

In the course of publication, and continued at intervals, neatly printed, uniform with Lardner's Cyclopædia, Family Library, &c. price 6s. per volume, cloth boards,

THE LADIES' FAMILY LIBRARY.

The DADIES FAMILY IMPROVES

The object of which is to furnish a series of volumes, to suit the taste and interest the feelings of women.

By Mrs. CHILD,

Author of "The Mother's Book," "Child's Own Book," &c. &c. Vols. I. and II. may be had, comprising the Biographies of Madame de Stael and Madame Roland, Lady Russell and Mad. Guyon.

Guyon. Richard J. Kennett, 59, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields; and of all Booksellers.

S, New Burlington Street.

OHRAB the HOSTAGE.

oh The Public are informed, that the new edition of this last work by Mr. Morier, Author of "Hajji Baba," will be ready for delivery on Thursday next, 20th instant.

Orders for the above, which should be forwarded immediately, will be executed by all respectable Booksellers in the United Kingdom. Agents for Scotland, Messrc. Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh; and for Ireland, Mr. John Cumming, Dublin.

On the 1st of December,

A POPULAR GUIDE to the OBSERVATION of NATURE; or, Hints of Inducement to the Study of Natural Productions and Appearances, in their Connexions and Relations.
By ROBERT MUDIE,
Author of "The British Naturalist," &c.
This Volume forms the 77th of Constable's Miscellany.

II.

The fourth edition, in 2 vols. 8vo.

The Domestic Manners of the Americans. By Mrs. Trollope. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

New Novels,

Just ready for publication by Edward Bull, New Public Subscription Library, 26, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

HE INVISIBLE GENTLEMAN. By the Author of "Chartley the Fatalist," the "Robber," &c. In 8 vols. II.

Lights and Shadows of German Life. In

Works just published, 111

Our Island; comprising Forgery, a Tale; and the Lunatic, a Tale.

Lives of Banditti and Robbers in all Parts of the World. By C. MacCarlane, Esq. Author of "Constantinople in 1829." In 2 vols. with 16 Plates.

Records of My Life. By the late John Taylor, Eq. Author of "Monsieur Tonson." In 8 vols. 8vo. with Portrait.

Dec. 1st, Fisher, Son, and Co. will publish

SELECT LIBRARY, Vol. VII.

Memoirs of the Life, Writings, and Character of the late John Mason Good, M.D.

By OLINTHUS GREGORY, LI., D.

Second edition, cloth boards, 6g.

Vol. VI. lately published, was Vol. I. of Lives of eminent Missionaries. By John

Carne, Esq., the able author of "Letters from the Esst," has, "Mr. Carne, the able author of "Letters from the Esst," has recently published a Life of Eliot, &c. which, though loosely written, shews so much of heart and good feeling, as well as of diligent research, that we are sure it will be very popular."—Quarterly Review.

The National Portrait Gallery, Part XIIV. containing Portraits and Memoirs of Lord Palmerston, Sir Thos. Trowbridge, and Jeremy Bentham, Esq. Imperial, India proofs, 5c.; plain, 3c. 6d. 111.

The Imperial Magazine, No. XII. price ls. embellished with a View of the City of Londonderry, and containing the usual variety of interesting and original articles.

Baines's History of the County Palatine of Lancaster, embellished with a Portralt of the celebrated Sir R. Arkwright; and the first Plate of a series of Engravings portraying the rich collection of Roman Antiquities in the possession of Robert Haldane Bradshaw, Esq. M.P.

Captain Robert Elliot's Views in the East, No. XIX. Contents: Cave of Elephanta; Tomb of Ibrahim Padshah; and the Fortress of Dowlutabad.

Part XX. will conclude the work.
Unlettered India proofs, 15s.; royal 4to. proofs, 10s.; imperial
vo. prints, 5s.

London, 88, Newgate Street.

Mortal Life.

In a few days will be published, in 1 thick vol. demy 8vo. price 15s. boards,

MORTAL LIFE, and the STATE of the SOUL after DEATH, conformable to Divine Revela-tion, as interpreted by the ablest Commentators, and consistent with the Discoveries of Science.

By a PROTESTANT LAYMAN. Smith, Elder, and Co. 65, Cornhill.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leleester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 828.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Visit to Germany and the Low Countries. By Sir Arthur Brooke Faulkner. 2 vols. 12mo, London, 1832. Bentley.

OF Sir Arthur Faulkner's volumes we must speak in a tone of mingled praise and objection. They are very lively and entertaining—the production of a gentleman familiar with classical literature, a superior musical amateur, and generally so well informed as to be able both to appreciate justly and describe cleverly the objects presented to his attention during a tour of considerable interest and duration. On the other hand, the style is sometimes so free and easy as to border on flippancy; there are observations on subjects which a more correct taste would have avoided-such as the personal appearance, the chastity, &c. of various classes of women; there is a spirit of great animosity against the church; and there is a use of fine words which detracts from the simplicity so desirable in a work of this kind: for we cannot reconcile ourselves to rivers which "inosculate," to ladies with "procerity of limb," to "cadent habitations," or to any such grandilo-quent phraseology. Having said so much by way of prelude, our best criticism will be to travel along with Sir Arthur, and allow him to speak for himself.

The tour commenced in September 1829, when the author sailed for Rotterdam; and he begins with the equally worn-out and disagreeable topic, sea-sickness. As we are not afflicted with that malady, we shall be excused for proceeding at once, viá Cologne, &c. to Mayence.

"In our best of all possible countries, what a broad line of distinction the 'stench of our aristocracy' draws between the ranks of our society, from the cradle to the grave, keeping them as estranged as if they had no relation to the same common nature! Nor is the instruction of the other sex provided for here with less solicitude: girls are sent to school at six, and remain until eighteen; and that nothing of what has been learnt may be lost, periodical examinations are publicly held at each of the schools for the purpose of distributing prizes to distinguished merit. Among the most favoured of those who obtained the last prizes is the son of the bookseller from whom I have my information."

Here we have not only an early taste of the author's opinions, but a bit of a bull—the bookseller's son being a girl! But we go on :—

"To insure the diffusion of knowledge among the people, government obliges every parent to place his child at school the moment it has attained the required age of six. No apology will be admitted, excepting clearly certified ill health or incapacity of mind. Napoleon was specially anxious that French should be taught as generally as possible throughout his Rhenish territory; and as Mayence was a place he often visited, as a central situation of military operations on the Rhine, we can account for the universal spread of the French language among all classes, and their affection easy, in many cases, to know how to act, as all males are by no means in proportion mascufor the French people, French institutions, French government, and in short every thing that is French.'

Our readers know how we hate the term "spread," as applied in the last sentence; but Sir Arthur is equally prone to "talented," and we must bear the infliction both of adjective and noun. Our next quotation gives his approbation of German stoves :-

"I am (he says) quite pleased with the German stoves. The only plausible objec-tion I ever heard to them for private apartments, is the closeness of the air generated by the escape of smoke, or proceeding from the metal in a state of semi-incandescence. The latter inconvenience may always be obviated by not putting in too much fuel. And as to the other, it is here effectually prevented by an arrangement equally commodious and simple. The place where the fuel is supplied opens into an outer passage, and is fitted with an iron door almost air-tight; so that, while the nuisance of submitting to servants every now and then entering the room to adjust the fire or repair its waste is prevented, there is not the slightest perceptible unpleasantness to be detected by the most impatient olfactories; and the warmth you enjoy is like the genial diffused mildness of summer."

Now comes a foreign portrait, and a home national trait :-

" Last night we were awoke at midnight by a tremendous cracking of whips. It turned out to be the Electress of Hesse and suite, in six carriages. They took their leave this morning. The electress is a thin, plain-looking woman, with somewhat, I thought, of Scotch in her features, and homely in her whole appearance; and, to heighten the resemblance. she was habited in a tartan. Her royal highness bowed to all, as she passed along the corridor to her carriage, with an air of the most affable, amiable, and uncondescending good-nature. Her sufferings have begun to plough deep furrows in her countenance, which is very intelligent, and indicative of that first of intellectual gifts-good common sense. Her virtues and ill-treatment, known as they are to all the world, have begotten a universal sympathy, which adds titles of veneration to our feeling for the martyr. One of the occasions of the unpopularity of the English here-for they are extremely unpopular on many accounts-is the bad tact in their address of making purchases. Impressed with the notion that the people must all be extortioners, we are apt to assume the porcupine in all our dealings-get into a rage at the prices, without having the least idea what they are-and finish by offering a sum so ridiculously low as to throw even the imperturbable sedateness of the very German off its centre. To avoid this, a stranger, before he ventures to purchase, ought to take the trouble of making himself acquainted with the selling price of the article he wants, which, if these that Cæsar's soldiers had a view of when offered, seldom gives rise to much demur. It his army became panic struck with the appremust be owned, however, that it is far from hended physical force of this people. But the demand so very much more than they will be happy to accept, while few have the sensibility to take affront when offered less, if it be only offered with due regard to the suaviter in modo. To be quite candid, we assuredly are behind most foreigners in that indispensable article of this world's commerce-good breeding."

The free-and-easy style we have noticed is seen to as much disadvantage in treating of the fine arts as in any other place. For instance:

"I have (observes Sir A.) seen nothing in any line of art, since I came here, that pleases me half so much as Bethman's Ariadne, by Danneker. It has original pretensions that, in any age, must have vindicated a niche among performances of a high order. heroine is in puris naturalibus, mounted on a lioness, leaning with her left arm on the ani-mal's head, and her left limb on the rump, doubled under the right. Her countenance is lit up with a spiritual expression of noble daring, as of a creature not belonging to earth; and yet it is, without any exception, the most voluptuous personification of all that is carnal in woman that I ever saw, either in flesh or stone; the effect of which is infinitely height ened by the blush-coloured light which glows over the figure through a crimson curtain from above: of the execution it may be truly said,

' Materiem superabat opus.'

The statue is of Carara marble, polished ad unguem, and marked in several places with bluish stains, a little too broad to be tolerated as beauty-spots, though far from such a deformity as ought to have justified the jocular fancy of a late brother-tourist in comparing this chef-d'œuvre to a thing 'cut out of Stilton cheese.' "

Speaking of the people at the small town of Wabern, and generally of the German pea-santry, Sir Arthur proceeds in like manner.

"The greater part of the day at Wabern is one unremitting fugue of cackling, crowing, grunting, lowing, and quacking — beating hemp, thrashing, and, if there be any other occupation belonging to a bucolic life, here you have it in full work. Both women and men resume their diurnal task at two o'clock in the morning in the summer, and keep at it until nightfall. To their laborious habits it must be owing, that the females of the servile order in this country have a breadth of shoulder, extent of thew, and procerity of limb, I would venture to swear, not to be found in any part of the habitable earth. They really quite outman our sex. In all other animals but the human, the males are, I believe, most usually remarkable for beauty. Here they make good the general analogy. Instead of a 'peeping ankle,' you have a calf of brawn, in full display, under a petticoat reaching no lower than a little under the knee, whose owner steps along at her ease, a full geometrical yard and half at a stride. It was, no doubt, women such as these that Cæsar's soldiers had a view of when

The head is bagged, or trussed, in a sort of imaginative writers and heavy companions; night-cap, tied close under the chin, the top of dull and slow as their dray-horses, and yet, on which casing is pursed into a knob stuffed with emergencies, capable of the greatest exertions, their hair, and from this a long cue or two of mira diversitate natura, cum iidem homines sic plaited tresses depend to the waist, if waist it can be called, which preserves its diameter un- of giving or taking affronts, brave in resenting diminished one inch from the shoulder to the them; attentive to all exterior observances of hip. So much for the exterior. As to their morals, we must by no means rate them, I fear, by our very refined notions of Arcadia. Among liberty, which they have not the power to asthe virgins, there are few who, before the age of fifteen, have not complied punctually with the primary commandment. It may, doubtless, be some extenuation of the licenses taken in this matter, that Wabern, humble as it is, contains a whole troop of strapping dragoons. We are assured, by way of set-off against this laxity of manners, that the conduct of the married ladies much more than makes up for the frailties of their unwedded sisters, and that however the village may be off for Josephs, there is nothing approaching Potiphar's wife to be heard of from one end to the other. These freedoms with the decalogue will appear the more unaccountable when it is known that there is a standing regulation of the elector's, which, in every case of bastardy, devolves the whole responsibility on the woman, who is required to support her offspring until they are able to support her, which, when industry fails, they do by begging from door to door: and over and above this, it is made penal in such circumstances for a woman to inculpate anybody as the father.

"Nothing can be imagined more opposed to that 'charm and weakness of woman,' in which, Gibbon tells us, resides so much of the sition from the one to the other with the greatfascination of the sex, than the appearance of the female peasantry. They are, if possible, a whole century of civilisation more clumsy than even their Wabern rivals. To their slavish habits, no doubt, is owing much of this most marvellous coarseness. In their very teens they become masculine; and at a little more advanced age, positively hirsute beyond the power of any patent depilatory. Among the rustics of these villages, I think I could observe much more of the lingering remains of the aboriginal crinis rutilus than in the higher ranks of the community. Yet it is not exactly yellow, but rather between yellow and a straw colour, covering layers of diversified hues, between yellow and sandy, a good deal like the lime-burnt hair in mortar. As to the hos artus, et hac corpora qua miramur, I much doubt whether either one or other have fined down a single inch since the days of Ariovistus. Gibbon and Ovid, I remember, take considerable pains to account for the advantage the German women have over other countries in point of chastity. Allewing them the most ample credit for veracity, there seems little in the remark that should puzzle the naturalist. Out of Otaheite there is perhaps nothing of feminine less likely to tempt the virtue of our sex. If my reader can figure to himself a Thames waterman or Greenwich pensioner coquetting in petticoats, he may arrive at once at a more accurate description of what I would in vain attempt to express by a more laboured description of the personality of these females."

this summary:

"The character of the German nation has to me always been an enigma, or sort of concordia discors. You find the most opposite qualities united in the same individual; politeness and bluntness, gaucherie and a dash of dandy, ture in the living animal:— libertinism and a measured respect to appear.—"The hogs appear to have ament inertiam et oderint quietem. Backward religion, but latitudinarians in their opinions; loyal to a proverb, yet with a strong desire for sert; -these are but a few of the antithetic traits which every day discloses in their character. Madame de Staël considered the dulness of the people a property analogous to the nature of their soil: 'végétation ne se presse pas plus

The following is an amusing description of an agricultural employment:

"A labourer's hire is his meat and two groschens, about twopence half-penny, a-day, unless he happens to be employed in thrashing, in which case he usually makes a contract for a sixteenth measure of the whole quantity of resounds from end to end with this operation, I are likely to escape a more fugitive traveller, or one less curious in re rustica. Thrashing here is executed with a skill unknown to a less musical people. To be an expert thrasher it appears to me as requisite to have had a thrashing master as a master for any other given art or accomplishment. They thrash with a per-fect regard to time, in all the alternations of triple and common measure, making the tranest exactness. There are sometimes not fewer than seven or eight flails in concert: when it is a simple quartet, and one of the performers happens to drop out, which is frequently the case, the transition is immediately, and without the least interruption, into triplets. Occasionally the effect is graced by some very delicate gradations of forte and piano, rallentando, crescendo, morcendo, accellerando - and the whole executed with as much precision as if a note-book lay before each performer. When the piano is to be particularly delicate, the tips of the flails are used, which affords an opportunity of combining grace with dexterity; it is then the merest scarcely audible tap, and costs the least possible effort. Then comes the crescendo, swelling into a tremendous barn-echoing staccate - downright thrashing in fact: and what I particularly wish to enforce upon the farmer, the flail, during the whole movement, is never raised higher than the head, which I could not help especially taking a note of for the good of our practical agriculturists, when I recollected how much unnecessary brawn is expended on our thrashing-floor to no purpose. Thus we see his genius for music never forsakes the German in any situation or occupation of life: it follows him into his commonest employments; and no doubt there is advantage, on the principle of studio fallente laborem, in making it in all similar exertions a rythmical building his Thebes, but an allegorical illustration of the same benefit of lightening labour by Of the national character altogether, we have music? The German thrasher has the advantage of the Theban architect, for he turns the labour itself into a kind of music, though somewhat monotonous to be sure."

Westphalia hams will not be recommended to fastidious tastes by the account of their nur-

"The hogs appear to have all a cross of the line. The costume of the sex is appropriate. | ance. It is a nation of fiddlers and philosophers, | wild boar --- long snouts and curved backs, the bristles of which become erected on very slight occasions of irritation. I have no doubt that this cross in the breed is the chief cause of the flavour to which the Westphalia hams owe their superiority, rather than any thing very peculiar in the recipe for curing them, which is, I believe, pretty exactly as follows. The pig is turned out into an oak-forest as soon as he is weaned, where he fares, like the wild boar, upon acorns and long earth-worms. The ham made from this is subjected to the cold smoke of wood and dried leaves, and finally undergoes a slight powdering of saltpetre to give it a colour."

> From ham to Tacitus is a strange leap; but dans le sol, que les idées dans la tête des our review must resemble the book—and the hommes."

> > From curious order we do swerve,
> > 'Tis that himself doth none observe.

"That there is nothing so very fanciful as some writers would have us believe in deriving the name of the modern Hessian from the Catti, is pretty well settled by an ancient manuscript of Tacitus, still in existence in the university grain he thrashes out. As the entire village library of Marburg, in which the name is written 'Chassi.' Knocking off the letter C of this shall state a few particulars respecting it which corruption, we have the very word itself, with as small license of alteration as we find in many of our most lineally descended offspring of the dead languages. The license of corrupting a into t is of familiar occurrence; and the AIRR possistes of Lucian is not required to inform us how frequently the \sigma and \sigma contended for mastery in the dialects of Greek. This, to be sure, is a very German-commentatorish sort of note for a book of travels; but there has been a great to-do, I find, among the scholiasts about the point in question, which is still undetermined."

We do not remember to have heard of the custom mentioned in the following :-

"The frost is so hard that the whole marketplace is alive with skaiters. At Mayence the river has an establishment of traineaux for carrying the people across. Eight or ten people pass at a time, with one man to draw the machine, and another behind to propel it-the fare not quite a penny. According to an immemorial custom, every one on crossing the first time is required to bring back a cake, which he purchases on the opposite shore, in proof of the achievement."

The mixed good and evil of the English newspapers is a subject which might lead to much argument, pro and con, and whether the abuses counterbalance the benefit might be discussed without coming to a conclusion from now to the Greek calends. We certainly would espouse the favourable side; but still we cannot but regret the licentiousness and rascality which deform so precious a blessing. One of the effects produced abroad is thus painted :-

"My attention was especially invited to-day, while perusing the 'Frankfort Journal,' to an extract from an English paper, rendered more attractive by being graced with three conspicuous notes of what we call admiration. It was one of those scandalous pieces of gallantry operation. What is the story of Amphion so frequent in our best society, and garnished with some of its most piquant traits. Another extract in the same paper announced, that out of between nearly two hundred persons taken up in the streets of London by our new police in one day, one hundred were women, and for drunkenness! Since I left England I have not seen one such monster of either sex. If the Bonners had all clean hands themselves. I should have more readily excused the sneer with which our gallantries were alluded to;

but it so happens, that in this very retired, philosophical, and most moral town of Bonn on the Rhine, two persons connected with the responsible office of forming the morals and minds of the rising generation, not long since deserted their wives for the wives of other grave preceptors of youth, and (mark it, reader!) all the parties have continued on the most amicable footing possible, with but one exception. The deserted wife of one of the parties was left in the dilemma of not being able, though a Protestant, to sue for a divorce, the law having peremptorily set forth, that after a cohabitation of twenty-five years, no plea of infidelity is available. The truth is, the abused freedom of our press, and our habit of bandying scandal and clutching every piece of news likely to allure the jaded palate of readers of every order, causes our newspapers to give the most unfavourable impressions of the English character abroad. They judge us out of our own mouths. Every thing that makes against our morals, or our prosperity as a nation, in any respect, is picked out and commented upon with all the satisfaction proceeding from their dislike of us, or, more probably, their jealousy. Our debt, our blue-ruin, and our bishops, our pride, and even our poverty, are the standing topics which comfort them; and the worst of it is, that we cannot rebut the charge. Nor is it applicable to the modern state of English society alone. Lady Mary Wortley Montague, a century ago, makes the very Turk turn up his nose at us. Professor Schlegel asked me if credit might be given to the reports published in our papers, of the criminal trials, and of the examinations at our police offices; for, if true, it was impossible education could have made any progress among our lower classes."

The author goes on to speak of manufactures, in a way to interest the English merchant and

"The people here begin to grow very boastful about the progress making in their manufactures, having the vanity to place them in a position of rivalry with England herself. At Aix-la-Chapelle they affirm their broad cloth is better; and as to our hardware and cutlery. the manufactory at Solingen near Elberfelt will soon cut us out and out. Bonn has established, certainly, a very respectable cotton manufactory, which supplies the towns on the river up as high as Basle, though Bonn and Cologne are its principal consumers. The issues from the manufactory are annually eight thousand pieces, each containing forty-six French aunes, and upwards of four hundred workmen are kept in constant occupation."

We have alluded to the author's antipathy to the church—coce signum—he is conversing with the famous Barrere:—" As an instance of the wanton despotism to which I alluded, I pointed to those states which rack-rent and pluck the people to support a bloated blood-sucking priesthood, for the ostensible, most hypocritical pur-pose of propagating Christianity, the whole of whose principles are systematically violated by the barefaced oppression. During our conversation several sallies of pleasantry escaped him —some I thought must be from a French copy of Joe. Louis the Fourteenth asked one of his courtiers who had just returned from a visit to England, what occasion had carried him there Was it for society?" Not altogether, sire, and yet there is very good society, though it may be perhaps a little peculiar.' Then what was it that took you over?' repeated the monarch; 'pour apprendre l'art de penser?' 'Oui, sire,' responded the courtier, 'pour panser des chevaux.' This gentleman, it seems, complained much of the gloom of our climate. 'Why,' said his majesty, 'does not the sun give light?' O oui, sire, le soleil est comme une claire lune.' When interrogated about our fruits-f they were very early in our hot-houses, and ripe in our pommes cuites.' Such are only a few of the jeux-d'esprit with which this terrific lion amused us, his countenance all the while lit up with a great deal of playful good nature."

There is a good deal in these volumes respecting education; and Sir Arthur, like the Germans themselves, approves of the system of Pestalozzi, founded on morals and religion, in preference to that of Lancaster, though more rapid, which, he states, neglects this combination. We shall, however, come to the details when we return to these volumes in our next

Lyric Leaves. By Cornelius Webbe. 12mo. pp. 136. London, 1832. Griffiths. THE author has an exquisite quotation on his title from the pages of that graceful poet, Laman Blanchard-

"The waters sing to the shore,
The forests sing to the ses,
All that hath motion in land or occan
Is gifted with minstrelsy."

To find words for that minstrelsy is the essence of poetry; for what is poetry but language given to the music of nature, as it animates its beauty or its feeling? That Mr. Webbe catches the harmony of many such notes, let the following passages evince.

Nature-

"Shall her flowers bloom and die Undelighting human eye? Shall her music, ever-quiring, On the senseless air expiring, Be. like toning of the spheres, Only heard of heavenly ears? Shall her wouth and age of green Only neard of neavenly ears?

Shall her youth and age of greening And her comeliness and cleanness, Serious glea and holy gladness,

That are ever without sadness,

Be, like beauty to the blind,

Unbeheld but of the mind? Shall her seasons come and go Like an unattractive show? Like an unattractive show?
Never!—there are some are wiser;
There are poets still who prise her,
And immortal minds that yearn
Wisdom from her lips to learn;
There are eyes which still can read
Truth and worth in vileat weed—
Form in things which to the eye
Half-read is but deformity—
Grandeur in mean things and small,
And God's great handiwork in all!"

Very sweet image.

"The snow-drops that from Winter's brow, As he retreated, fell, Have turned to flowers."

Or where he speaks of the cherries which peep "Through their green leaves at the lip Of sweet beauty, wandering by, Blushing just as rosily."

We conclude with part of a simple but most touching poem.

" The Broken Heart. Sister, only one befriending, Save with words of idle breath— Sister, only one attending Sorrow's couch and sickness' death,—

Lo! a day is newly breaking
Whose decline I shall not see,
And thy lover's voice is waking
Thee, who shunnest sleep for me!

Droop not, sister, and thy weeping
For my fated end give o'er;
Could it hinder death's dark sleeping,
They shoulded weep for me no more! Thou shouldst weep for me no

Mourn not! dying is not dying Unto those who love not life; But a hope to the relying, And a glad release from strife,—

Strife that wears the human powers, Strife that hardens o'er the heart, Strife that crushes, in few hours, Hopes with which our heart-strings part. Who would cling to this poor being That has better hopes on high?

Who would murmur when th' All-seeing Points the hour that we should die? Yes, it may be painful leaving Life, which should be only joy,

But that passions, interweaving
With its hopes, its hopes destroy!

Dying for her, it may grieve me
That she never lived for me;
Yet when my last sigh shall leave me,
Twill be breathed for none but thee

Thee, the only one befriending,
Save with words of idle breath—
Thee, the only one attending
Sorrow's couch and sickness' death!

Tell her, though for her I perish,
That my wrongs I can forgive;
And if thought of me she cherish,
Let her think that still I live.

Poor and living, she may scorn me; But when I am with the dead, And the rays of fame adorn me, Shame will fall upon her head,

If she then despises, proudly, Lowly love and lofty fame, And the world shall murmur loudly
Of my wrongs, and hate her name!

Had I been a heartless wooer, And adored with feigned excess Had she loved me warmer, truer-Had I loved her wiser, less,—

Then my life had not been blighted-Then these griefs would not consume; And the vow she broke, though plighted, Had not struck me to the tomb!

Mine was kept, and only broken When my heart is broken too; Witness these death-pangs as token Of a faith severely true!

Hah! my blood is coldly welling In my heavy, sinking heart; And my soul is proudly swelling Upon wings which yearn to start!

Yes, my heart at last is breaking, And thy cares will end with me; I shall wing where no awaking Brings a morn of misery!

Let me feel thy hands in dying Clasp my brow, which chills with death; Let me hear thy gentle sighing Mingle with my gasping breath! And when silence seals for ever These true lips, do this by me— Kiss and close them, for they never Parted without blessing thee!

And my harp, whose plaintive story
Drew your innocent young tear—
Once my hope, my joy, my glory,—
Lay it on its master's bier.

I ask of thee the yearly shedding Of such flowers as sweeten spring; Fall them light on my cold bedding, And Heaven will bless the offering!

Framed for lips as pure as thine;
Framed for lips as pure as thine;
And if a spirit's sigh thou hearest,
By its sadness know it mine!

Sure some angel's arms entwined me!
Or, my sister, were they thine!
Still, oh still caressing bind me— Let me in thy arms recline!

Nearer, sister, nearer, nearer— Thou art all that's dear to me! Feel my heart's last beat, thou dearer Far than fame, and song, and she—

Ah! I read I should not name her, In the anger of thine eye!

Never, as thou lovest me, blame herScorn should with forgiveness die?

No, my gentle sister, pardon
All the wrongs which she has done;
Scorn and condemnation harden
Many a heart, but soften none!

Hush thee! there are angels winging Visibly within the room!
Come to claim, with joy and singing, What is Heaven's from the tomb!

Hear'st thou not their heavenly voices, Which have taken tones like thine? My soul hears them, and rejoices With an ecstasy divine.

Lay me lightly on my pillow,
With that gentleness thine own;
I can die now calm as billow When the winds have dropt it down.

All is past, and all forgiven!
If my hopes have any worth,
We shall meet and love in heave Though we might not upon earth!"

ing occasionally careless, and the rhythm neglected: a few of the poems are also of an inferior grade. But, as a whole, we like this slight tome, and kindly commend it to the lovers of poetry.

Memoirs of Dr. Burney, &c. 3 vols. 8vo. By his Daughter, Madame d'Arblay. London, 1832. E. Moxon.

[Second notice.]

In a preceding Literary Gazette, when only the first two volumes of this work had been printed, we gave an extract from it which we thought would amuse our readers, and, without any premature opinion from us, sufficiently exemplify the character of these memoirs. Since then Vol. III. has issued from the press; and we ought to be able to state what we think of the whole performance. But reviewers, like other people, do not always do what they ought; and we confess that we have not been able to get through the twelve hundred pages into which the filial piety of Madame d'Arblay has misled her to expand the biography of her father. Of Dr. Burney, eminent and accomplished as he was, both in the literary and musical world, all that needed to be recorded might have been amply told within a sixth of this space; and we regret to add, that the manner of relating the facts is as faulty as the narrative is tedious. The life of the most illustrious monarch, general, or statesman, with all the accessories of national history, politics, and speeches, would be best comprehended within shorter limits; and to spin out the private affairs of an individual member of less exalted society to so preposterous a length is absolutely absurd.

Dr. Burney, born at Shrewsbury, April 12, 1726, displayed an early genius for music, was noticed and brought to London as his pupil by Dr. Arne; in 1749 was elected organist of a church in the city; composed the comic opera of Robin Hood, and the pantomime of Queen Mab-the latter in particular with prodigious success;-lost his health, and retired to Lynn Regis, where he taught music and presided at the organ :- returned to town in 1760, with a young family but rising reputation, which was increased by the composition of several delightful concertos;—lost his beloved wife,—produced a translation of Rousseau's Devin du Village, which failed ; __ in 1769 was created M.D. by the University of Oxford, -travelled through France and Italy, and published afterwards his Musical Tour. In 1772 did the same by the Netherlands, Holland, and the north of Germany : - was elected a F.R.S. ; - and in 1776, et seq. till 1789, gave the world his esteemed History of Music, in five quarto vo-These are the leading events in the biography of Dr. Burney, except his second marriage, as described in our former extract; and, as addenda, the subsequent destinies of some of his justly celebrated family, of whom not the least remarkable is the author of this publication, Madame d'Arblay, so well known for her Evelina, Cecilia, and Camilla.

Had all the circumstances we have thus recapitulated been described with tolerable discrimination and brevity, the accounts of the many interesting persons with whom Dr. Burney associated during a long period, and agreeable piece of biography. Unfortunately the task has been taken up by one whose recollections and affections have given an undue importance to every event, and whose romantic and imaginative turn of mind, so charming in her own youth and early fictions, has marred this production of her old age and (it should have been) of sober truth. We are compelled to say, that every page affords proof that the once lovely and admired "Evelina," the petted of Johnson, and Reynolds, and Burke, is now That the more than three score and ten. honesty of this judgment may not be questioned, we must go over some of the grounds on which it has been forced upon us; and we begin with page 1.

"He (i. e. Charles Burney) was issue of a second marriage, of a very different colour with respect to discretion, or to prejudice, from that with the account of which he has opened his own narration. The poor actress was no more; but neither her hardly judged, though enthusiastically admired profession, nor her numerous offspring, nor the alienation she had unhappily caused in the family, proved obstacles to the subsequent union of her survivor with -, who in those days, though young and pretty, was called Mrs. Ann Cooper, a Shropshire young lady, of bright parts and great personal beauty; as well as an inherit-ress of a fortune which, for the times, was by no means inconsiderable. The parchments of the marriage settlement upon this occasion are still remaining amongst the few family records that Dr. Burney preserved."

We have tried all our logical powers to understand this paragraph; but the Q. E. D. is withheld from our keenest apprehension. Passing forward, we have the following exaggerated picture of a child's remembrances.

" His reminiscences upon this period were amongst those the most tenaciously minute. and the most agreeable to his fancy for detail. of any part of his life; and the uncommon gaiety of his narratory powers, and the frankness with which he set forth the pecuniary embarrassments and provoking mischances to which his thus deserted childhood was exposed, had an ingenuousness, a good-humour, and a comicality, that made the subject of Condover not more delectable to himself than entertaining to his hearer. Nevertheless, these accounts, when committed to paper, and produced with-out the versatility of countenance, and the vivacious gestures that animated the colloquial disclosures, so lose their charm, as to appear vapid, languid, and tedious: and the editor only thus slightly recurs to them for the purpose of pointing out how gifted must be the man who, through disadvantages of so lowering a species, could become, in after-life, not only one of the best informed, but one of the most polished members of society."

While with Dr. Arne, young Burney formed intimacies with Thomson the poet, Garrick, Dr. Armstrong, Mason, Mrs. Cibber, Kit Smart, and other persons of note at that time; and of whom the author speaks in her usual Ercles' vein: ex. gr.

"Mrs. Cibber herself he considered as a pattern of perfection in the tragic art, from her magnetizing powers of harrowing and winning at once every feeling of the mind, by the eloquent sensibility with which she portrayed, or rather personified, tenderness, grief, horror, or distraction.

" Kit Smart.-With a different set, and at

Some fault we might find, the language be- of his own proceedings, must have been a very a man then in equal possession of those fines ingredients for the higher call of his art, firand fancy, and, for its comic call, of sport and waggery. No indication, however, of sucl possession was granted to his appearance; no a grace was bestowed on his person or maniners and his physiognomy was of that round and stubbed form that seemed appertaining to common dealer behind a common counter rather than to a votary of the muses.

"Dr. Armstrong, though he came from part of the island whence travellers are by n means proverbially smitten with the reproact of coming in vain, nor often stigmatised with either meriting or being addicted to failure possessed not the personal skill usually ac corded to his countrymen, of adroitness in bringing himself forward. Yet he was as gail amiable as he was eminently learned; and though, from a keen moral sense of right, h was a satirist, he was so free from malevolence that the smile with which he uttered a remar! the most ironical, had a cast of good-humoure pleasantry that nearly turned his sarcasm into simple sport."

The aspiring musician was also noticed by persons of fashion, and introduced to the hell of the day, of which Madame D'Arblay save most grandly:

"At these clubs, the subject of these me. moirs witnessed scenes that were ever after rivetted on his memory. Cards, betting, dice opened every noctural orgie with an eclat of expectation, hope, ardour, and fire, that seemed to cause a mental inflammation of the feelings and faculties of the whole assembly in a mass.

* As the evening advanced, the busy hum of common-place chattery subsided, and a general and collected calmness ensued, such as might best dispose the gambling associates to a wily deliberation, how most coolly to penetrate into the mystic obscurities that brought them together. All, however, was not yet involved in the gaping cauldron of chance, whence so soon was to emerge the brilliant prize or desolating blank, that was to blazon the lustre or stamp the destruction of whoever, with his last trembling mite, came to sound its perilous depths. They, as yet, played or prowled around it, lightly and slightly, not more impatient than fearful of hurrying their fate, and seeking to hide from themselves, as well as from their competitors, their anticipating exultation or dread. Still, therefore, they had some command of the general use of their faculties, and of what was due from them to general social commerce. Still some vivacious sallies called forth passing smiles from those who had been seldomest betrayed, or whose fortunes had least been embezzled; and still such cheeks as were not too dragged or haggard to exhibit them, were able to give grace-ful symptoms of self-possession, by the pleasing and becoming dimples produced through arch. though silent observance. But by degrees the fever of doubt and anxiety broke forth all around, and every breath caught its infection. Every look then shewed the contagion of lurk. ing suspicion: every eye that fixed a prosperous object, seemed to fix it with the stamp of detection. All was contrast the most discordant, unblended by any gradation; for wherever the laughing brilliancy of any countenance denoted exulting victory, the glaring vacancy of some other hard by, displayed incipient despair. Like the awe of death was next the muteness of taciturnity, from the absorption of agonising attention, while the last decisive a different part of the town, young Burney strokes, upon which hung affluence or beggary, formed an intimacy with Kit Smart, the poet; were impending. Every die then became a

⁶ Her tragedy of Edwy and Elgiva did not attract the amazing popularity of her novels. In Dr. Burney's family we have also to count the eldest son, Captain James B., who sailed round the world with Cook; and the second, Dr. Charles Burney, the eminent master of the school at Greenwich, where he was succeeded by his no less able son.

bliss or a blast; every extorted word was an execration - every fear whispered ruin with dishonour-every wish was a dagger to some antagonist; till, finally, the result was pro-claimed, which carried off the winner in a whirl of maddening triumph; and to the loser left the recovery of his nervous, hoarse, husky, grating voice, only for curses and oaths, louder and more appalling than thunder in its deepest

How ridiculous is this description out of a sentimental novel or romance! It is a sad abuse of the English language and of common sense; and seems more like a caricature of the style of Dr. Johnson, and the sensibilities of the worst specimen of the Minerva press, than aught else we can imagine in literature.

Among his other acquaintances, we have a very high-flown and circumstantial account of Mr. Burney's forming a friendship with Mr. Fulke Greville, an exquisite in the days of our forefathers,

" The glass of fashion and the mould of form." This gentleman paid Arne 300% to liberate his pupil, and took him to reside with himself at Wilbury House, "as a desired inmate, a talented professor, and a youth of genius" (p. 35). Of the manner in which this period is surcharged with colouring, a few examples will Bath .- "The ensuing initiation into this mingled existence of inertness and effort, of luxury and of desolation, was made at Bath. But Bath. from its buildings and its position, had a charm around it for the subject of these memoirs, to soften off the monotony of this wayward taste, and these wilful sufferings; though the seat of dissipation alone he found to be changed, its basis-cards, dice, or betting-being always the same. Nevertheless, that beautiful city, then little more than a splendid village in comparison with its actual metropolitan size and grandeur, had intrinsic claims to the most vivid admiration, and the strongest incitements to youthful curiosity, from the antiquity of its origin, real as well as fabulous — from its Bladud, its baths, its cathedral, and its countless surrounding glories of military remains, all magically followed up, to vary impression and stimulate approbation, by its rising excellence in Grecian and Roman architecture. Born with an enthusiastic passion for rural scenery, the picturesque view of this city offered to the ravished eye of young Burney some new loveliness, or striking effect, with an endless enchantment of variety, at almost every fresh opening of every fresh street into which he sauntered Bath at this moment was illumined by that sparkling but dangerous meteor of philosophy, politics, history, and metaphysics—St. John, Lord Bolingbroke. Happily, perhaps, for his safety, it was in vain that young Burney struggled, by every effort of ingenuity he could exert, to bask in the radiance of this meteor's wit and eloquence. Every attempt at that purpose failed; and merely a glimpse of this extraordinary personage, was all that the utmost vigilance of romantic research ever The aim, therefore, of caught. young Burney, was soon limited to obtaining a glance of the still noble, though infirm figure, and still handsome, though aged countenance of this celebrated statesman. And of these, for the most transitory view, he would frequently, with a book in his hand, loiter by the hour opposite to his lordship's windows, which were vis à vis to those of Mr. Greville or run, in circular eddies, from side to side of the sedan chair in which his lordship was carried to the pump-room."

gamester from "lofty motives;" and, indeed, he figures, like all the rest of the author's heroes, as almost an angel. Another angel was a Mr. Crisp:—

"Mr. Crisp, by birth and education a gentleman, according to the ordinary accentation of man, according to the ordinary acceptation of that word, was in mind, manners, and habits yet more truly so, according to the most refined lefinition of the appellation, as including honour, spirit, elegance, language, and grace. His person and port were distinguished; his address was even courtly; his face had the embellishment of a strikingly fine outline; bright, hazel, penetrating, yet arch eyes; an open front; a noble Roman nose; and a smile of a thousand varied expressions. But all that was external, however attractive, however full of promise, however impossible to pass over, was of utterly inferior worth compared with the inward man; for there he was rare indeed. Profound in wisdom; sportive in wit; sound in understanding. A scholar of the highest order; a critic of the clearest acumen; possessing, with equal delicacy of discrimination, a taste for literature and for the arts; and perand painting.'

Of her own mother it is more natural and excusable for the writer to speak in such exalted terms: the picture is, however, as near the ludicrous as bombast can make it :-

"But not to Mr. Greville alone was flung one of those blissful or baneful darts, that sometimes fix in a moment, and irreversibly, the domestic fate of man; just such another. as potent, as pointed, as piercing, yet as delicious, penetrated, a short time afterwards, the breast of young Burney; and from eyes perhaps as lovely, though not as celebrated; and from a mind perhaps as highly gifted, though not as renowned. Esther Sleepe—this memo-

e" Mr. Greville, with whatever mockery he would have sneered away any expression tending either to practice or meditation in piety, instinctively held in esteem whatever was virtuous, and what was victous in scorn; though his esteem for virtue was never pronounced, lest it should pass for pedantry: and his scorn for vice was studiously disguised, lest he should be set down himself for a Fogrum." He married, though sworn to the gay life of a bachelor, Miss Fanny Macartney, "a lovely female (who) in the bloom of youth, equally high in a double celebrity, the most rarely accorded to her sex, of beauty and of wit, and exquisite in her possession of both, made an assault upon the eyes, the understanding, and the heart of Mr. Greville; so potent in its first atack, and so varied in its after stages, that, little as he · "Mr. Greville, with whatever mockery he would both, made an assault upon the eyes, the understanding, and the heart of Mr. Greville; so potent in its first attack, and so varied in its after stages, that, little as he felt at that time disposed to barter his boundless liberty, his desultory pursuits, and his brilliant, though indefinite expectations, for a bondage so narrow, so derogatory to the swing of his wild will, as that of marriage appeared to him; he was caught by so many charms, entangled in so many inducements, and inflamed by such a whirl of passions, that he soon almost involuntarily surrendered to the besieger, not absolutely at discretion, but very unequivocally from resistless impulsariestentially surrendered to the besieger, not absolutely at discretion, but very unequivocally from resistless impulsariestentially surrendered to the besieger, not absolutely at discretion, but very unequivocally from resistless involved a which who have a such, she affrighted the timid, who shrunk into silence, and braved the bold, to whom she allowed no quarter. The latter, in truth, seemed to stimulate exertions which brought her faculties into play; and which—besides creating admiration in all who escaped her shafts—appeared to offer to herself a mental exercise, useful to her health and agreeable to her spirits. Her understanding was truly masculine, not from being harsh or rough, but from depth, soundness, and capacity; yet her fine small features, and the whole style of her beauty, looked as if meant by nature for the most feminine delicacy; but her voice, which had something in it of a croak, and her manner, latterly at least, of sitting, which was that of lounging completely at her ease, of sitting, which was that of lounging completely at her ease, of sitting, which was that of lounging completely at her ease, of sitting, which was that of lounging completely at her ease, of sitting, which was that of lounging completely at her ease, of sitting, which was that of lounging completely at her ease, of sitting which was that of lounging completely at her sitting, which was that of lounging completely at her ease, in such curves as she found most commodious, with her head alone upright, and her eyes commonly fixed, with head alone upright, and her eyes commonly fixed, with an expression rather alarming than flattering, in an examination of some object that caught her attention; probably caused, as they naturally excited, the hard general notion to her disadvantage above mentioned. This notion, nevertheless, though almost universally harboured in the circle of her public acquaintance, was nearly reversed in the smaller circles that came more in contact with her feelings." She was author of the "Ode to Indifference;" and her husband ruined himself.

Mr. Greville is stated to have become a rialist's mother -of whom she must now with reverence, with fear - yet with pride and delight - offer the tribute of a description - was small and delicate, but not diminutive in person. Her face had that sculptural oval form which gives to the air of the head something like the ideal perfection of the poet's imagina-tion. Her fair complexion was embellished by a rosy hue upon her cheeks of Hebe freshness. Her eyes were of the finest azure, and beaming with the brightest intelligence; though they owed to the softness of their lustre, a still more resistless fascination: and they were set in her head with such a peculiarity of elegance in shape and proportion, that they imparted a nobleness of expression to her brow and to her forehead, that, whether she were beheld when attired for society, or surprised under the negligence of domestic avocation, she could be viewed by no stranger whom she did not strike with admiration, she could be broken in upon by no old friend who did not look at her with new pleasure. It was at a dance that she first was seen by young Burney, at the house of his elder brother, in Hatton Garden; and that first sight was to him decisive, for he was not more sonally excelling, as a dilettante, both in music charmed by her beauty than enchanted by her conversation. So extraordinary, indeed, were the endowments of her mind, that, her small opportunity for their attainment considered, they are credible only from having been known upon proof. Born in the midst of the citybut not in one of those mansions where, formerly, luxury and riches revelled with a lavish preponderance of magnificence that left many of those of the nobles of the west plain or oldfashioned in comparison—not in one of those dwellings of the hospitable English merchant of early days, whose boundless liberality brought tributary under his roof the arts and sciences, in the persons of their professors; and who rivalled the nobles in the accomplishments of their progeny, till, by mingling in acquirements, they mingled in blood :- the birth of the lovely Esther had nothing to boast from parental dignity, parental opulence, nor - strange, and stranger yet to tell - parental worth. Alone stood the lovely Esther, unsustained by ancestry, unsupported by wealth, unimpelled by family virtue."

We beg to add, that the last expression, though apparently so dubious, is no reflection on character. Enamoured of this divinity, young Burney is invited to accompany the Grevilles abroad, when his grief betrays the secret; and we have a continuation of the same rigmarole. "Concealment was instantly at an end. The sudden dismay of his ingenuous though it told not the cause, betrayed, past sudden dismay of his ingenuous countenance, recall, his repugnance to the scheme. parts so lively, powers of observation so ready, and a spirit so delighting in whatever was uncommon and curious, they had expected that such a prospect of visiting new countries, surveying new scenes, mingling with new characters, and traversing the foreign world under their auspices, in all its splendour, would have raised in him a buoyant transport, exhilarating to behold. But the sudden paleness that overspread his face, his downcast eye, the quiver of his lips, and the unintelligible stammer of his vainly attempted reply, excited interrogatories so anxious and so vehement, that they soon induced an avowal that a secret power had gotten possession of his mind, and sturdily exiled from it all ambition, curiosity, or pleasure, that came not in the form of an offering to its all-absorbing shrine."

How could even an eye-witness tell us all this? Surely the future daughter of these parents must be acknowledged to be a very wise and precocious child! The marriage takes place; and we hear of one of the parties, that the "mother of the bride was of a nature so free from stain, so elementally white, that it would scarcely seem an hyperbole to denominate her an angel upon earth." The subsequent condition of the happy pair is equally couleur de rose :-

"Thus, with a felicity that made toil delicious, through labour repaid by prosperity, exertions by comfort, fatigue by soothing tenderness, and all the fond passions of juvenile elasticity by the charm of happiest sympathy, - began, and were rolling on, equally blissful and busy, the first wedded years of this animated young couple - when a storm suddenly broke over their heads, which menaced one of those deadly catastrophes, that, by engulfing one loved object in that 'bourne whence no traveller returns,' tears up for ever by the root all genial, spontaneous, unsophisticated happiness from the survivor."

We trust we may now be relieved from the task which it has been so disagreeable to us to perform, without the blame of being ungallant in our strictures. Sincerely do we wish that we could have pronounced a panegyric on a work by so amiable and esteemed a person, and founded on the best of motives. But the sad overlaying of the subject, which has really made it the most tiresome instance we have ever seen of the folly of the laudator temporis acti, has compelled us to prefer justice to the grateful feeling with which we were predisposed to welcome any production from the pen of Madame D'Arblay.

Life and Works of Lord Byron. Vol. XII. Murray.

THIS volume begins with "Francesca of Rimini," and its last article of any extent is " the Doge of Venice;" but it has room for a world of little pieces, of all sorts of character and in all sorts of rhyme, from the magnificent " Stanzas on the Po"__

"River, that rollest by the ancient walls
Where dwells the lady of my love, when she Walks by thy brink, and there, perchance, recalls
A faint and fleeting memory of me," &c.—

down to " Epigram on the Brazier's procession to Brandenburgh House," with its appropriate sub-note, viz.: "There is an epigram for you, is it not? worthy Of Wordsworth, the grand metaquizzical poet, A man of vast merit, though few people know it; The perusal of whom (as I told you at Mestri) I owe, in great part, to my passion for pastry."

It is, in short, a most miscellaneous volume, as to the text; and still more so, of course, as to the notes. In these last, a whole scrap-book of odds and ends, " from gay to grave, from pensive to severe," is turned out upon us; and the more we think of the thing, the more are we convinced that ages to come will derive much of such notions as they may have about the popular and more ephemeral literature, the criticism, the jibe, the joke, the "quarrels of authors," &c. from the notes to Byron, than from any other source whatever. Two or three great authors of a generation float down entire. buoyant on the stream of time;" other folks must be contented if these giants will take with them a fragment-specimen of their " parted wrecks."

Southey's "Vision of Judgment" contains one or two passages which, in spite of the horrible hexameters, may be called fine; but assuredly it, as a whole, will be known A.D. 1932 only by the solemn absurdities now subfixed to Byron's parodies thereof. Take a specimen:

"O'er the adamantine gates an angel stood on the summit. Ho!" he exclaimed, "King George of England cometh to judgment!

Hear, heaven! ye angels, hear! souls of the good and the wicked faccusers!

wicked [accusers: Whom it concerns, attend! Thou, Hell, bring forth his As the sonorous summons was uttered, the Winds, who were waiting,

Bore it abroad through Heaven; and Hell, in her nethermost corners, Heard, and obeyed in dismay.

Heard, and obeyed in dismay.

A multitudinous army
Came at the awful call. In semicircle inclining,
Tier over ther they took their place: a loft, in the distance, Far as the sight could pierce, that glorious company glistened.
From the akirts of the shining assembly a slippery vapour

Rose in the blue screne, and moving onward it deepened, Taking a denser form."—Southey.

"' No, quoth the cherub, 'George the Third is dead.'
'And who is George the Third?' replied the apostle:
'What George? what Third?' 'The King of England,'

The angel. • Well! he won't find kings to jostle The angel. "Well! he won't find kings to jostle Him on his way; but does he wear his head?

Because the last we saw here had a tustle, And ne'er would have got into heaven's good graces, Had he not flung his head in all our faces.

He was, if I remember, king of France."—Byron.

Again, the introduction of John Wilkes :-

" Beholding the foremost, Him by the cast of his eye oblique, I knew as the firebrand Whom the unthinking populace held for their idol and

Lord of Misrule in his day. But how was that countenance Where emotion of fear or of shame had never been wit-

Where emotion of fear or of shame had never been witnessed; nessed; malice That invincible forehead abashed; and those eyes wherein Once had been wont to shine, with wit and hilarity tempered, [settled] Into how deep a gloom their mournful expression had Little availed it now that not from a purpose malignant, Not with evil intent, he had chosen the service of evil, But of his own desires the slave, with profligate impulse, Solely by selfishness moved, and reckless of aught that might follow.

Could he plead in only excuse a confession of baseness? Could he hide the extent of his guilt, or hope to atone for Faction excited at home, when all old feuds were abated, Insurrection abroad, and the train of wose that had followed?

Discontent and disloyalty, like the teeth of the dragon.

lowed?
Discontent and disloyalty, like the teeth of the dragon,
He had sown on the winds; they had ripened beyond the Atlantic:

natural birth, sedition, revolt, revolution, France had received the seeds, and resped the harvest of horrors; re—where should the plague be stayed? Oh, most to be pitied

They of all souls in bale, who see no term to the evil

They by their gult have raised, no end to their inner upbraidings!

Him I could not choose but know," &c.—Southey.

"A merry, cock-eyed, curious-looking sprite, Upon the instant started from the throng, Upon the instant started from the throng, Dressed in a fashion now forgotten quite; For all the fashions of the flesh stick l.ng By people in the next world; where unite All the costumes since Adam's, right or wrong, From Eve's fig-leaf down to the petiticost, Almost as scanty, of days less remote.

The spirit looked around upon the crowds
Assembled, and exclaimed, 'My friends of all
The spheres, we shall catch cold amongst these clo
So let's to business: why this general call'
If those are freeholders I see in shrouds,
And 'tis for an election that they bawl,
Behold a candidate with unturned coat!
Sint Bares, may Levils, thora prosperse;'

Saint Peter, may I count upon your vote? ' Sir,' replied Michael, ' you mistake; these things Are of a former life, and what we do Above is more august; to judge of kings

Above is more august; to you go or kings.

Is the tribunal met: so now you know.

'Then I presume those gentlemen with wings,'
Said Wilkes, 'are cherubs; and that soul below
Looks much like George the Third, but to my mind
A good deal older—Bless me! is he blind?' "—Byron.

The poet laureate is, indeed, the great hero of this volume; and if, as to the hexameters and the ottava rima, we are bound to allow that Byron has the best of it, it is equally clear that as to all the serious points of debate, the great Laker has most decidedly the advantage. The high serene calmness of conscious innocence in his letters to the Editor of the Courier (in which paper some of Byron's assaults had appeared), and to Mr. William Smith of Norwich, is an object of contemplation on which one dwells with profound respect; and Byron's abandoned her even in hell-editor has done his duty well between all the parties in this contest, and between them severally and the public, by preserving with impartial diligence the records of this "strife intellectual." By the by, there is a passage in tellectual." By the by, there is a passage in that letter from Mr. Southey to Mr. Smith which may be read now with some wonder, when we see the date of the publication in the Courier, Oct. 1817.

"Greater changes in the condition of this country have been wrought during the last haif century, than an equal course of years had ever before produced. Without entering into the proofs of this proposition, suffice it to indicate, as among the most efficient causes, the steam and the spinning-engines, the mail-coach, and the free publication of the debates in parliament: hence have followed, in natural and necessary consequence, increased activity, enterprise, wealth, and power; but, on the other hand, greediness of gain, looseness of principle, half-knowledge (more perilous than ignorance), vice, poverty, wretchedness, disaffection, and political insecurity. The changes which have taken place render other changes inevitable; forward we must go for it is not possible to retrace our steps: the hand of the political horologe cannot go back, like the shadow upon Heze-kiah's dial;—when the hour comes, it must strike. Slavery has long ceased to be tolerable in Europe: the remains of feudal oppression are disappearing even in those countries which have improved the least; nor can it be much longer endured, that the extremes of ignorance, wretchedness, and brutality, should exist in the very centre of civilised society. There can be no safety with a populace half Luddite, half Lazzaroni. Let us not deceive ourselves: we are far from that state in which any thing resembling equality would be possible; but we are arrived at that state in which the extremes of inequality are become intolerable. They are too dangerous, as well as too monstrous, to be borne much longer. Plans which would have led to the utmost horrors of insurrection, have been prevented by the government, and by the enactment of strong but necessary laws. it not, however, be supposed that the disease is healed, because the ulcer may skin over: the remedies by which the body politic can be restored to health must be slow in their operation. The condition of the populace, physical, moral, and intellectual, must be improved, or a Jacquerie, a Bellum Servile, sooner or later will be the result. It is the people at this time who stand in need of reformation, not the government."

Among the notes to this tome we have been much struck with several by a new com-mentator, Mr. T. B. Macaulay, the now celebrated M.P. His observations on the "Francesca" are particularly good. After quoting the famous lines of Dante,

" Caina attende chi in vita ci spense," &c. and Lord Byron's admirable version, this critic says:—

"The whole history of woman's love is as highly and completely wrought, we think, in these few lines, as that of Juliet in the whole tragedy of Shakspeare. Francesca imputes the passion her brother-in-law conceived for her, not to depravity, but nobleness of heart in him, and to her own loveliness. With a mingled feeling of keen sorrow and complacent naïvelé, she says she was fair, and that an ignominious death robbed him of her beauty. She confesses that she loved, because she was beloved,-that charm had deluded her; and she declares with transport, that joy had not

' piacer si forte, Che, come vedi, ancor non m' abbandona.'

It is thus that Dante unites perspicuity with conciseness, and the most naked simplicity with the profoundest observation of the heart. Her guilty passion survives its punishment by Heaven - but without a shade of impiety. How striking is the contrast of her extreme happiness in the midst of torments that can never cease! when, resuming her narrative, those that have gone before them, we may she, nevertheless, goes on to relieve her bro-ther-in-law from all imputation of having seduced her. Alone, and unconscious of their danger, they read a love-story together. They gazed upon each other, pale with emotion; but the secret of their mutual passion never escaped their lips :-

> Per più fiate gli occhi ci sospinse Quella lettura, e scolorocci il viso; Ma solo un punto fu qual che ci vinse.'

story was the ruin of Francesca. It was the enter, and passion we hold that he exaggerates; romance of Lancilot and Genevra, wife of Ar- but for subtle dissection of thought and imaginthur, king of England :-

Quando leggemmo il disiato riso
Esser baciato da cotanto amante,
Questi, che mai da me non fia diviso
La bocca mi baciò tutto tremante.'

After this avowal, she hastens to complete the picture with one touch which covers her with confusion.

glowing looks; whilst her lover stands by her series of adventures of flight and pursuit; the side, listening in silence and in tears. Dante, fugitive in perpetual apprehension of being too, who bad hitherto questioned her, no longer overwhelmed with the worst calamities, and the ventures to inquire in what manner her hus. pursuer, by his ingenuity and resources, keepband had put her to death; but is so overawed ing his victim in a state of the most fearful by pity, that he sinks into a swoon. Nor is alarm. This was the project of my third this to be considered as merely a poetical exvolume. I was next called upon to conceive a aggeration. The poet had probably known dramatic and impressive situation adequate to her when a girl, blooming in innocence and account for the impulse that the pursuer should beauty under the paternal roof. This, we feel, incessantly to alarm and harass his victim. think, is the true account of the overwhelming with an inextinguishable resolution never to sympathy with which her form overpowers allow him the least interval of peace and sehim. The episode, too, was written by him in curity. This I apprehended could best be the very house in which she was born, and in effected by a secret murder, to the investigation which he had himself, during the last ten years of his exile, found a constant asylum."

Whig and Tory, saint and sinner, are, in-deed, forced into highly amusing fellowship in these pages. We have already had a peep at Southey and his constant assailant Macaulay; let us now conclude with a little bit of Ensign and Adjutant O'Doherty, the impartial volume. The subject of the first volume was quizzer of all things. Here is Dr. Magin's still to be invented. To account for the fearful rhyming chronicle of Lord Byron's poetical events of the third, it was necessary that the achievements of the year 1820:-

"To Venice he hied him,
And that city supplied him
With the matter capriclous
For his 's Bepto' facetious;
A model, so please ye,
Of a style free and easy.
The story that 's in it
Might be told in a minute;
But par parenthème chatting,
On this thing and that thing,
Keeps the shuttlecock flying,
And attention from dying. Keeps the shuttlecock flying,
And attention from dying.
There are some I could mention,
Think the author's intention
Was to sneer and disparage
The vow made in marriage;
But the sneer, as I take it,
Is against folks who break it.
Thunders in now on horseback
Maseppa 'the Cossack;
Though he was not a Hetman
In performing that feat, man;
And a wag, for his trouble,
Call'd him John Gilpin's double. The great ' Doge of Venice'
Little joy stirr'd within us;
And the purse of Old Drury
Was not burst, I assure ye,
With the weight of the treasure,
When, in spite of displeasure,
And legal injunction, Abjuring compunction,
This play they enlisted,
And to act it persisted,
Till 'twas thoroughly hiss'd at."

With two illustrations, not unworthy of she looks at her lover, and repeats with ensafely say this is a charming volume. The composition. In these hints I began with my thusiasm—
Questl, che mai da me non fia diviso'—

Obliged for MSS. and minute information to obliged for MSS. and with the first. I filled the Countess Guiccioli, who is now here in London.

> Standard Novels, No. XXII. Fleetwood, or with a new Preface, by the Author. 12mo. pp. 371. Bentley.

THE works of Mr. Godwin will always be a mine of wealth to the reflective mind. Into The description of two happy lovers in the the delicate nuances of feeling he does not ation, he has no equal. An author's own history of his production is always interesting; we shall therefore give Mr. Godwin's account of the "concoction" of Caleb Williams nearly

"I formed a conception of a book of fictitious adventure, that should in some way be distinguished by a very powerful interest. Pursuing 'Quel giorno più non vi leggemmo avante.'

She utters not another word!— and yet we my tale, then the second, and last of all the fancy her before us, with her downcast and first. I bent myself to the conception of a of which the innocent victim should be impelled by an unconquerable spirit of curiosity. The murderer would thus have a sufficient motive to persecute the unhappy discoverer, that he might deprive him of peace, character, and credit, and have him for ever in his power. This constituted the outline of my second pursuer should be invested with every advantage of fortune, with a resolution that nothing could defeat or baffle, and with extraordinary resources of intellect. Nor could my purpose of giving an overpowering interest to my tale be answered, without his appearing to have been originally endowed with a mighty store of amiable dispositions and virtues, so that his being driven to the first act of murder should be judged worthy of the deepest regret, and should be seen in some measure to have arisen out of his virtues themselves. It was necessary to make him, so to speak, the tenant of an atmosphere of romance, so that every reader should feel prompted almost to worship him for his high qualities. Here were ample materials for a first volume. I felt that I had a great advantage in thus carrying back my invention from the ultimate conclusion to the lution I became invulnerable. I resolved to first commencement of the train of adventures upon which I purposed to employ my pen. An entire unity of plot would be the infallible result; and the unity of spirit and interest in a tale truly considered, gives it a powerful hold on the reader, which can scarcely be generated with equal success in any other way. 1 devoted about two or three weeks to the imagining and putting down hints for my story, before I engaged seriously and methodically in its and last of all grappled with the first. I filled two or three sheets of demy writing-paper, folded in octavo, with these memorandums. They were put down with great brevity, yet explicitly enough to secure a perfect recollecthe New Man of Feeling. By William God-tion of their meaning, within the time necessary win. Revised, corrected, and illustrated, for drawing out the story at full, in short paragraphs of two, three, four, five, or six lines each. I then sat down to write my story from the beginning. I wrote for the most part but a short portion in any single day. I wrote only when the afflatus was upon me. I held it for a maxim, that any portion that was written when I was not fully in the vein, told for considerably worse than nothing. Idleness was a thousand times better in this case than industry against the grain. Idleness was only time lost; and the next day, it may be, was as promising as ever. It was merely a day perished from the calendar. But a passage written feebly, flatly, and in a wrong spirit, constituted an obstacle that it was next to impossible to correct and set right again. I wrote therefore by starts; sometimes for a week or ten days not a line. Yet all came to the same thing in the sequel. On on average a volume of 'Caleb Williams' cost me four months, neither less nor more. It must be admitted, however, that during the whole period, bating a few intervals, my mind was in a high state of excitement. I said to myself a thousand times, 'I will write a tale that shall constitute an epoch in the mind of the reader; that no one, after he has read it, shall ever be exactly the same man that he was before." I put these things down just as they happened, and with the most entire frankness. I know that it will sound like the most pitiable degree of self-conceit. But such perhaps ought to be the state of mind of an author when he does his best. At any rate, I have said nothing of my vain-glorious impulse for nearly forty years. When I had written about seventenths of the first volume, I was prevailed upon by the extreme importunity of an old and intimate friend to allow him the perusal of my manuscript. On the second day he returned it with a note to this purpose: 'I return you your manuscript, because I promised to do so. If I had obeyed the impulse of my own mind, I should have thrust it in the fire. If you persist, the book will infallibly prove the grave of your literary fame.' I doubtless felt no implicit deference for the judgment of my friendly critic: yet it cost me at least two days of deep anxiety before I recovered the shock. Let the reader picture to himself my situation. I felt no implicit deference for the judgment of my friendly critic: but it was all I had for it. This was my first experiment of an unbiased decision. It stood in the place of all the world to me. I could not, and I did not feel disposed to appeal any farther. If I had, how could I tell that the second and third judgment would be more favourable than the first? Then what would have been the result? No; I had nothing for it but to wrap myself in my own integrity. By dint of resoown anticipations of the whole, and bidding the world wait its time before it should be admitted to the consult. I began my narrative, as is the more usual way, in the third person. But I speedily became dissatisfied. I then assumed the first person, making the hero of my tale his own historian; and in this mode l have persisted in all my subsequent attempts at works of fiction. It was infinitely the best adapted, at least, to my vein of delineation, where the thing in which my imagination revelled the most freely, was the analysis of the private and internal operations of the mind, employing my metaphysical dissecting knife in tracing and laying bare the involutions of motive, and recording the gradually accumulating impulses, which led the personages I had to describe primarily to adopt the particular way of proceeding in which they afterwards embarked. When I had determined on the main purpose of my story, it was ever my method to get about me any productions of former authors that seemed to bear on my subject. I never entertained the fear, that in this way of proceeding I should be in danger of servilely copying my predecessors. I imagined that I had a vein of thinking that was properly my own, which would always preserve me from plagiarism. I read other authors, that I might see what they had done, or, more properly, that I might forcibly hold my mind and occupy my thoughts in a particular train, I and my predecessors travelling in some sense to the same goal, at the same time that I struck out a path of my own, without ultimately heeding the direction they pursued, and disdsining to in-quire whether by any chance it for a few steps coincided or did not coincide with mine. Thus, in the instance of Caleb Williams, I read over a little old book, entitled the Adventures of Mademoiselle de St. Phale, a French Protestant in the times of the fiercest persecution of the Huguenots, who fled through France in the utmost terror, in the midst of eternal alarms and hair-breadth escapes, having her quarters perpetually beaten up, and by scarcely any chance finding a moment's interval of security. turned over the pages of a tremendous compilation, entitled, God's Revenge against Murder, where the beam of the eye of Omniscience was represented as perpetually pursuing the guilty, and laying open his most hidden retreats to the light of day. I was extremely conversant with the Newgate Calendar, and the Lives of the Pirates. In the mean time no works of fiction came amiss to me, provided they were written with energy. The authors were still employed upon the same mine as myself, however different was the vein they pursued: we were all of us engaged in exploring the entrails of mind and motive, and in tracing the various rencontres and clashes that may occur between man and man in the diversified scene of human life. I rather amused myself with tracing a certain similitude between the story of Caleb Williams and the tale of Bluebeard, than derived any hints from that admirable specimen of the terrific. Falkland was my Bluebeard, who had perpetrated atrocious crimes, which, if discovered, he might expect to have all the world roused to revenge against him. Caleb Williams was the wife, who in spite of warning, persisted in his attempts to discover the forbidden secret; and, when he had succeeded, struggled as fruitlessly to escape the consequences, as the wife of Bluebeard in washing the key of the ensanguined chamber, who, as often as she into effect. As women have often shewn they the second and third in conjunction on the west cleared the stain of blood from the one side, can do more than men, we can see no objection side. 17d 7h—the first and second satellites on go on to the end, trusting as I could to my found it shewing itself with frightful distinctness on the other.

We do not approve the taste which has led Mr. Pickering to select for a frontispiece the most extravagant scene in the book; but he has made amends by a sweet and touching little vignette.

The Aurora Borealis; a Literary Annual. Edited by Members of the Society of Friends. Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1833, Empson; London, Tilt.

WE are glad to see such an evidence of the diffusion of a love for elegant literature among that respectable body, the Society of Friends, as is indicated by the present volume, whose contents are various, and marked both by talent and good taste. Among the papers we would mention as having peculiarly pleased us, are — "Fancies on Clocks," a very lively sketch, by H. F. Chorley; "George Fox and his Contemporaries," by W. Howitt; "The Deaths of the Flowers," by J. A. Seyton; and "The Savoyard," by P. M. James; to which we might add others; but we would rather refer to the volume in wide circulation, and quote the following pleasing poem by Bernard Barton.

" Town and Country: addressed to a Friend in London. God made the country, and man made the town.'-Comper.

The bard spake sooth; and yet, my friend, Experience, nothing loath, Will own, that good and evil blend With human life in both.

Thy lot in crowded streets is thrown, Mine in the rural shade: Yet of the life that each hath known, How mingled is the braid!

' God made the country;' yet in scenes Where spotless peace should reign, How much of evil intervenes To shed its darker stain!

Nature, indeed, performs her part, Her Author to reveal,
And speaks unto the human heart,
If we her charms would feel.

But hearts alone, or in a crowd, Must feel their charms imprest; And spirits by their power be bowed, Ere Peace can build her nest.

' Man made the town;' yet even there, If but to nature true,
Thought, feeling, fancy, all may share
A banquet ever new.

There, mind, by intercourse with mind, May cultivate its powers: And liberal arts, by taste refined, Bring forth unfading flowers.

There Science claims her proudest home; There Themis gives her laws; And there, in many a stately dome, Religion pleads her cause.

Nay, even there, if rightly taught,
'Mid streets by thousands trod,
May souls, in meditative thought,
Communion hold with God.

Virtue will own no local spell,
Howe'er by us esteemed;
In Eden's bowers man sinned and fell—
In Salem was redeemed."

The Aurora Borealis is neatly and substantially bound in dark green and gold; and the frontispiece represents a most simple and sweet looking young female, "the Quaker bride."

A Call to Women of all Ranks in the British Empire, on the subject of the National Debt. pp. 57. 1832. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THIS is a most patriotic pamphlet, in which the fair and sanguine writer calls upon her sex to pay off a portion of the national debt by voluntary contribution. She earnestly exhorts them not to be deterred from the plan by real obstacles or ridicule; and suggests ways and means, such as boxes in churches and marketplaces, public collections quarterly, a place of

to their trying this amiable, if not visionary, scheme, which would at any rate do good as far as it went.

Memoirs of Louis XVIII. 2 vols. 1832. Saunders and Otley.

Nor worth the original publication, still less worth the translation. This is one of the many instances of the disgraceful system on which too much French biography is got up: a bookselling forgery, with as little regard to truth as to decency. Half the memoirs that now appear in Paris are, in reality, historical novels, only without plot.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

Nov. 21. - Mr. Murchison, the president, in the chair. Several gentlemen were elected Fellows. The paper by Archdeacon Verschoyle, on the coast of Sligo and Mayo, begun at the last meeting, was concluded. A communication was afterwards read from Professor Sedgwick, on the discovery of a bed of recent shells in the Isle of Sheppey, 140 feet above the level of the sea, and 16 feet below the surface.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENA FOR DECEMBER. 21d 6h 56m-the Sun enters Capricornus.

Lunar Phases and Conjunctions.

The Moon will be in conjunction with

	D.	н.	м.
Mars in Taurus	5	19	20
Saturn in Virgo	14	9	21
Mercury in Sagittarius	22	2	38
Venus in Capricornus	25	0	24
Uranus in Capricornus · · · · · · ·	25	10	0
Jupiter in Pisces		11	35

5d - Mercury in conjunction with a Sagittarii: difference of latitude 6'. 7d - greatest elongation (20° 52') as an evening star. 15dstationary near 2 & Sagittarii. 17d-ascending node. 22d-in perihelion. 24d 11h 15m-inferior conjunction with the Sun.

Venus having escaped from the solar rays, is now a conspicuous object as an evening star. If examined with a telescope, she will appear of a gibbous phase, about one-sixth of her disc being defective of light. 8d—in conjunction with 53 Sagittarii: difference of latitude 1'. 12d-greatest south latitude. 29d 2h - in conjunction with Uranus.

25d-Mars stationary near & Arietis.

6d-Vesta in conjunction with β Libræ: difference in declination 3° 54'; the planet south of the star. 31d - Juno in conjunction with 3 Libræ: difference in declination 1° 12'; the planet south of the star. 19d — Pallas in conjunction with 981 Aquarii; the planet 2° south of the star. 10d - Ceres about 8º north of Stella Mira, a variable star in Cetus.

11d 14h 15m-Jupiter in quadrature.

Eclipses of the Satellites.

	D.	H.	M.	8.
First Satellite, emersion · · · ·	2	8	38	37
	9	10	34	38
	11	5	3	40
	18	-6	59	43
	25	8	55	42
Second Satellite · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	19	6	51	5
	26	9	27	0
Third Satellite, immersion	1	11	11	39
emersion · · · ·	30	6	15	31
Fourth Satellite, immersion.	8	9	35	46
amereion	QK.	- 5	47	16

8d 7h - the first and fourth satellites in condeposit, and an open registry, for carrying it junction with each other, east of Jupiter; and the second and third in conjunction on the west the disc of Jupiter, in which situation they | when his son Henry was a youth, residing in | which has been discovered only within a few may be seen with a good telescope.

3d 13h - the Sun in the plane of Saturn's ring. To the northern part of the ring the Sun begins to appear on 1d 20h, or 1d 18h 7m before the centre of the Sun passing the plane of the planet's ring; and a similar portion will clapse after this period before the whole diameter of the Sun becomes visible, which takes place on 5d 9h. This planet is at present the most interesting telescopic object in the ld_Uranus near . Capricorni.

Deptford.

J. T. BARKER.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

BOYAL SOCIETY.

YESTERDAY the anniversary meeting took place; H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex in the The lateness of the hour at which the business of the meeting was concluded, prevents our stating more than the following points:the Copley medal was awarded to Mr. Faraday for his magneto-electric discoveries; and to M. Poisson for his treatise on capillary attraction. A letter from the Privy Purse was read: it placed, by command of his Majesty, two gold medals, value 50%, annually at the disposal of the Society. His royal highness delivered an able and eloquent address on the occasion, which took almost two hours in delivery. It noticed the loss the Society had sustained by the death of nearly thirty English and foreign members, containing amongst the former Sir Everard Home, the first practising surgeon ever raised to a baronetcy, Sir James M'Intosh, and Sir J. Hall; amongst the latter were the names of Cuvier, Zach, and Scarpa. It also alluded, in glowing terms, to the noble support and splendid reception given by the University of Oxford to the British Association for the Promotion of Science, noticed in the Literary Gazette some time ago. His royal highness was re-elected president.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

MR. HUDSON GURNEY in the chair. Mr. Faulkner presented a copy of an ancient brass in Chelsea church, dug up in October last, and representing Sir Arthur, Lady Gorges, and children. A further communication from Mr. Rickman, on ecclesiastical architecture, was read, in which he detailed the progress of the art in England from the time of the Roman occupation of the country, until the introduction of the Italian style in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I., and the total abandonment of the Gothic in that of Charles II. Among many highly interesting details, Mr. R. observed, that it had been too much the practice to designate Saxon buildings as Norman; and, from the number of churches mentioned in the Domesday survey, he considers that there are several Saxon buildings still in existence: he is also of opinion that the pointed arch originated from the intersecting round arches of the Normans. He proposes, in his next communi-cation, to give a similar history of ecclesiastical architecture in France, and afterwards to comare the styles of the two countries. - Mr. Ellis communicated a letter from Lord Paulett to Queen Elizabeth, in the year 1571, containing a report on the heavy debt with which Henry VIII. had encumbered his succeeding children, and the cause of it. He states that Henry VII. had amassed great wealth, but the Tower, a council was held to consider whether he should be educated "in worldly wisdom," or in pleasures and amusements; when the latter sage course was determined on, in the prosecution of which, and the consequent habits of Henry VIII., he dissipated all his father's wealth, and whatever besides he could obtain from the clergy and all classes of the people; and left an enormous debt, which was remaining in the reign of Elizabeth.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

Nov. 21st. - Several members were elected. A prayer, in the handwriting, and supposed to be of the composition, of King Charles I., discovered in the State Paper Office, by Mr. Lemon, with some remarks by the Rev. Mr. Clissold, was read. As this document bears date 1631, many years previous to the com-mencement of the civil wars—as it manifests a deep impression of piety, and appears to have been in daily use by the king—it may be regarded as proving that the unhappy monarch's devotional feelings were not the consequence of his adversity. Its style is not generally characterised by that studied antithesis, or by the other peculiarities in which the Eikon Basilike, so long attributed to Charles, abounds. A part of a second paper was likewise read, containing extracts from a MS. relating to the escape of King Charles II. after the battle of Worcester, which has lately found its way into the British Museum. It is the narrative of Colonel Gunter, of Rackton, Sussex, who was the person that procured a vessel to transport the royal fugitive to the coast of France, and attended him across the country from Wiltshire to Shoreham, where he embarked. The account purports to have been written, from the colonel's dictation, by his son; and authentically illustrates, by a great number of curious and minute details, only portion of the romantic events to which it relates in which any thing was left to be desired by the historical inquirer.

PALENQUE, MEXICO.

LETTERS have lately been received in this country from Mr. Waldeck, a very clever and intelligent German, and an excellent draughtsman (formerly a pupil of David's, and subsequently in the Engineers, in Egypt, under Buonaparte), who has been for some years in Mexico, and who is at present employed by the Mexican government in exploring and designing the extraordinary and interesting ruins of Palenque. In one of his letters, speaking of "those temples, the beautiful and original construction of which, partaking of the Asiatic and Egyptian style, seem to defy the efforts of the antiquary to lift the veil which hides their origin," Mr. Waldeck says:—

"I have discovered three tablets of writing; and they probably possess greater interest than any hieroglyphical figures hitherto known, as they are perfect, and form the ornament of the great inner wall of a temple which I believe to have been dedicated to the goddess Ioactizitl. The resemblance which exists between the Mexican characters and these will facilitate to me the knowledge of the latter. From what I have observed, the people of Palenque were the first inhabitants of this country, and the Mexicans were instructed by them in the arts; the general style of their architecture being nearly the same. After the rainy season, I am to go fifteen leagues from the first palace I visited days. I shall then be able to judge with more certainty; at present it is difficult to give an opinion, without the risk of being greatly deceived. The subject is one which requires profound attention; and, indeed, it is only at London or at Paris, where I can consult numerous documents which have escaped my memory, that I shall be competent to the decision of this great question. Since I have seen Palenque, I find the origin of the Antiques des Tlaltiques no longer a problem; but it is the origin of the people who built those beautiful edifices which it seems difficult to ascertain. I require greater resources than I possess for the purpose of making extensive excavations; and the sum of ten thousand piastres subscribed at Mexico (but a part of which has been paid), will only suffice to enable me to fulfil my engagement [for two years], and I am desirous not to stop there. Having, after so many diffi-culties and perils, arrived on the spot, I am desirous to have at least the power of extending my researches. If I had at my disposal a thousand pounds sterling a-year, I am convinced that in two years more the whole of the ruins of Palenque would be as much laid open as those of Thebes—with this difference, that the prodigious extent of the ruins of Palenque affords greater facilities for discovery; every temple, palace, or house being invariably built on a natural eminence, of greater or less elevation. I have already gone over what has been described by Antonio del Rio and Dupaix: both have given but a very indifferent idea of objects, and their drawings are very incorrect. I have, moreover, seen buildings of which they knew nothing; and my exertions and those of my companion, Mr. Foudriot, will enable me to discover new ones every day."—[Translated from MS. Letters; and some of the names not very clear .- Ed. L. G.]

PINE ARTS.

BRITISH GALLERY, PALL MALL.

THE artists and students employed in copying the works of the old masters and others, finished their labours on Saturday last; and the results of their studies were yesterday exhibited to the royal family, nobility, and patrons of the fine arts. But the best effects of their practice must be looked for in their future productions; the object of copying being only to make the copyers acquainted with the style of handling and the character of colouring in the examples presented for study. It is expected that the individuals so employed leave their manners (we do not mean their politeness) at the door of the gallery, and then apply the remedy to their several defects; whether it be to soften the hardness of art, or to give spirit to an execution too woolly or blending; in colouring, to change crudeness for harmony, &c. Something of this we remarked on the opening of the rooms, and we again recommend the younger students to keep these objects in view.

Among those who have made the nearest approach to their prototypes are our female artists, as found in the copies after Canaletti, "A View on the Grand Canal in Venice," "A View on the Grand Canal in Venice," Miss Cooke, Miss Dufenlin; after the "Milk-Girl," by Gainsborough, Miss F. Corbaux; "Cupid," after Sir Joshua Reynolds, by the same lady; the "Nativity," Paulo Veronese, Miss Alabaster; separate studies from Marchesa Spinola, by Vandyke, Miss Derby. From the same picture are very clever copies by Fisk, W. Bone. Heaphy. and Miss M. Pickersgill. (for the ruins extend that distance along the W. Bone, Heaphy, and Miss M. Pickersgill. Rio Michal), to see a pyramid entirely of stone, The "Cupid," by Sir Joshua Reynolds, ap-

See "Disappearance and Re-appearance of Saturn's Ring," in the Celestial Phenomena for October, Lit. Gaz. No. 819.

G. G. Bullock, W. Sayer. The "Milk-Girl," by Gainsborough—from this painting there are also many, but few that appear to have happy to see and shake hands with them again. reached (with the exception of Miss Corbaux) It is unnecessary for us, however, to re-introduce ner. Many copies, in whole or in part, are Scott, Mr. Abernethy, Lord Durham, and other from the painting of "St. Martin dividing his distinguished persons. It is one great recom-Garments." Those by W. Buss and W. Hurst mendation of the Drawing-Room Scrap-Book, are clever examples. In the landscape depart-that, owing to the mode of its construction, it ment, the "Water-Mill," by Ruysdaël, has contains a much greater number of beautiful also been successfully copied by Childe. "Dutch prints than could otherwise be afforded at the Village," J. Hilder, J. Fussell. These are some price. of the principal copyers; but there are many others, whose practice in this way we doubt not but will, in their future performances, be eminently conspicuous.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Twenty-one Illustrations to Turner's Annual Tour for 1833. London. Moon and Boys. THE proofs of this work are before us, and we want words to express our admiration of them. Accustomed as we are to most beautiful design and splendid execution in productions of this class, we cannot but think that the present of "Forest Scenery," &c. His epitaph, written publication excels all that have preceded it. But we must reserve a detailed examination for our next No., and be contented for the present with stating, that the portfolio could not his engravers have here supplied.

Essex's New Drawing and Writing Slate. Dedicated, by permission, to Her Royal Highness the Princess Victoria. London, 1832.

table of every family where early instruction united with amusement is carried on. The examples selected for this purpose are simple and judicious, presenting a scale gradual in advance from the single line to the more complicated object; and, agreeing with the ingenious publisher, that as children

"Gain the ruddy glow of health, While butterflies pursuing," this pleasing toy will accomplish the object of improving the hand. We understand that the publisher of this clever article is the brother of have been noticed in our pages with deserved commendation. Mr. W. Essex was a pupil of the late Mr. Moss, and has recently executed an enamel after that expressive and beautiful perhaps, a greater interest will be felt in the painting by D. Wilkie, R.A., from Allan Ramsay's "Gentle Shepherd," in which the character of the original picture is preserved with the greatest fidelity; and if excellence in this difficult and enduring branch of art can bestow celebrity and obtain patronage, Mr. W. Essex has the best possible claim to both.

Poetical Illustrations, by L. E. L. London, 1833. Fisher and Co.

ceived work, and of the extraordinary talent, imagination, and versatility which they dis-

Views of the principal Seats and Marine and Landscape Scenery in the neighbourhood of Lymington, Hants. From original pictures by J. M. Gilbert; drawn on stone by L. Haghe. Part II. Lymington, 1832, Grove; London, Ackermann; and Reeves.

FOUR more exceedingly pretty views, executed in a free, unaffected, and artist-like manner. That of "Boldre Church" is especially inte-

William Gilpin, sometime vicar of this parish, living above fifty years in happy union, they the atonement of a blessed Redeemer for their the age of 82."

National Portrait Gallery. Part XLIV. With Memoirs by W. Jerdan, Esq. F.S.A. &c. London, 1832. Fisher, Son, and Co.

LORD PALMERSTON

This No. contains portraits of Lord Palmerston, Admiral Sir T. Troubridge, and Jeremy Bentham. Of the last a succinct view is taken, both as regards his long, laborious, and honourthe unfortunate commander of the Blenheim, who perished with all his crew, form a contrast to the pacific toils of the philosopher. But, sketch of our foreign minister, on whose cha-

"We could hardly select a life of greater public interest at the present moment than that of Fisher's Drawing-Room Scrap-Book. With the noble secretary for foreign affairs. The arduous duties he has to perform, the secrecy with which his measures must be clothed, and Or the poetical illustrations of this well-con- the consequently imperfect view of them that can be afforded, either for their explanation or justification, and the vast importance attached pears, from the number of copies, to have been in | no fewer than six-and-thirty finely-executed | fallen upon us in the course of this work. We great request. Mr. P. Simpson, Mr. T. Robson. plates. Although most of them are old ac- can only endeavour to perform it with imparquaintances, yet we were so much pleased with tiality and discretion, unbiased by political them on our first interview, that we are very opinion, and give the fairest construction in our power both to past conduct and existing circumstances. The family of Temple is of any very close resemblance. The "Nativity," them to our readers, further than by observing the highest antiquity. From the second volume by P. Veronese—besides Miss Alabaster's clever that they form a judiciously selected and agree-copy, there is one by T. Clater, and also one able mélange; consisting principally of views of it is derived from a son of Leofrick, earl of by Heaphy. "Magdalen," by Guido, Miss Dutton; "Lucretia," by Rembrandt, B. R. Faulkston; "Lucretia," by Rembran who is reported to have rode naked through Coventry to obtain some immunities from her husband for that place, whence their portraits were placed in Trinity church in the reign of Richard II. with the legend,

'I, Lurick, for Love of Thee Do make Coventry Toll-free.'

They had three sons, viz. Algar, earl of Mercia, Montgomery, and Henry, and were denominated from the manor of Temple in the hundred of Sparkenho, standing in Welborough. Their descendants are conspicuously mentioned in the history of England throughout succeeding generations; and, in the reigns of Edward VI. and Queen Elizabeth, one of them, Peter Temple, purchased lands in Warwickshire, and the manor of Stowe in the county of Buckingham. This Peter married Millicent, daughter of William Jekyll, Esq., and had two by himself, strikes us to be at once so simple sons, whereof Anthony, the youngest, was and so original, that we transcribe it from the topographical description annexed to the plate:

"In a quiet mansion, beneath this stone, se-the present Lord Palmerston; while from contain a richer treasure than Mr. Turner and cured from the afflictions and still more dan- John, the eldest, sprung the other branch, gerous enjoyments of life, lie the remains of which, merging through a female in the Grenvilles, is represented by the earldom of Temple together with [those of] Mary his wife. After and dukedom of Buckingham. Lord Palmerston's ancestors shine in our national annals. hope to be raised, in God's due time, through In the arms of the Authory we have mentioned, expired the chivalrous Sir Philip Sid-COMPLETE in all its parts, and obvious for its repented transgressions, to a state of joyful ney; and to his son John, master of the Rolls utility in guiding the hand, and preparing it immortality: there it will be a new joy to in Ireland, knighted by Charles I., we owe the for more efficient practice, this elegant little meet several of their good neighbours, who history of the Irish rebellion. His son, Wilarticle cannot fail of finding a place on the now lie scattered in these sacred precincts liam, was the celebrated statesman and author, around them. He died April 5th, 1804, at one of whose grand-daughters married her the age of 80. She died July 14th, 1807, at cousin John, the son of Sir John Temple, Knt., who was a person eminently distinguished as solicitor and attorney-general, and speaker of the House of Commons in Ireland. From him descended Henry, the first Viscount Palmerston, created in 1722, and succeeded by his grandson, also Henry, in 1757. He married Mary, daughter of B. Mee, Esq., by whom he had Henry John, the subject of our memoir, born the 20th October, 1784, and who came to the title as third viscount, on the death of his Mr. W. Essex, enamel painter to her Royal able life, and his peculiar system for the imfather, in 1802. Henry John was educated at Highness the Princess Augusta, whose works provement of mankind. The naval exploits of Harrow, and afterwards studied for two years at Edinburgh, under the tuition of Professor Dugald Stewart. From the care of this eminent scholar and philosopher, he went to Cambridge, and entered of St. John's College in 1803. During his residence at the University, we do not know that any previous published account exists. We quote it therefore entire from the work before us. for any but an honorary degree. Such, however, was the respect and consideration which his attainments and character had attracted, that on the decease of Mr. Pitt, in January 1806, while he was still an under-graduate, it was suggested to him to become a candidate for the representation in parliament, and he contested the election against Lord Henry Petty, now Marquess of Lansdowne. That he play, we spoke in a former number, and in to his functions, all conspire to render our task was outvoted cannot be deemed extraordinary, another part of our publication. There are as difficult and as delicate as any which has when we recollect that his opponent held the seals as chancellor of the exchequer, and was welland favourably known in public life; but the fact itself is a striking testimony of the sense entertained of his merits by his academic compeers. He was not, however, long detained from that important field of intellectual and political competition, the House of Commons, but in 1807 took his seat for the borough of Newport in the Isle of Wight; and on the accession of the Duke of Portland to office, became a lord of the Admiralty. In May of the same year, he again offered himself as a candidate for the University of Cambridge; and lost his election by two votes, in consequence of a coalition with Sir Vicary Gibbs, which, though desirable for the government, was injurious to his individual cause. By this time his lordship had nevertheless established so strong a personal interest, that on the next vacancy, in 1811, occasioned by the elevation of Lord Euston to the House of Peers, he was returned by a very large majority over Mr. Smyth, his opponent. From this period till the dissolution consequent upon the Reform Bill, he continued to represent the University; and his connexion with his constituents has always been considered to be highly to the credit of both parties. In speaking thus of this connexion, we are led to remark, that Lord Palmerston could never be induced to conceal or compromise his opinions on the great question of Catholic emancipation; though it was well known that his sentiments were opposite to those of a majority of the large college to which he belongs, and a more qualified support of it would have saved him from the frequent risk of losing his seat which he experienced. Such, on the other hand, was the zeal of his personal friends, that they would not allow his honest and conscientious conduct to deprive him of their suffrages, and by their aid he was firmly sustained. In 1826, the extraordinary exhibition took place of the attorney-general and the secretary for Ireland, under a divided cabinet, standing for the University of Cambridge against a minister of the crown; and on this occasion the whole of the liberal party in opposition to the government, gave their cordial support to that minister, and mainly contributed to his return. This was a triumph to him of no common kind; and his relation with the University appeared to have acquired a permanent stability. The alarm, however, which seized upon the clergy upon the first disclosure of the Reform Bill, produced a universal effort on the part of that body to secure the return of any candidate who would pledge himself to oppose it; and Lord Palmerston failed before their banded resistance. Thus ended his intercourse with Cambridge, of which we have taken a succinct view, not only because it portrays the nature and vicissitudes of parliamentary association, but is a characteristic picture of the learned mass to whom it refers, and, throughout, extremely honourable to the noble person who is the subject of our sketch. On the same ground on which Mr. Canning declined Oxford, he lost Cambridge: the Catholic question, supported on principle, divided from him those who would otherwise have been on his side; and, thus weakened, even the warmth of his friends and admirers could not succeed against the additional influence of the dread inspired by Reform. We now turn from the means by which the House of Commons was entered, to the bearing and estimation of the noble lord in that house. During the early portion of his attendance in parliament, he did not make any speeches of great display; but the clear every subject, had not failed to attract the ceeded to the premiership, he offered his lord-attention of Mr. Perceval, with whom, we ship a seat in the cabinet, the acceptance of believe, he was not particularly acquainted. But it required not the acuteness of that singularly acute man to discover the value of such a coadjutor: and when he became prime-minister, he lost no time in offering his lordship the post of secretary at war. From that period, 28th October, 1809, till his lamentable death, a sincere friendship existed between them; from which we may safely infer, that had it pleased Providence to prolong his life, Mr. Perceval would soon have distinguished him by farther proofs of his esteem and confidence. Lord Palmerston continued to hold the office of secretary at war during the long administration of Lord Liverpool, with whom we have understood he had but little intercourse, but closely devoted himself to the duties of a most arduous situathe deepest confusion. Grateful honours have been justly awarded to the exertions of H. R. H. the Duke of York, as commander-in-chief of universally acknowledged truth, when we say, that in his sphere of usefulness the labours of Lord Palmerston deserve an equal share of applause. We have sought the information where it could best be obtained, from several and authentic sources, and we have ascertained that he matured arrangements for disposing of the most onerous dead weight which can paralyse and weigh down an official department vast arrears of unsettled accounts, to the great pecuniary advantage of the public, as well as to the efficient despatch of business. He was also the author of various rules and regulations, by which our system of military finance was much improved. It was obvious, indeed, to all around him, who had an opportunity of witnessing his talent and his toil, that the advantage as well as honour of the British army was the subject of his unceasing solicitude; some of these have since been reduced or taken away, and perhaps properly so, by the rigid spirit of economy which has marked the more tude the readiness with which merits were rewarded by him, as their ministerial protector and anxious benefactor. Lord Palmerston was chiefly brought under notice while secretary at war, by speeches connected with the duties of his department; and these were always conspicuous for their accuracy. During nearly the whole of one session, the army estimates occupied the particular attention of the House of Commons; and the perfect knowledge of the subject which he evinced in every debate, the ability with which he met the long and harassing opposition to the most minute items and details, and the clearness of his expositions both with respect to principles and figures, very greatly exalted him in the estimation of the house and country, as a complete man of business. He had always admired the liberal and enlightened views of Mr. Canning, but had not been united with him by any particular intiany speeches of great display; but the clear notion of the powers of each other, and accordance ive is, that very stupendous difficulties must and business-like manner in which he treated ingly we learn, that when Mr. Canning such have been overcome in the preservation of ship a seat in the cabinet, the acceptance of which could not fail to be in accordance with all the political opinions which he entertained, and with those views which he had declared to be most acceptable to him. To those views and principles we may affirm, in the face of party question and misrepresentation, sometimes arising out of ignorance, and sometimes out of interested motive, he has since continued to be firmly attached, and especially in what regards the relations of England with the continental powers. At the present moment (Nov. 22, 1832), we could scarcely announce a fact of more importance; and we need only refer to our Memoirs of Mr. Canning and Mr. Huskisson, to shew how much he admired their system of foreign policy. Lord Palmerston's conti-nuance in the cabinet formed by Lord Godetion; the result of which was, that he left in rich, follows naturally from what we have the highest order that which he had found in already stated. On the dissolution of that cabinet he was induced, together with Mr. Huskisson, to accede to the wishes of the Duke of Wellington, that they should retain their seats; the forces; and the most precious tribute to his and it may be presumed, from what afterwards memory is that of being called 'the soldier's happened, that they did so in the full expecta-friend.' Sure we are, that we only record the tion, that no change would be attempted in the policy previously pursued. On one part of this, namely, the independence of Greece, Lord Palmerston was known to feel the utmost anxiety. But whatever might have been the fate of these expectations, the debate of the 19th of May, 1828, and the consequences to Mr. Huskisson of the vote given by him, terminated their connexion with the ministry of the Duke of Wellington, with which Lord Palmerston could not have consented to act when so materially altered in its composition, and he tendered his resignation accordingly. While out of office, his lordship's great parliamentary talent was more fully developed. His speech on the Catholic question made an impression not readily to be forgotten; and nothing, perhaps, can place in a stronger light the merit it possessed in point of elegance, as well as of argument, than the recollection that it seemed to have the charm of novelty upon a and that nothing limited his efforts but a due topic not lightly supposed to have been exsense of the burdens borne by the people of hausted and worn threadbare. We have also England. The many augmentations of pay and under our eye his lordship's admirable speeches of pensions for service or wounds, which marked on our relations with Portugal, delivered June the era of his presiding at the war-office, were 1st, 1829, and March 10th, 1830, both of which the fruit of his own suggestions; and although created a powerful sensation. They are indeed very fine compositions, and for force and eloquence have so rarely been equalled, even in the British senate, that we regret our narrow recent proceedings of the legislature, yet the bounds prevent us from quoting some brilliant army will hardly fail to remember with gratipassages from them, and some luminous expopassages from them, and some luminous expositions of international law. On these, as on other occasions, the high and independent tone which his lordship ever maintained, and the value attached to his services as an official man, by all who had enjoyed the opportunity of appreciating them, supplied the place of parliamentary interest, or extensive party connexion. Of the former he is understood to be entirely destitute; and the individuals who have acted with him, are certainly more remarkable for their abilities than for their numbers. formation of the present ministry was likely to include men of this description. The domestic policy of the government is before the public, and not for us to discuss. In truth, impartial contemporary judgment is not to be expected upon it; and we must leave it to posterity to pronounce the award. We must also observe, that the difficulties which have evidently beset them in their foreign relations, must remain to macy. Both were well fitted to form a just be more fully exposed. All that we can pergreatly inclined to anticipate, that history will do justice to the statesman-like conduct of the noble secretary, when the mists, which necessarily overhang pending proceedings, are dispelled, and the clearness of truth is suffered to fall upon these intricate and complicated negotiations on which the fate of the world has hung. At all events, the precision and straightforwardness of Lord Palmerston's communications are no less remarkable, than the rapidity with which they are composed; and those who are acquainted with the great energy of his mind, and the great promptitude and firmness of his character, combined with highly polished manners and excellent temper, will readily admit his peculiar fitness for the eminent office for which he has been selected by Earl Grey. Lord Palmerston has recently been invited to stand for the representation of the new borough of Lambeth; but having also received a requisition, signed by a large portion of the freeholders of the southern division of Hampshire, in which his residence, Broadlands, near Romsey, is situated, it is probable that they will return him to the next parliament. Upon a late occasion, the Grand Cross of the Bath was bestowed upon his lordship, in a very flattering manner. His lordship is unmarried. His brother William is now our minister at the court of Naples: and of his two sisters, the eldest is married to Captain William Bowles, of the royal navy, and the youngest to Laurence Sullivan, Esq., the deputy-secretary at war. We shall only add, that though, from personal appearance, the noble secretary might not be averse to have his portrait painted and multiplied, this is the first likeness which has been engraved of him, from a portrait by a young artist in the possession of a friend."

DRAMA.

DRURY LANE.

On Saturday Mr. Power added another star to his literary and dramatic honours, by presenting us with a piece in two acts called Saint Patrick's Eve, or the Order of the Day. plot is simple; and the interest is chiefly sustained by the able drawing of the character, Frederick II. (Farren); Major O'Doherty, an Irishman in his service (Power); and other subordinate parts. Captain Gustavus Schoenfelt (Stanley) is secretly married to Catherine (Mrs. Nesbitt), and pledges himself to write to her from the camp at midnight. Meanwhile the king issues an order commanding that there should be no lights, on pain of military execution. Gustavus being wounded is the more anxious to communicate with his bride; and induces his friend O'Doherty to light a candle that he may indite a letter for him. He is caught, flagrante delicto, and condemned to death. His escape, however, is planned and effected; and in his flight he saves the king from an ambuscade of Austrian Pandours. Of course, all ends happily. Farren is Frederick in propria persona; and if the Prussiaus looked for that monarch back again, as the Spaniards look for Don Sebastian, he might certainly wear the crown at Berlin. Power is also excellent in O'Doherty, a higher line of Irish character, and more resembling Johnstone than any in which he has hitherto appeared. It is quiet, subdued, gentlemanlike, and yet peculiar and national. Mrs. Nesbitt is beauty personified in the lovely heroine, and plays with great feeling; and Mrs. Faucit, the mother of Gusaction. Blits and his wife, attendants on the whim.

peace, for the last two years; and we are Major, are represented with much fidelity and comic humour by Mr. Ayliffe and Mrs. C. Jones: the latter in the scene of leave-taking, previous to her master's execution, is, as she always is where the author admits of it, quite delightful. The other characters are all well sustained; the costume striking and effective; and the music, by T. Cooke (especially a concerted piece by the soldiery and their female companions), very charming. One scene, a moonlight on the Danube, is perhaps the most beautiful thing that ever Stanfield paintedwe cannot give higher praise. On repetition, Saint Patrick's Eve has been condensed and improved; and justly takes its place as one of the most pleasing of entertainments.

On Monday Othello was performed: Othello. Mr. Kean; Iago, Mr. Macready; Cassio, Mr. Cooper; Desdemona, Miss Phillips; Emilia, Mrs. Faucit; and Roderigo, Mr. Balls. This powerful cast drew a bumper house; and it is long since we enjoyed an equal treat within the walls of a theatre. The merits of Kean's Moor are too well known and too highly appreciated to require either being pointed out or panegy-rised: suffice it to say, that he never displayed them more forcibly than on this occasion. There was hardly a lapse in his delivery of the dialogue; and if we notice a somewhat of tameness in the early scenes, it only rendered the contrast of the after-whirlwind of passion more terrific. Macready, as Iago, exhibited throughout powers of the foremost order. Never was the part performed with greater discrimination, greater variety, or greater truth. While he smiles and is a villain, the affected pleasantry of Iago was portrayed with all the ease of genteel comedy; and when he darkened into bloody revenge, the picture was as appalling as it was perfect. We might select particular scenes, such as the advice to Roderigo, the working up the jealousy of Othello, and the last, as wonderful examples of dramatic effect; but the whole is so admirable, that we shall be content with offering it the unqualified tribute of our applause. It is often observed, that one or two parts finely performed communicate a sympathy to all the rest: this, however, was not needed to render Miss Phillips's Desdemona most pathetic and affecting. Her entire per-formance put her on a par with the emulous tragedians of whom we have already spoken. Nor was Cooper's Cassio or Mrs. Faucit's Emilia inferior in this splendid competition. Mr. Ball's Roderigo also demands our praise; and we shall only add, that if good plays were thus cast, we should never hear of the decline of the drama.

COVENT GARDEN.

THE novelties at this theatre since our last have been, Miss Kelly in the Innkeeper's Daughter, and T. P. Cooke as Hans Ketzler. This popular melo-drama was thus performed with every attraction. The pathos and force of Miss Kelly's delineation of the distracted Mary are almost overwhelming; and Cooke's seaman, though slight in this piece, unequalled on the stage. Nor should we close this notice without mentioning Mr. G. Bennett's striking personation of Harrop, Mr. Forrester's appearance and talent in Richard, and Mr. F. Mathews's Langley.

ADELPHI.

Henriette continues to crowd this favourite place of amusement; and Crimson Crimes, now running glibly from practice, fulfils all we predicated on its first representation. Shouts of tavus, a fine old portrait, endued with life and laughter reward its broad humour and ludicrous OLYMPIC.

THE Conquering Game, an original burletta from the pen of Mr. Barnard, was produced here on Wednesday with deserved success. Charles XII., the lion of the north, at the age of twenty-one, having beaten Russia and Denmark, and always professed to think that women were the roots of evil, is himself vanquished by the charms of Catherine Ormsdorff. He woos her after his own fashion, as a strict disciplinarian, under the assumed name of Colonel Ericson; and, as might be anticipated, finds it easier to model an army than the mind of a fair lady. Catherine loves and is beloved by his secretary Von Leiben, and has also another suitor, in the person of Count Fritterling, a courtier of the coxcomb species. In the end, the king is made to dress himself in the garb of her grandmother, to satisfy a whim of his enslaver, and is surprised by a rough and faithful adherent, Major Rapp, who smells out a conspiracy from some equivocal language he has overheard, and bursts in with the soldiery on his sovereign's privacy. The dénouement restores the hero to his mistress-Arms; and Catherine is consigned to Von Leiben. The play was admirably dressed, and extremely well acted. Mrs. Knight, as the mother of Catherine, was a perfect baroness of the old school; and Vestris herself, as Catherine, was delightful; as, by the by, was also her beautiful little Blenheim dog, which played better, and was more attractive, than all the Lions of Mysore. Webster, in Charles, looked and performed the part excellently; and J. Vining, Bland, and Leaves, left us nothing to wish for, as the secretary, major, and fop. The production altogether is very clever and very pleasing, and does credit to the rising talent of the young author.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Drury Lane. Nov. 16 .- It is not enough that the actors at this theatre are required to assume various and contrasted characters, but the same hard duty is exacted of the wardrobe. In the Devil's Bridge, Mr. Matthews, as a Swiss, had on the dress worn by H. Wallack in Werner, as a German, and has since, in Lodoiska, sported the identical same garb as a Pole. Mr. Yarnold wears the same uniform in the Devil's Bridge and Born to good luck, the scene of the first piece being laid in Switzerland, and of the second in Naples. The final explosion in the Devil's Bridge was particularly amusing. Some gunpowder was ignited at the bottom, the characters to be blown up walked off, and the curtain came down.

Covent Garden. Nov. 19.—Mr. Knowles, in William Tell, in flinging away the apple, appeared purposely to aim it at the stage lights, and hurled it from him with such fury as to smash at least a dozen of them. The pole on which the cap was placed was prepared for breaking when Tell should knock it down, but unfortunately mistaking its cue, it broke and fell long before the patriot approached it. The lower piece was pulled up, the rest stuck in, and the situations, like the pole, rendered pointless.

Drury Lane. Nov. 20. - The Revenge. Count Tasistro, as the Moor, wore a dress which would have been most praiseworthily correct had Zanga been a modern Greek. He thus delivered the passage

"Heroes and demigods have known their sorrows, Casars have wept"—
"Casars and demigods have known their misfortumes, Casars have wept."

You will scarcely credit it, but it is nevertheless true, that, conspicuously painted on a scene

Digitized by Google

palace hall in the time of the Spanish and Moorish wars-was a table bearing a moon-lamp and supporting a green umbrella!

Drury Lane. Nov. 21.—The Forty Thieves has been got up much in the same style as Bluebeard, the dresses and scenery remaining nearly in statu quo. There is no money wherewith to fill the measure, but tied-up bags, supposed to contain some, are placed in it one after another. and yet the piece of gold is discovered sticking to the bottom of it. There was an extra fairy in the first scene-my friend in the bonnet and shawl-she walked across the water. Why is she not engaged as one of the supers for comic pieces, as she is so fond of exhibiting her person on the stage, and is sure to create universal laughter whenever she appears.

Drury Lane. Nov. 24.—The last scene of Lodoiska, which, by the by, was the blue, or rather green, chamber of Bluebeard, instead of being blown up into the air, was, after sundry curtsies, dragged down beneath the earth.

On the first night of St. Patrick's Eve, Gus. tavus entered with his left arm in a sling instead of the right; the whole plot turning on his being rendered incapable of writing, in consequence of the wound in the latter.

In Othello, the fine scene of Naples and its bay served for the island of Cyprus, whither the Moor was sent to repel the Turks.

VARIETIES.

Ship-caulking.-It is stated in the French Journals, that an important discovery has been made with regard to the caulking of vessels; namely, that by mixing the essence of tobacco with the pitch and tar, the attack of worms and destructive insects is prevented, and the coppering of ships' bottoms rendered unnecessary.

New Bridge over the Thames. - A new bridge over the Thames, between Battersea and Vauxhall, is said to be projected, in conjunction with a great market for this populous district of the metropolis.

Sir J. Herschel. - A correspondence, very honourable to all parties, has just taken place, in which the Lord Provost of Edinburgh spontaneously offered the chair of natural philosophy, vacant in the university by the death of Sir John Leslie, to Sir John Herschel; which this eminent person has declined, in consequence of being about to reside for some years in a distant settlement.

Sir Walter Scott and the Author of Eugene Aram.-By a letter from a friend at Rome, of the 22d October, we have received the following interesting literary anecdote: "When Sir W. Scott arrived at Rome (writes our correspondent), he asked me for a book. I enumerated the few I had got, and he immediately pitched upon ' something by the author of Pelham.' I accordingly sent him Eugene Aram, which he returned me in a very few days, saying, that since he left England, he had not enjoyed so much amusement. He talked a long time about Bulwer and his productions; and I sincerely regret not having made a minute of his remarks. I recollect, however, distinctly his saying, 'Oh, that is a man whose name always puts me in mind that I must look about me; and, after expressing his high approbation of the tale he had just been reading, he added: 'I can hardly conceive a greater proof of talent than this, that a writer should take for his subject a story known well to almost every one of his readers, and that he should be able to work it up in so artful a manner as to which remains on nearly through the play-a [produce such intense interest. For this, he said, laughing, is the fault of the book. I read late—I could not lay it down; and twice it has spoiled my night's rest." We believe it was the last work of fiction the illustrious bard ever perused; for after this, a hurried journey, a fatal illness, and death, concluded his great > Adulterated Bread.-At a moment when the poisoning tricks played with this staff of life in London occupy the police and the public, we would recommend to notice, by way of example, the following anecdote from Sir A. Faulkner's Tour. At Marburg, "one of the few curiosities pointed out to the stranger is the effigy of a Jew in a cage, of whom a tale has come down, that during the pressure of a great famine, this nefarious son of the concision bought up an immense quantity of grain, and retailed it in adulterated bread. The people having no option but to purchase or starve, a disease was generated that spread with the devastation of a The regrating scoundrel was conplague. demned, and put into this identical cage, with his head thrust thereout in the precise posture represented by the effigy as it now stands, while every sort of the most tantalising cates was placed reeking at his nose, without the power of his touching a morsel. Some such occurrence, no doubt, gave rise to the story of Tantalus.'

> The Hydraulic Pen .- Among the ingenious and convenient inventions which, in this age of useful improvements, are ever and anon being brought forward, we have to notice with particular satisfaction, as contributing greatly to our own purposes, a new pen which has just been produced under the above mechanical It is certainly an excellent device. silver tube, of the size of an ordinary pencilcase, is so constructed that it is readily filled with ink instead of a piston. The same piston, by being turned in an opposite direction by a ring, permits the fluid to descend to a pen inserted in the case. We have thus, in the smallest possible compass, and the neatest form, a reservoir of ink, which may be carried about the person for a week, and supply the memorandum-book with its lasting records.

> Bust of Lord Eldon .- A fine bust of the venerable Lord Eldon, by Behnes, has been presented to the Society of the Middle Temple by Lord Stowell, and placed in the hall.

> Two Quakers .- A man convicted of murder at the Admiralty session is likely to escape hanging, in consequence of a legal objection to the jury, one of whom belonged to the Society of Friends, and was not sworn according to law. The gaoler told the prisoner of this objection; when he replied, "It was very friendly of him, seeing that we were both quakers.'

> One Letter ! - A letter was lately found, in which one friend spoke so freely of another that it led to an irreconcilable quarrel. "I am surprised," observed W., "that such bitter hostility should arise out of so trivial a cause.' "I am not at all," replied J.; "it is quite natural; for a friend becomes a fiend if you drop a letter."

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Mr. Upham announces for early publication the Translations of the Singhalese Histories and Tracts placed in lations of the Singhalese Histories and Tracts placed in his hands by Sir Alex. Johnston, forming a curious collection of original documents illustrative of the history and religion of the Singhalese.

An Account of the Bristol Riots, their Causes and Consequences, by a Clitzen.

A new monthly periodical, to be entitled the Zoological Magazine, or Journal of Natural History, intended as a cheap, amusing, and instructive introduction and companion to the study of zoology and natural history, is announced.

Wacousta, or the Prophecy, a Tale of the Canadas, by the Author of " Ecarté."

Dublin has somehow or other been unfortunate with its periodicals, though some of them have exhibited great talent: not discouraged, we observe a new monthly literary and political journal is announced. It is to be called the Dublin University Magazine.

Letters of Sir Walter Scott to the Rev. R. Polwhele, Mr. Davies Gilbert, Mr. Douce, and others, accompanied by an original Autobiography of Sir Hussey Vivian. Sketches in Greece and Constantinople.

A General View of the Geology of Scripture, in which the unerring truth of the Mosaic Narrative is exhibited, by George Fairholme, Esq.

A Digest of the Evidence before the Secret Committee of the House of Commons, on the Bank of England Charter, with Indexes.

Essays on Vegetable Physiology, practically applied, and illustrated by numerous Engravings, by James Main, A.L.S. Dublin has somehow or other been unfortunate with

A.L.S.
A third volume of Capt. Brown's Book of Butterflies, Moths, and Sphinxes, with Directions for catching and preserving Insects, &c.
The Dublin University Calendar for 1833, on the same plan as the Oxford and Cambridge University Calendars.
Mrs. Siddons, her Life, Times, and Contemporaries, by Thomas Campbell, Esq.
Milton, his Life, Times, Religious and Political Opinions, by Joseph Iviney.
Arthur Coningsby, a novel.
Whychcotte of St. John's, or the Court, the Camp, the Quarter-deck, and the Cloister.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS

Quarter-deck, and the Clolster.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Lardner's Cyclowedia, Vol. XXXVII. M'Intosh's History of England, Vol. III. fcp. 6s. cloth.—Brodie on the Urinary Organs, 8vo. 8s. bds. — Alderson on Cholera at Hull, 8vo. 5s. bds. — Edinburgh Cabinet Library, Vol. X. Humboldt's Travels and Researches, fcp. 5s. cloth.—Edgeworth's Novels and Tales, Vol. VIII. Fashionable Tales, Vol. III. fcp. 5s. cloth.—Buccaneer, 3 vols. post 8vo. II. IIs. 6t. bds. — Constable's Miscellany, Vol. LXXVII. Mudle's Guide to the Observation of Nature, 18mo. 3s. 6t. cloth.—Valpy's Shakspeare, with Hlustrations, Vol. II. 12mo. 5s. cloth.—Ditto Classical Library, No. XXXVI. Euripides, Vol. III. 4s. 6t. cloth.—Frost's Outline Celestial Atlas, oblong 4to. 10s. 6t. hf.-bd.—Nights of the Round Table, 12mo. second series, 5s. cloth.—Cooper's Tales and Conversations, 12mo. 3s. cloth.—Anstice's Greek Choric Poetry, 8vo. 8s. 6d. bds.—Twenty-one Illustrations to Turner's Annual Tour, Proofs, 2f. 2s.; Indla, 3s. 3s.; before letters, 4t. 4s.—Peter Parley's Tales about Natural History, 290 Cuts, 5s. bds.—Draper's Life of Penn, 32mo. 2s. 6d. bds.; 3s. 6d. silk.—Gurlt's Anatomy of the Horse, Part I. 8vo. and Atlas, folio, 1s. 12s. 6d. bds.—Statutes, 8vo. 2d and 3d William IV. 1s. 6d. bds.—Mortal Life, 1 vol. 8vo. 15s. bds.—Album Wreath for 1833, 4to. 1s. 4s. bds.—Ebenezer Elliott's Splendid Village, 12mo. 5s. cloth.—Select Library, Vol. Vill Age, 6d. bds.—Memoirs of John Mason Good, M.D. Portrait, 6s.—T. C. Croker's My Village versus "Our Village," 8s. bds.—V. Jones's Hographical Sketches of the Reform Ministers, 8vo. 18s. bds. Plates.—John Watkins's Life and Times of England's Patriot King, William IV. Plates, 8vo. 18s. bds. — Maxima Charta of 1832, 8vo. 3s. 6d.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

November.	Th	Thermometer.			Bar	Barometer.
Thursday 2					29.55	to	29.70
Friday · · · · 2:		29.		49.	29.83	••	29-90
Saturday 2	4	34.	• •	51.	29-99	••	29-96
Sunday 2		40.	••	49.	29-95	• •	29.78
Monday . 20		34.	• •	48.	29.52	••	29-63
Tuesday . 2	7	28.	• •	43.	29-62	••	29-43
Wednesday 2		31.	••	44.	29.54	••	29.61

Prevailing wind, S.E. and S.W. Except the 22d and 23d, generally cloudy; frequent rain ince the 24th.

Rain fallen, 6 of an inch. CHARLES H. ADAMS. Edmonton.

Latitude ····· 51° 37′ 32″ N.
Longitude ··· 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In mentioning Mr. Bernays last week, we by mistake spoke of him as belonging to the London University in-stead of the King's College. To E. Jones we answer, the Flora Medica. We must defer a number of critiques on works of art till next week.

till next week.

Nemo's communication is not suitable to our pages.

J. W. G.'s lines are pretty, and would shine in a place more fitting than (as a separate publication) in the L. G.

Having last year expressed our very favourable opinion of Baron Fabeck's method of teaching German, we are glad to have it confirmed on the experience of "Paterfamilias," Brighton, where the baron now is; but, at the same time, we must decline publishing his letter, because, were we to enter upon individual cases of successful tuition, our journal (such would be its correspondence) could not contain a tenth of the claims of competition.

The Editor of the L. G. thanks his good-natured friend "Observer," for directing his attention to the personal attacks made upon him in several contemporary publications; but he does not consider them to be deserving of notice. Next to the praise of estimable men, there is nothing more satisfactory than the abuse of the worthless.

ADVERTISEMENTS,

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

WRITING PAPER.—John Limbird. 143, Strand (the Mirror Office), a few Doors west of Somerast House, facing Catherine Street, solicits a trial of the Writing Papers, manufactured by the best Kentish and other Makers, sold by him at the following low Prices, for Cash.

	Per Quire of
	24 sheets.	20 perfect Quire
Pine Bath Post	6d.	90.
Superfine ditto	84.	124.
Ditto, ditto	9d.	13s. 6d.
Ditto, ditto	10d.	140.
Best thick Bath Post	1s. Od.	174.
Ditto, ditto, gilt	1s. 2d.	204.
Pine Laid Post, from 7d. to	1s. 04.	11s. to 17s.
Best Blue Wove Thin Post	10d.	14s.
Glazed Draft Paper	10d.	140.

Foolscap, from 9d. to 1s. 6d. per Quire, or 13s. 6d. to 26s. the leam. Note paper, 2d. per Quire, and upwards. Sealing Wax s. 6d. to 5s. the ib.

all other Articles in Stationery at equally low Prices.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

The Child's Orn Book. Embellished with Three Hundred Cuts, price 7s. 6d. in fancy boards, or 3s. 6d. bound, edition.

THE CHILD'S OWN BOOK. The 2d

London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Chcapside; N. Hailes Piccarilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; R. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; and Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh. Where may be had,

The Girl's Own Book, with 120 Cuts, price 4s. 6d. in fancy boards, or 5s. 6d. bound.

Constable's Miscellany.
With several Engravings, 3a. 6d.
A POPULAR GUIDE to the OBSERVATION of NATURE; or, Hints of Inducement to the Study of Natural Productions and Appearances, in their Connections and Relations.

s and Relations.

By R. MUDIB,

Author of the "British Naturalist," &c.

Forming the 77th Volume of "Constable's Miscellany."

By the same Author, First Lines of Zoology. 6s.
First Lines of Natural Philosophy. 5s. The Picture of India. 2d edition, 2 vols. price 12s.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane

Illustrations of Political Recommy.
No. XI. price Is. 6d.

FOR EACH and FOR ALL. A Tale.
By HARRIET MARTINEAU.

On the 1st Jan. No. XII. French Wines and Politics.

Price 3s. cloth boards Tales and Conversations. By Emily Cooper.

Mr. Bentiey (late Colburn and Bentley), has just published the following New Novels and Romances:—

The BUCCANEER;
a Story of the Protectorate. In 3 vols. post 8vo.
By the Author of "Sketches of Irish Character," &c.

II. Otterbourne; or, the Early Days of Hotspur. By the Author of "Derwentwater." 3 vols.
"A faithful picture of the times."—Literary Gazetie.

III. 2d edition, in 3 vols. post 8vo

Zohrab, the Hostage. By the Author of "Hajji Baba."

The String of Pearls.

By G. P. R. James, Esq. 2 vols. small 8vo. price 15s.

"A fund of entertainment to beguite the dreary winter's even ing."—£lobe.

The Spanish Novelists. By Thomas Roscoe

Esq.
Comprising a Series of National Tales of Life and Adventure.
Translated from the Originals, with Biographical and Critical

Notices, &c.

"The tales are all remarkable, and many of them admirable, and will prove a valuable addition to our literature."—New Monthly.

Geraldine Hamilton; or, the Three Trials. 9 vols.

"We have been much struck with the rare beauty and tenderness of this story."—Sun.

Also just ready, in 8 vols.

Recollections of a Chaperon.

The Life of a Sailor.

By a Captain in the Royal Navy.

DLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH
MAGAZINE. No. CCII. for December 1839.

I. The Lady of the Greenwood Tree. A Legend of Transylvania.—II. Passages from the Diary of a late Physician. Chan. XIV. The Magadalen.—III. Tom Cringle's Log. Chep. XIV. The Pirate's Leman.—IV. The Prench Revolution To Trail. The Practice Leman.—IV. The Prench Revolution To Trail.

The Casars. Chap. II. Augustus.—VI. Hristol. The Magastrates, and Reaction among the Operative.—IV. The Parew-II to Earth. By Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley.—IV. The Parew-II to Earth. By Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley.—IV. The Two Monuments. By Mrs. Hemann.—N. The Earty Dead By Arthonourable Augusta Norton.—XI. The Natolan Nort.—Tailer.—XII. The Burial of the Mighty. By Mrs. Hemann.—XIII. Partition of the Kingdom of the Netherlands.—XIV. The Age of Wonders, or the New Whig War.

Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and T. Cadell, Strand, London.

Price 6s. No. XIX. for December, of

THE QUARTERLY JOURNAL of

AGRICULTER, and of the Prize Essays and Transactions of the Highland Society of Scotland.

Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; T. Cadell, Strand,

London; and W. Curry, jun. and Co. Dublin.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia.
In monthly volumes, small 8vo. 6s. in cloth.
Just published, forming Vol. 37 of the above, Vol. III. of ISTORY of ENGLAND.
By the late SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH.

By the late of the Annual Sanctive States of the Spain and Portugal, Vol. V. and last.
Naval History of England, by R. Southey, Vol. I.
Treatise on Astronomy, by Sir John Herschel.
Treatise on Heat, and its Applications. By Dr. Lardner.
History of Ireland, by Thomas Moore, Vol. I.
London: Longman and Co., and John Taylor.

In 8 vols. small 8vo. 10r. cloth,

MILITARY MEMOURS of FIELDMARSHAL the DUKE of WELLINGTON.

"Major Shan ably morphete thing the state of the pressing the hore has ably morphete thing the state of the vars of our times into this excellent epitome."—Invited Service Journal. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Co.

Of whom may be had, Life and Reign of George IV. By W. Wallace, Esq. 8 vols. 15r.
Annual Retrospect of Public Affairs for 31. 2 vols. 10z. Historical Memoirs of the House of Bourbon. 2 vols. 10s.

Works of Sir Walter Scott.

WAVERLEY NOVELS,

This Volume concludes the Tale of the Fair Maid of Perth; and is very heautifully illustrated from Designs by T. Duncan, and D. O. Hill.

Vol. XXIV. of the New Issue is also just Printed for Robert Cadell, Edinburgh; and Whittaker and Co. London.

Of whom may be had, All the Early Volumes of the Waverley

Sir Walter Scott's Tales of a Grandfather, rst, Second, and Third Series. Half-bound, 10s. 6d. each. Tales of a Grandfather. Being Stories from the History of France. 3 vols. 104. 6d. Sir Walter Scott's Poetical Works, 11 vols.

8vo. 6l. The same, 11 vols. 18mo, 8l. 3s. Walter Scott's Miscellaneous Prose

Sir Watter Course
Works. 6 vols. 8vo. 31. 12z.

 This Collection includes the celebrated Lives of the Eaglish Novelists.

Captain Basil Hall's Voyages. 6 vols.

The Cook's Oracle. 7s. 6d. Mrs. Dalgairns' Cookery. 7s. 6d. Destiny. By the Author of "Marriage."

In 3 vols. 8vo. price 11. 114. 6d. boards,

MEMOIRS of Dr. BURNEY.

By his Daughter, MADAME D'ARBLAY.

"There have been no descriptions of Garrick, Doctor Johnson, Mrs. Thriale, Burks, of greater vivacity and strength than those contained in these volumes."—Spectator.

"Those who wish to see the brilliant parties of the days of hooped petticoats and three-story wigs, and hear the witty chitchat of the brightest men in art and literature, may do so cheaply now."—Atheneum.

"Pages thickly atreen with interesting them."

now."—Athension.
"Pages thickly strewn with interesting detail, and graphic sketches of those h roes of literature and art with which the Johnsonian age abounded."—Atlas.
Edward Mozon, 64, New Bond Street.

iandsomely printed in 18mo, price 24. in cloth boards,
MANUAL for the AFFLICTED; A MANUAL 10r Luc ALL Comprising a Practical Essay on Affliction, and a Series of Meditations and Prayers, selected and arranged for the Use of those who are in Sorrow, Trouble, Need, Sickness, or any other Adversity.

By THOMAS HARTWELL HORNE, B.D.

Of Saint John's College, Cambridge; Author of the "Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scripteres." London: T. Cadell, Strand; W. Blackwood, Edinburgh; and R. Milliken and Son, Dublin.

THE PRINCIPLES and PRACTICE of ARITHMETIC, designed for the Use of Stadents in the Universities.

By JOHN HIND, M.A. F.R.A.S.
Late Fellow and Tuter of Sidney Susser College, Cambridge.

By the same Author,
The Elements of Algebra. 2d edition, 8vo.

The Elements of Plane and Spherical Trigo-metry. 2d edition, 8vo. 10s. 6d. A Digested Series of Examples in the Differential Calculus. 8vo. 8s. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

8, New Buelington Street.

Mr. Bentley (late Colburn and Bentley) has just published the following Important New Works:—

Complete in 2 vols. 8vo. with fine Portrait, engraved by Finden, from an original Painting by Sir H. Raeburn, Maps, &c.

IFE OF SIR DAVID BAIRD, Bart.
By THEODORE HOOK, Esq.
Including his Correspondence with the Duke of Wellington, Marquess of Wellesley, Lords Meiville and Castlereagh, Sir John Moore, and other distinguished Characters: from the Originals, in the possession of Lady Baird.

The 4th Vol. of the English Translation of the Memoirs of Madame Junot, Duchess of Abrantes. Written by Herself. Comprising an Account of Gen. Junot's Secret Mission to Madrid and Lisbon, with numerous Anecdotes of the Nobility of Spain and Portugal. (Just ready.)

III. Visit to Germany and the Low Countries, in 1889, 30, 21. By Sir A. B. Faulkner. 2 vols.

Wild Sports of the West.
By the Auther of "Stories of Waterloo." 2 vols. 2ve. Plates.
"One of the most amusing and soul-stirring works ever published."—Bell's Life.

Only complete History of Scotland.

The History of Scotland,
from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Re
Chambers, A uthor of "The Picture of Scotland," &c..
In 2 small vols. printed and bound uniformly with the Weverley Novels. By Robert

The East India Sketch-Book ; or, Life in India. 2 vols.

"We strongly recommend this work, which fills up a gap left by Munday and Skinner, and only attempted in some other books, to which it is hardly worth referring." Specialor.

K.C.B. K.M.T. including his Correspondence.

MODERN NOVELS, ROMANCES, among which are almost experienced to the sold Cheap! among which are almost every forter of Merit published in the case four Via and sold are cost's. Bulver's published in the case four Via and sold are for good condition, and well admit for Copper's, & Cat.: the whole are in good condition, and well admit for Circulating Libraries. Societies, and Noblemen. Every Book is Priced, and may now be seen at Mr. Carvalho's, Whalesale Bookseller, 167, Fleet Bireet (Letters post-paid).

Philips's Guides, in neat cloth boards, 2s. 6d. rach. The Fourth Volume, and sold by all Booksellers.

PLEASING GOD; or, a Guide to the Conscientions. Uniform with the former Velumes, just Christian Experience; or, a Guide to the Communion with God; or, a Guide to the Eternity Realised; or, a Guide to the Thoughtful.

Nearly ready, the Fifth and concluding Volume, The God of Glory; or, a Guide to the Doubting.
"The God of glory appeared unto Abraham."—Stephen.

Currie's Diamond Edition of Burns' Works, complete in one 18mo. Folume.

In 1 beautiful vol. 18mo. price 7s. 6d. cloth boards, and 10s. embossed satin, or morocco, gilt edges, embossed sails, or morocco, gilt edges,

THE ENTIRE WORKS of ROBERT
BURNS; with an Account of his Life, and a Criticism on his Writings. To which are prefixed, some tibservations on the Character and Condition of the Scottish Pessentry.

The deale, come till JAMES CURRIE, M.D.

The deale, come till JAMES CURRIE, M.D.

The vols, come till JAMES CURRIE, M.D.

Leadon: Control of the Control of the Cotter's Saturday Night.

Leadon: Published by William Orr, 14, Paternoster Row; and Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Court.

In 8vo. price 8s. boards,

ECTURES on the DISEASES of the

URINARY ORGANS.

By B. C. BRODIE, F.R.S.

Sergeant-Surgeon to the King, and Surgeon te

St. George's Hospital.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Also, in 18mo. price 7s. boards,
Morbid Anatomy of some of the most important Parts of the Human Body, by Matthew Ballite, M.D.
With Preliminary Observations on Diseased Structures, by James Wardsop, Sargeon to the King, &cs.

The Gentry of England.

A Companion to the Feerage and Baronctage.
On the lst November was published, elegantly printed in royal fro. with the Armorial Ensigns of each Family beautifully engraved by Thompson, the First Part, price 7s. 6d. of the HISTORY of the COMMONERS of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, qualified by Landed Property to become Months: A Fernanda Brooks of the Extinct and Dormant Feerage, &c.

the Extinct and Dormant Peerage, &c.

The novelty and utility of this undertaking combine to invest it with no common claims to public attention. The highly influential and extensive class to whom it refers have at present no work of reference exhibiting an entire and authentic account of their respective families, although it is obvious how large a share of interest attaches to such an object, both for the parties themselves, and for all connected with them, by the ties either of alliance, friendship, neighbourhood, patronage, or political continency.

constinency.

Those gentlemen who may have additional communications to make to the Editor, are requested to send their letters, free of post-say, addressed to Mr. Coliburn, 13, Great Mariborough Street.
Published for H. Colburn, by R. Bentley, New Burlington Street.

CHRISTMAS TALES, Historical and CHRISTMAS TALES, Historical and Domestic.

By W. H. HARRISON,
Author of "Tales of a Physician," "The Humorist," &c..
Bustrated with Engravines in Line, by Bacon, Engleheart, foreograv, and C. Rolls; from Designs by Chrobolid, Richter, and S. Wirght, with a Medalion Fortrait, by Bate, of Sir Walter & Wirght, with a Medalion Fortrait, by Bate, of Sir Walter & Williams of the Plates, price 12s.

Eleganty bound in arabetque morocco, price 3s.; or with India Park of the Plates, price 12s.

For the Plates, price 12s.

South Works, for which purpose 150 Copies are taken off before the writing: So on India paper, colombier 4to price 18s.; and 100 as white paper, colombier 4to. 12s. For these early application will be necessary.

THE GIRL'S OWN BOOK.

By Mrs. CHILD,
Author of "The Mother's Book."
with 110 beautiful Cuts, price 4s. 6d. in boards, or 5s. 6d. bound in cloth, gilt edges.
Printed at the Chiswick Press.

The Child's Own Book, with 300 Cuts, Pice 7a. 6d. in beards, or 8v. 6d. bound in cloth, gilt edges. Lendon: Frinted for T. 7. and J. Tegg, Cheppide: N. Halles, Piccadilly: Bowders and Kirby, Oxford Street; Griffin and Co. Glasgow; Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh; J. Cumming, and W. F. Wakeman, Dublin.

INTRODUCTORY LECTURES on POLITICAL ECONOMY ASSESSMENT

POLITICAL ECONOMY, delivered in Easter Term, 1831.

By RICHARD WHATELY, D.D.

Archbishop of Dublin, late Principal of St. Alban's Hall, formerly Fellow of Oriel College, and Professor of Political Economy in the University of Oxford.

Second Edition, including Lecture IX. and other Additions.

3.8 The Note Leavest Control of the College of the Col

s The Ninth Lecture is also published separately, for the convenience of purchasers of the First Edition-Printed for B. Fellowes, Ludgate Street.

Of whom may be had, by the same Author,
Thoughts on Secondary Punishments, 8vo.

In foolscap 8vo. price 7s.

IVES of VASCO NUNEZ DE BALBAO and FRANCISCO PIZARRO; from the Spanish of Don Mannel Josef Quintana.
By Mrs. HODSON,
Author of "Wallace," "The Past," &c.
"The volume which has led us to these notices of the early exploits of discovery is the Spanish History of Quintana; for the translation of which the public are indebted to Mrs. Hodson, a lady well known to literature as Miss Holford, author of "Wallace," and of the translation by such a pen, se being insigned and excurate: the Spanish iddom is being insigned, and inscurate: the Spanish iddom is conducted without being sliegether extinguished; the narrative is conducted to our literary treasures a volume which singularly combined to our literary treasures a volume which singularly combined the genius of romance with fact."—Blackwood's Mag.
No. 186.

Printed for William Blackwood, Edinburgh; and Thomas Cadell, London.

Thomas Cadell, London.

Just published, price 2s. 6d. (to be had of Longman and Co. London).

CATALOGUE of ENGLISH, WELSH,
Scotch, and Imer History and Topography.

Including nearly the whole of the Printed Books relating to No. 11 the Printed Books relating to No. 11 the Printed Books relating to No. 11 the Printed Books relating to the Article of the Month of the Printed Books relating to this Article of the Month of the of the Mont

RASER'S MAGAZINE

FRASER'S MAGAZINE
for December 1832. Price 3t. 6d.
Contents: -Whig Foreim Policy—The Annuals—Lines written in Despondency—Physical Evidences of the Characteristics of Ancient Races among the Moderns—Capitain Forman, Lords
Brougham and John Russell—Literary Sketch of William Roscoe, Esq. with a full-length Portrait—The Spermaceti Candle—Rome Passages in the Life of an Idler, No. IV.—The World of Dreams—Walter Vivian the Smuggler—The Book of Aphorisms, by an Oriental Author; with a Running Commentary by Sir
Morgan O'Doherty, Bart.—Dialogue of the Dead; on Nepulchral Rites and Rights—Appeal of the King of the Netherlands to Heaven—Historical Document, No. II.—The Upparted of XXXXII.

James Fraser, 315, Regent Street.

Octavo Edition of White's Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne.

In 1 very handsome vol. 8vo. finely printed by Whittingham, and illustrated with beautiful Cuts of Scenery and Natural History,

THE NATURAL HISTORY and

HE NATUKAI, HISTORY and ANTIQUITIES of SELBORNE. A New Edition, with Notes by several eminent Naturalists, and an onlargement of the Naturalists' Calendar. Illustrated with numerous fine
Wood Engravings, complete in 1 vol. 8vo.
By the late Rev. GLIBERT WHITE.
London: Printed for J. and A. Arch; Longman, Rees, and Co.; Baldwin and Cradock; Hatchard and Son; Harding and Lepard; J., G., and F. Rivington; S. Barster; Whittaker and Co.; J. Duncan; W. Mason; J. Cochran; E. Hodgson; J. Bain;
W. J. and J. Maynard; J. Bohn; and Houlston and Son.

W. J. and J. Maynard; J. Bohn; and Houlston and Son.

Mrs. Austin's Bible Selections.

In 1 vol. 12mo. neatly bound, with a Frontispiece from Plaxman, engraved by Moses, price 5s.

ELECTIONS from the OLD TESTA—MENT; or, the Religion, Morality, and Poetry, of the Hebrew Scriptares, arranged under Heads.

"My sole object has been to put together all that presented itself to my own heart and mind as most persuasive, consolatory, or elevating, in such a form and order as to be easy of reference, conveniently arranged and divided, and freed from matter either hard to be understood, unattractive, or unprofitable (to say the least), for young and pure eyes,"—Prefuce.

"Selections, we believe, are now generally used in schools; but none that have fallen under our own notice at all equal the present attempt. It is not every one that can be intrusted with making these selections. The present is made by Mrs. Austin, as all dy distinguished for many accomplishments, and particularly abods into English one, "—I will the King, low, No. 25.

London: Published by Efficient Wilson, Royal Exchange.

PACTS and CIRCUMSTANCES relating to the CONDITION of the IRISH CLERGY of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH, and to the Prisent State of Ireland. By the Rev. T. S. TOWNSE ED. Rector of Timogue, Dublin.
W. Curry, jun. and Co.; and Simphin and Marshall, London.

Price 5s.

THE MORNING WATCH; or,
Quarterly Journal on Prophery and Theological Review.

"The described is professes are included by well-known writers in the state of the state of the well-known writers in this periodical) undoubtedly possess."—Record.

"The political articles are not the least extraordinary parts of this extraordinary journal."—Edinburgh Review.
Published for the Proprietors, by James Fraser, 215, Regent Street; and to be had (by order) of all Bookseliers.

In 2 vols. post 8vo. 21s. boards, EGENDS of the LIBRARY at LILIES.
By LORD and LADY NUCENT.
"Two delightful volumes, with the pathos exquisitely relieved by gaiety, and the romantic legend well contrasted by the lively sketch from actual existence "Lilierary Gasette.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Greek Cheric Poetry.—In post 8vo. price 8s. 6d.

SELECTIONS from the CHORIC POETRY of the Greek Dramatic Writers. Translated into English Verse, By J. ANSTICE, B.A.

Professor of Classical Literature at King's College, London; and late Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

fer Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

The 4th edition, in 2 vols. 8vo. with 24 Characteristic Plates, Sis. in cloth,

THE DOMESTIC MANNERS of the AMBRICANS.
By Mrs. FRANCES TROLLOPE.

By the same Author,
The Refugee in America; a Novel. 3 vols post 8ve. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

Sir Walter Scott's History of Scotland, uniform in size with the Waverley Novels.

In 8 vols. mail 8v. op. Frice 12s. cloth,
ISTORY OF SCOTLAND.

By the late Sir WALTER SCOTT, Bart.
London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

Peter Parley's Tales about Animals.

Most beautifully printed, and embellished with 280 on Wood, price only 5s. in cloth binding,

ALES about ANIMALS; comprising

Quadrapeds, Birds, Fishes, Reptiles, and Insacts.
By PETER PARLEY,
Author of "Tales about Europe," &c.
Chiswick: Printed for T. T. Tegg, Cheapside; N. Hatles, Piccedilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; E. Griffin and Co.
Glasgow; Stillies, &c. Edinburgh; also J. Cumming, and W. F.
Wakeman, Dublin.

Standard Novels, Vol. XXII.

Neatly bound and embellished, and printed uniform with the Waveriey Novels, complete in 1 vol. 6s.

LEETWOOOD; Waveriey Novels, company

LEFTWOUS, the New Man of Feeling.
By W. GODWIN, Esq.
Author of "Caleb Williams," &c.

Forming the Twenty-second Volume of the Standard Novels and Bomances.

and Bomances.

The fellowing have already appeared:
The Spy—The Pilot—The Ploneers—Last of the Mobicans—The Prairie—Llone Lincoin—Casterbury Tales, by S. and H. Lee—Lawrie Todd—Frankenstein—The Ghost-Seer—Edgar Huntly—Thaddeus of Warsaw—Scottish Chiefs—Pastor's Fireside—Hungarian Brothers—Self-Control—Discipline.
Most of the above are revised and corrected by their respective Authors, who have also added new Introductions, and Notes. Each Vol. may be had separately, price 6s.

Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street (late Colburn and Bentley).

Burns's Midmifery, new edition.

vo. 8th edition, with Additions and Emendations, so numeus that it may be considered as almost a new work, 16s. bds. In 8vo. 8th edition PRINCIPLES of MIDWIFERY, including the Diseases of Women and Children.

By JOHN BURNS, M.D.

Regius Professor of Surgery in Glasgow University, &c.
adon: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman

By the same Author,
Principles of Surgery, Vol. I. containing Inflammation, Tumours, Aneurisms, Wounds, &c. 8vo. 14s.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In a few days, 8vo. (Second edition),

KETCH of the SIKHS, with an Introductory Chapter regarding the Navigation of the IndusBy Sir JOHN MALCOLM.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

Barly in December will be published,
THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALEN-

DAR for 1833, (on the same plan as the Oxford and Cam-pridge University Calendars).

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London; and Curry and Co. Dublin.

In a few days, in foolscap 8vo. M S. (Now first published.)
By ALFRED TENNYSON.

This day, price 4s. 6d. boards, The Magdalen, and other Tales. By James Sheridan Knowles.

Edward Moxon, 64, New Bond Street.

In the press, 8vo.

N the ADMINISTRATION of BRITISH INDIA, illustrated with Official Papers and authentic Documents. ocuments.

By Sir JOHN MALCOLM.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

On the 1st of January (to be continued on the 1st of every Month),
Price Sixpence, with Wood Engravings,

THE ZOOLOGICAL MAGAZINE; or, Journal of Natural History. Intended as a cheap, amus-ng, and instructive companion to the study of Zoology and lig, and interest.

Natural History.

Published by Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

To be had of all Booksellers.

Valpy's Shakspeare, with Boydel's Plates.

First of December will be published, price 5s. bound in cloth, uniform with Byron and Scott, Vol. II. of an Improved Edition of the DLAYS and POEMS of SHAKSPEARE eontaining the Merry Wives of Windsor, Measure for easure, and the Comedy of Errors; with Fifteen beautiful II.

lustrations. Edition will be enriched with the whole 170 splendid Plate of Boydell, engraved in the first style of outline; each Vol. averaging Eleven Illustrations.

In Vol. I. is given a Life, Dr. Johnson's Preface, the Tempest, Two Gentlemen of Verona, and Fourteen

Engraving:
The whole will be completed in 15 Monthly Vels.
The whole will be completed by A. J. Valpy, M. A. Red Lion
Edited, printed, and published by A. J. Valpy, M. A. Red Lion
Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Booksellers.

Just ready for publication by Edward Bull, New Public Subscription Library, 25, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.
THE INVISIBLE GENTLEMAN.
By the Author of "Chartley the Pacifics" By the Author of " Chartley the Fatalist," the "Robber," &c. In 8 vols. II.

Lights and Shadows of German Life. In Works just published, ui.

Our Island: comprising Forgery, a Tale; and the Lunatic, a Tale.

Lives of Banditti and Robbers in all Parts of the World. By C. Macfarlane, Eq. Author of "Constantinople in 1889." In 8 vols. with 16 Plates.

v.

Records of My Life. By the late John Tayler, Reg. Author of "Measieur Tonson." In 8 vols. 8ve. with eplendid annuals,

UNDER THE SUPERINTENDENCE OF MR. CHARLES HEATH.

Price 21s. in morocco; large paper, with India Proofs, 2l. 12s. 6d.

HEATH'S BOOK OF BEAUTY FOR 1833,

With 18 beautifully engraved Female Fancy Portraits, and a Vignette Title, from Drawings by the first Artists.

The Literary Department by L. E. L.

List of Plates.	Painters.	Engravers.	List of Plates.	Painters. Engravers.
THE ENCHANTRESS		J. Thomson	BELINDA	Miss Eliza Sharpe H. Robinson
VIGNETTE TITLE	H. Corbould	H. Roldnson	GULNARE	Miss L. Sharpe H. T. Ryall
MEDORA		J. Hopwood	THERE-A	F. StoneJ. Thomson
LOLAH		W. H. Mote	MEDITATION	W. Boxall Thomson
THE MASK	Harper	H. Cook	GERALDINE	F. StoneJ. Thomson
LEONORA	T. A. Woolnoth	T. Woolnoth	REBECCA:	Miss L. Sharpe H. T. Rvall
LAURA	J. W. Wright	E. Scriven	THE BRIDE	A. E. Chalon, R.AJ. Cochran
DONNA JULIA	P. Stone	H. Robinson	LUCY ASHTON;	J. Wright T. A Dean
MADELINE	F. Stone	H. Cook	GRACE ST. AUBYN	E. T. Parris
THE OPPHAN	Miss L. Sharne	H T Reall

The Pintes marked * illustrate Lord Byron's Poems. Those marked ‡ illustrate Sir Walter Scott.

Will be published on the 12th instant.

TURNER'S ANNUAL TOUR,

Containing 21 beautifully finished Plates—Views on the River Loire—from Drawings by J. M. W. TURNER, Esq. R.A.

Descriptive Letter-press by LEITCH RITCHIE, Esq.

Royal 8vo. bound in morocco, 2l. 2s.; India Proofs, only 100 Copies, before letters, ditto, 4l. 4s.

100 yaz 010.	. oounu m morocco,	zi. zi., znata z roots, om,	100 copies, sciore i	,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,,
List of Plates. RANTES BETWEEN CLAIRMONT AND WARES CHATEAU DE NANTES UTOURS DITTO AND CHATEAU OF THE LOIRE AND CHER	'. Miller '. Miller '. Miller '. Miller . Wallis . Brandard	Lir of Plates. SCENE ON THE LOIRE ST. FLORENT ORLEANS CHATEAU HAMPLIN, between J Oudon and Ancenis COTEAUN DE MAURES AMBOISE DITTO	R. Wallie R. Brandard Thomas Higham R. Brandard R. Wallie J. B. Allen	List of Plates. BEAUGENCY NT. JULIAN'S, TOURS MONTGEN RIETZ, NEAR SAUMUR CLAIRMONT PALACE AT BLOIS SAUMUR BLOIS	W. Radctyffe J. T. Willmore R. Brandard J. T. Willmore R. Wallis J. T. Willmore

Handsomely bound in rose-coloured morocco, price One Guinea; large paper, with India Proofs, 2l. 10s.

HEATH'S PICTURESQUE ANNUAL FOR 1833,

Containing 26 beautifully finished Plates, executed by the first Engravers, under the exclusive direction of Mr. CHARLES HEATH, from Drawings by CLARKSON STANFIELD, Esq. With Travelling Sketches on the Rhine, in Belgium, and in Holland, by LEITCH RITCHIE, Esq.

List of Plates.
ST. GOAR	R. Wallis
COLOGNE (Vignette Title)	J. Cousins
STRASBOURG	J. Carter
HEIDELBERG	R. Wallis
CASTLE OF	J. T. Willmore
FRANKFORT
BINGEN	W. Floyd
	R. Wallis
RHEINSTRIN	J. Smith

List of Plates.	Engravers.
EHRENBREITSTEIN, from Coblence	R. Brandard
COBLENCE BRIDGE	S. Fisher
ANDERNACH
NONNENWERT	J. C. Varrali
DRACHENFELS	Charles Heath
GODESBERG CASTLE	R. Wallis
NEAR BONN	Charles Heath
COLOGNE	J. T. Willmore

BRUSSELS J. H. Kernett
ANTWERP, View on the Scheldt. R. Wallis
GHENT J. Lewis
BRUGES J. Lacey
ROTTERDAM J. Carter
MILL NEAR THE HAGUE R. Brandard
ROHD FALD ROUND, BRILL
IN THE DISTANCE W. Miller.

• A few of the First Volume may still be had.

Just published, price 21s. in crimson silk; large paper, 2l. 12s. 6d.

THE KEEPSAKE FOR 1833.

Edited by F. MANSEL REYNOLDS.

Embellished with 17 highly finished Line Engravings.

List of Plates. PRESENTATION PLATE	Painters.	Engravers.
THE ADIEU. Frontispiece	.A. E. Chalon, R.A	C. Heath
TITLE, MEDALLION OF THE KING	W. Wyon, A.R.A. ar H. Corbould	Lacy and S. Mitan
THE UNLOOKED-FOR RETURN	Miss L. Sharpe	J. Goodyear
CAIUS MARIUS MOURNING OVER.	John Martin	W. Wallis
THE BRIDEMAID BHRENBREITSTEIN	E. T. Parris	C. Heath

List of Plates.		Bagravers.
ALICE	H. Corbould	C. Rolls
MALVOLIO	Cattermole	C. Rolls
VERREX IN THE VAL D'AOSTA	W. Boxall	J. Edwards
JEANNIE IN THE OUTLAW'S HUT FALL OF THE RHINE	H. Richter	C. Rolls
ONE PEEP WAS ENOUGH	H. Richter	F. Bacon.

CONTRIBUTORS.

Lord Dover Leitch Ritchie, Esq. Miss A. Strickland John Carne, Esq. Countess of Blessington J. H. Lowther, Esq. M.P. Hon. Grantley Berkeley Hon. H. Liddell R. Bernal, Esq. M.P. Lord Morpeth James Boaden, Esq. Lord Mahon Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley Mrs. Charles Gore Colley Grattan, Esq.

Author of Frankenstein Hon. Hobart Craddock Author of Hajii Baba Archdeacon Spencer Miss L. B. Landen, &c. &c.

* The preceding Volumes can still be had.

Published by Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman, London.

Proofs of all the above Works may be had at Messrs. Moon, Boys, and Graves, Printsellers, Pall Mall.

LONDON: Published curry Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulton Street, Oxford Street; with also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange; E. Mariborough, Auc Maria Lane, Ludgate Hill; A. Black, Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Rebertson, and Alkinson and Co. Cleagewe: and J. Cumming, Bublin. — Agent for America, O. Rich, 13, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE:

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 829.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1832.

PRICE 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

PICTURE OF EGYPT.

A few Words upon Egypt, translated from the French of M. L. Bousquet-Deschamps, entitled Deux Mots sur l'Egypte. Smyrna, 1832.

CONSIDERABLE interest has been excited for many years by the civilisation of modern Egypt. To judge of it from certain late publications. this fortunate country advances with rapid strides from the state of barbarism in which it has been immersed during a long series of ages. It enjoys the unusual felicity of being governed by an enlightened, just, and philanthropic prince, who is, above all, an enthusiastic encourager of arts and sciences. In short. Mohammed Alee has revived all the wonders of the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus. His extensive and beneficial projects are constantly directed towards the happiness and regeneration of his people; his active and enterprising genius is incessantly engaged in removing their prejudice and ignorance; and his endeavours to purify their manners have succeeded in introducing amongst them the most brilliant advantages of polished society.

Such are the prodigies which have dazzled the imagination of those who view from a distauce the conduct of Mohammed Alee, and the state of the country he governs. But let them visit Egypt itself; there they will find an entire population dying of hunger, covered with rags, or perfectly naked, sheltered by miserable mudhuts, unacquainted with every convenience of life, destitute of the most necessary articles of furniture and of the most indispensable family utensils, and sleeping upon the bare ground without the comfort of a simple mat! There will they see towns in ruins, villages deserted, houses destroyed, public monuments in decay; in short, a population pining under the oppressive yoke of the most inhuman servitude, destitute of every thing, subject to all the horrors of want, and approaching the tomb amidst appalling desolation. This is the afflicting picture which strikes us on the first glimpse of Egypt; nor does its deformity fail to increase as we quit the towns and advance into the interior of the country. But how widely different is this from the former statement-one the deceptive phantom of imagination, the other the faithful image of reality!

Egypt is by no means civilised, nor can it well be so. Civilisation is the result of happiness and comfort; and it was by improving the condition of his people that Mohammed Alee

^a This important paper contains views very different from those in which we have been led to indulge; but it comes to us from an authority so worthy of public attention, that, on the principle of audi alteram partem, we have deemed it right to insert it in the Literary Gazette. We have only to request it to be noticed that, though derived from the country itself, and the statement of an eye-winces, it is the representation of a Frenchman inimical to Mohammed Alee. The notes are by a very able countryman of our own, and on several points correct the writer; and upon the whole, we cannot but think it an important document for European consideration, being, as we can rough, in all its leading features, a true picture of the actual state of Egypt.—Ed. L. G.

should have commenced his project of reform. For if much time must elapse before the mass of a population will be persuaded of the benefits of a change, much more will necessarily be required when the reformer has to convince a wretched people, whose intellectual and physical faculties are impaired by hunger.

Is there a single example of a people who have suddenly passed from an excess of barbarism and debasement to a state of civilisation. without having been led to it by the enjoyment of comfort? or, at least, by the possibility of satisfying their most urgent wants? Nations are like individuals; there are none among the latter but those who belong to classes in good circumstances who avail themselves of a certain education, either because their pretensions in society impose upon them as a duty the acquirement of that knowledge which is indispensable for maintaining the rank they hold above the common mass, or because the waste of time and money which that education requires does not permit every one equally to profit by it. Thus poor and oppressed nations, continually overwhelmed by the cares of their existence, and the fear of being exposed to the exactions of despotic rulers, have neither the means nor time to instruct themselves; and that instruction, for a nation, is nothing else than civilisation.

Mohammed Alee should then have commenced by nurturing his country; and as to its civilisation, however slight his intention was to encourage its promotion, it would have naturally followed, without difficulty, from the general improvement.

Instead of that, what has he done? He has begun by levying an army, which, in proportion to the population of the country, is considerable, and has instructed it after the European discipline. It is, then, the army that forms the base of the civilisation of Egypt; it is the army which is to promote the sciences and arts, and sow the seeds of industry on the banks of the Nile. But what has been taught, and what is taught the soldiers of Mohammed Alee, to render them the advisers of the rest of the population, or to make them serve as instruments for the regeneration of Egypt? Alas! their instruction is a degree below that of soldiers in any other part of the world. And this is the focus from which should radiate, and from which already does radiate, according to a multitude of books and journals, those beams of light which are successively to spread over all the provinces of the Ottoman empire. We might inquire if people are civilised by the bayonet, and if these means are not more baneful than beneficial to civilisation and baneful than beneficial to civilisation and humanity.

To form an army, the lands have been depopulated; and the consequence has been the increasing of burdens upon those who are not enlisted. Hence, too, the small number of individuals crippled by age, infirm, or deformed, who remain to cultivate the lands, is insufficient to perform the labours required. The cient to perform the labours required. The result is, that by toiling even twice as much as they should reasonably do, they cannot obtain from the soil all that its extent and fertility appear to promise, nor profit by a moment of repose, to obtain some slight notions of the earliest elements of civilisation. On the other hand, where are the means of instruction for the people? No where. The schools which have been opened, and which have made so much noise in Europe, are purely military.

That of medicine itself has been founded with the sole view of forming surgeons for the army; and we may say of Mohammed Alee, what Voltaire said of the king of Prussia, " Il a fort embelli Sparte, mais n'a transporté Athènes que dans son cabinet." In short, every thing has been sacrificed to the army; and nothing, absolutely nothing, has been done for the nation itself. Hence, none are civilised but the troops; and from the manner in which Mohammed Alee has commenced his reform, we are at liberty to conclude he has been desirous of civilising an army, in order to enslave and levy contributions on his people with greater facility.

It might be supposed, that since the soldiers are freed from the rude labours to which the other inhabitants are subjected, the taste for the profession of arms had become general in the country; and this conclusion, at first sight, appears natural. However, the erroneous sys. tem adopted by Mohammed Alee has produced a contrary effect, and the aversion of the Arabs for the life of a camp has constantly increased since the first formation of the regular troops. This aversion proceeds from the bad treatment of the soldiers, from the want of confidence which on all occasions the government has shewn towards the Arabs, and from the small chance of advancement held out to them, every rank in the army being reserved for the Osmanlees and their (Memlook) slaves.

I cannot but introduce some remarks on the mode of recruiting adopted by the Egyptian government. It is at once the most exceptionable, and calculated to inspire the Arabs with an increasing aversion for a military life; at the same time that it deals a death-blow to agriculture, and greatly contributes to the depopulation of Egypt. It is in the fields alone* that the army is recruited, without attention or choice. When men are wanted, all the youths of a province are carried off, without inquiring if in that number husbands, fathers of a family, or invalids, are included; if there are any whose labours are necessary for the support or existence of aged parents; or, in short, if they are fit for service. They are led away, tied like malefactors, + to the depôt; where they arrive, followed generally by their mothers, their wives, their sisters, and frequently by the whole village. Those whom infirmities have not rendered unfit for service are there selected, and the others are allowed to return home.

These levies en masse, or rather this species of pressing, which constantly fall on the same class of individuals, increase the aversion of the inhabitants to such a degree, that whole villages are deserted on a sudden at the approach of a recruiting-party; and it is evident, that in order to have ten soldiers, the state loses the labour of fifty husbandmen. These emigrations often happen at the time of harvest, and the peasants by their flight cause the loss of a considerable quantity of the produce, which is burnt by the sun, or scattered by the wind.

Much has been said of the introduction of manufactures into Egypt; that innovation has been looked upon as an immense step towards civilisation, but it has been one of the most unfortunate, as may be seen from the depopulation, and the impediments presented by the state of the country. Too late has the fatal truth become known, that it could not succeed but at another moment; that is, when the rudiments of education and preliminary institutions shall have prepared the nation to benefit by a new kind of industry. Besides, this attempt has not been made with so laudable an intention as some have imagined. artisans and workmen whom Mohammed Alee has sent for from Europe, have not been invited to civilise Egypt, but to satisfy the caprices of its ruler. Some manage the different manufactories of the government; others build new ships or repair old ones, but instruct few or no pupils; + and if their stay in the country sows some useful seeds, if their intercourse with the natives (of whose language they are ignorant) contributes to polish them in a slight degree, and to give them some idea of our arts, Mohammed Alee, as far as his intention goes. must be an entire stranger to this result. He was anxious for manufactures, and he brought over machinery, and men capable of using it; he wanted a navy, and he asked for an en-gineer: but if he has made manufactures at home, if he has set on foot the building of ships in his own dock-yards, it is simply because he expects to save time and expense; for the thought that these works might be of some utility to the people, and aid in their civilisation, certainly never entered his mind.

The civilisation of Egypt is, then, subjected to the wants and caprices of Mohammed Alee. Whenever he foresees some personal and immediate advantage in the introduction of any innovation, he will adopt it instantly, and oblige his subjects to do the same, without inquiring if it will be to their disadvantage, or tain number for the army, under pain of forfeiting 700 plastres (10%) for each man; the consequence is natural, the streets present the desolate appearance that is witnessed during a plague—the shops are closed, business is suspended, and women cry as for the dead.

The examiners and soldiers employed in aeixing the men have even discovered the lucrative advantage of pressing invalids, and those unfit for service, from whom threats and fears elicit a sum for their release.

Though frequently taken to the distance of several days' journey, no allowance is made them for provisions of any kind on the road; nor is any facility afforded them of regaining their villages. Loss of time is, of course, never considered.

This is not quite the case; the Arab youths have never considered.

† This is not quite the case; the Arab youths have not only learnt much from their European teachers, but in many instances they have made such advances, that the pasha has been enabled to dispense with the services of the Europeans. The objection is, that they consider it forced upon them, and therefore dislike the innovation. One great error committed by Mohammed Alee is his wishing to make a manufacturing of an agricultural country; the population is insufficient, and the loss to the people is inspeciable.

sation.

Erroneous then, indeed, has been the idea that civilisation is greatly advanced in Egypt; Mohammed Alee has positively done nothing for it, though no one had a better opportunity than himself. He was no longer accountable to the Porte for any of his actions; he enjoyed immense revenues, which would have been still farther increased, had he consented to employ a small share of them for the comfort of his people: but far from dreaming of such a sacrifice, he is constantly inventing new modes of disputing with them their very existence. His administration is composed of persons who, before their eyes, deceive the husbandmen in the quantity of their produce, by false weights and measures; and deceive them, moreover, in its quality. Never, according to them, does the peasant gather cotton of the first, or even of the second quality, though he is well aware that the government exports it of three different qualities. On the least pretext, or even without any, they impose on those whom they believe to have made some trifling savings; and oftentimes villages, towns, and provinces, are treated in the same manner; making families, villages, and a whole district, responsible for the non-payment of these odious exactions. To such a length is this carried, that he who endeavours to elude a similar demand is condemned to the bastinado; and whether his resistance arises from obstinacy or from want of means, his treatment is the same: and his family and his friends - in short, a whole village are exposed to the same vexation! This monstrous system is not confined to individuals, it extends also to villages, so that nothing is ever lost to the revenue; and one village, which happens to have some resources, is doomed to pay the debt, often unjustly de-manded of another that has been ruined by accident, or by recent extortions.

If a peasant is employed for some job, such as carrying goods, or other extraordinary service, he is promised his hire; but, instead of receiving it, he is told, that, since he belongs to a village in arrears with the government, the money he is entitled to will be deducted from the public debt. It often happens, that the ignorance of these poor people is insulted by the return of false receipts (teskreh), + or by not putting to their account the sums they have paid, as part either of their taxes, or of the impositions forced upon them, which they are therefore obliged to pay over again. The agents of Mohammed Alee no sooner imagine that a peasant (fellah) has some money, than they send for him, and demand it; if he refuses, he is bastinadoed; if he produces any, his punishment is repeated, in the hopes of his giving more. Should a family increase their expenses by the smallest item, it is instantly taxed with an additional duty: they pretend to perceive its circumstances are improved; but if it is obliged by want to undergo greater privations, it is in like manner taxed, from the notion that its parsimony is the result of economy, and its money is laid by.

The revenues of Egypt amount to nearly

* His conduct to the people has not only been the means of decreasing his revenue, but of weakening his power against an enemy.

† The teskreh in this case is nothing else than a species of bill payable to bearer, called in Egypt assignation, with which the government acknowledges the produce of the husbandmen, the pay of the soldiers, and the wages of the workmen. These bills, generally payable some months after date, are discounted at a loss of thirty or forty per cent by the agents of the government.

‡ This is a very common practice. If the peasant could not steal from his own fields, he would inevitably die of hunser.

even at variance with the progress of civili- twenty-five millions of dollars; and, however enormous that sum may appear, it has always been insufficient to cover the expenses of the government. It cannot be conceived how Mohammed Alee, who has never raised any monument for posterity," who has never made any sacrifice for the people, who never comforts them by any means, and who is always in debt, should not be able to introduce the least order in his finances, or put an end to that continual state of penury, from which his government never extricates itself; a penury that cannot be denied, since he does not pay, three parts of the time, his moslem employés, but even keeps back, for whole years, the salaries of those European instructors he has taken into his service, and the pay of those unfortunate foreign workmen, who have no other means of subsistence.

It must then be allowed, that great disorder exists in his administration; and that his boasted ministers either deceive him, or understand nothing of business; though perhaps both of these reasons may be admitted. At all events, the disordered state of Mohammed Alee's finances is an incontestable fact; and though some have endeavoured to derive the cause from the expenses occasioned by his expedition in the Morea, and from those incurred by maintaining garrisons for a length of time in the islands of Candia and Cyprus, + it is more reasonable to attribute it to his thirst for innovation, which he is incapable of understanding, to the errors of his administration, to the rapacity and dishonesty of all his officers, to the high salaries he pays the greater part of them, and, moreover, to the support of an army and fleet, which he has endeavoured to render imposing, solely to promote his views of ambition. The revenues, which might be easily augmented by one-third, are now sensibly diminished, by the deplorable situation to which the foolish prodigality of their ruler has reduced this people. The more abundant the crops, the more their misery augments; for Mohammed Alee, increasing his extensive operations in proportion to the resources he expects from the sale of his produce, exports a greater quantity, exacts from the peasant all that he has, and even more than he has, and abundant years are most frequently observed to be accompanied by a dearth.§

be accompanied by a dearth.§

No Turkish ruler of Egypt ever raised any useful monument for the country: and the digging of canals, and other government works, are always attended by additional oppressive measures. The peasants are forced to the spot, and without their having any means, but those afforded by their wives or relations, of obtaining food, they are detained till the work is finished, which they toil at under the incresant lash of capricious taskmasters, without the interval of a Sabbath, or compassion for ill health. Many, who have no one to bring them victuals, die of hunger, and the pay of the others is frequently rfused. Many of those who dug the Alexandrian canal are not yet pasid; and it is universally allowed that thousands perished there, overcome by hunger and fatigue. No one who has not witnessed could believe the cruel manner in which they are treated.

† Rather Candia, Arabia, and Sennar.

† Being advised to construct martello towers along the coast, he answered, "I know their utility, but I must have a few large fortifications in preference. What would martello towers be thought of at Constantinople?"

§ In 1879, there was a great dearth in Egypt, particularly at Rosetta. The people died of hunger, while—a horrible and unheard-of fact—mountains of grain, destined to the speculations of Mohammed Alae, sprouted in the open air, before the eyes of the inhabitants, who had not the permission to purchase any of it. It was not until the grain was spoiled that it was sold to them, with the prohibition to procure any other. Alexandria and Cairo were equally subjected to this tyrannical measure. The government first sold half wheat and half barley. Milled and the speculation,—a thing unknown in Egypt since the famine of Ismane Rey; but a heavy duty put a stop to this promised relief.

on whom all the vexations, taxes, and burdens fall! and it is not to be wondered at, that their exasperation and discontent are carried to the highest pitch. Mohammed Alee has, indeed, lately had some unequivocal proofs of this fact; for, independent of the great number of his subjects who have emigrated, many have refused to work, in spite of the blows they have suffered; and among those who have been forced to till the lands, several, urged by despair, have fired their crops, destroying, by preference, the cotton shrube, as the most valuable object for the government. What a lesson! But Mohammed Alee has been unwilling to profit by it. On the contrary, whenever any signs of discontent are evinced, his creatures seize the opportunity of inflicting new punishments on the country, but invariably such as are productive of profit to the government revenue.

These violent measures have not, however, produced the expected result. The finances of Egypt go on worse and worse; the treasury is exhausted, debts accumulate, and credit is weakened. The expedition to Syria, by the immense expenses which it has required, and still requires, has dealt a fatal blow to this wretched country. The depopulated lands will not much longer produce sufficient to make up for the deficiency caused by such great preparations, which become more considerable in proportion as the war is prolonged, and by the enormous daily expenses required for the maintenance and provision of forty thousand men by land and sea.

[We must postpone the conclusion till next week.]

The American Stage: including Anecdotes of English Performers, &c. By W. Dunlap. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Bentley. It is so seldom we can have an opportunity of tracing the introduction of the drama into a country, that the subject must at least be possessed of novelty. It is true that it differs from an inquiry into the origination of theatrical representation in the ancient world; as, instead of the first steps of an infant art, it simply refers to the transplanting of a mature one but still there is considerable curiosity and interest attached to the investigation; and later times, when America has become an old country, and the whole face of the earth is wonderfully changed, will look back with satisfaction on Mr. Dunlap's (then antiquarian) volume. When, perhaps, some new corps is changing the scene from a venerable city on the American shores of the Pacific, for a colonised settlement in Caubul or Tibet, with what a relish may the parties recall to memory the day, in the middle of the 18th century, on which their Thespian progenitors exhibited the triumphs of the sock and buskin to almost wildernesses of their swarming continent! What would we give for a similar account of Egypt, of Greece, of Rome! Much more than Mr. Dunlap will gain by his publication, though it deserves to be popular, and treats of an amusement and recreation in which nine-tenths of civilised mankind take some concern or pleasure.

No doubt there are many circumstantial details as to where the first playhouses were situated, when opened, &c. &c. which can have little attraction beyond their several localities and recollections in the United States at the present day; but even these are not without their value, since they prove the industry and enthusiasm of the author.

Garrick had, in 1742, acquired great fame.

It is then the people, and always the people, and made the theatre in Goodman's Fields the gaged with his instrument to represent that successful rival of Fleetwood and Rich of Drury Lane and Covent Garden. The consequence was, his being removed to Drury Lane, together with his friend, the proprietor and manager, Gifford; who was succeeded by Mr. William Hallam. In 1750 Hallam became bankrupt, and, after passing through the ordeal with honour, planned a theatrical expedition to America, in conjunction with his brother Lewis, and the better portion of the Goodman's Fields Company. William Hallam stayed at home to carry on the managements; Lewis and his wife, an actress of much merit, sailed at the head of the adventurers, well organised and well provided with stock pieces, properties, and other requisites. They departed from England in May, 1752, in the Charming Sally, and in six weeks disembarked at York Town, Virginia. "Whi

What recollections (says the author) to the American of the present day! town, the scene of that great drama of real life, or rather the catastrophe of the military drama, which, in 1780, placed never-dying laurels on the brow of that man who, sent by Governor Dinwiddie in 1753, the year after the arrival of our adventurers, to summon the French posts on the Ohio to surrender to the arms of England, is called by the writers of the Universal History one Major Washington. This Major Washington very probably witnessed the first representations of plays in Virginia: and one at least of the same company of players (the second Lewis Hallam, then a boy) performed repeatedly before him when he was the first magistrate of the greatest republic the world had ever seen, and the theme of eulo-gium to every enlightened or philanthropic statesman the world possessed. In 1610, the first effectual colonisation of English America took place. In 1751, Franklin calculated the English population of the colonies at one million. Such was the increase in one hundred and forty years, and the arts, following in the train of civilisation, already prepared to rear the standard of taste.

Williamsburg was then the capital of Virginia; and thither the players proceeded from York-town, the place of their landing. Upon application made to Governor Dinwiddie, permission was granted to erect or fit up a building for a theatre. Hallam found a building which he judged to be sufficient for his purpose, and proceeded to metamorphose it into pit, box, gallery, and stage. It was a long house in the suburbs of the town, probably erected as a storehouse by the early emigrants; it was unoccupied, and the manager purchased it. This was the first theatre opened in America by a company of regular comedians; and although within the boundaries of the metropolis of the ancient dominion, the seat of William and Mary College, and the residence of all the officers of his majesty's government, was so near the woods that the manager could stand within the door and shoot pigeons for his dinner, which he more than once actually did. This theatre was situated on the spot occupied now by the house of the late Judge Tucker. After its destruction by fire, reader will observe that the proprietors of this enterprise had not included an orchestra in the plan of their establishment; but fortunately a professor of music had been before them as a pioneer of the fine arts; and Mr. Pelham, who taught the harpsichord in the town, was en-Mrs. Mattocks, their second daughter, then about six years old, was left with her uncle; but her elder sister and two brothers were trained to the American stage.

splendid assemblage of wind and stringed instruments which we now look for in an orches. tra. On the fifth of September, 1752, at Williamsburg, the capital of Virginia, the first play performed in America by a regular company of comedians was represented to a delighted audience. The piece was the Merchant of Venice, and it was followed by the farce of Lethe. Thus Shakspeare had the first place in time as in merit as the dramatist of the western world, and Garrick the honour of attending upon his master. Lethe was at that time new even in London, and a popular after-piece.'

"This night's performance is rendered the more memorable, as it gave occasion for the first composition connected with the drama which was written for, or addressed particularly to, an American audience-a prologue especially composed for the purpose, probably on shipboard, by Mr. Singleton. It was spoken by Mr. Rigby. These lines were written down as recited, at the request of the author, by Lewis Hallam the second, forty years after their debut. Mr. Hallam seemed to remember every transaction of that period, every circumstance attending these first histrionic adventures, as though they were of yesterday. We think lines brought forward under such auspices are worthy of record, and accordingly give them.

orward under such auspices are worthy of record, and accordingly give them.

To this new world, from famed Britannia's shore,
Through boist rous seas where foaming billows roar,
The Muse who Britons charmed for many an age
Now sends her servants forth to tread your stage;
Britain's own race, though far removed, to shew
Patterns of every virtue they should know.
Though gloomy minds through ignorance may rail,
Yet bold examples strike where languid precepts fail.
The world's a stage where mankind act their parts;
While the soul, touched by nature's tenderest laws,
Has all her passions rous'd in virtue's cause.
Reason we hear, and coolly may approve,
But all's inactive till the passions move.
Such is the human mind, so weak, so frail,
'Reason's her chart, but passion is her gale.
Then raise the gale to waft fair virtue o'er
The sea of life where Reason points the shore.
But all 'le it Reason guide the course along,
Lest Passion, listening to some siren's song,
Rush on the rocks of Vice, where all is lost,
And shipwreck'd Virtue renders up the ghost.
Too oft, we own, the stage, with dangerous art,
In wanton scenes has played the siren's part;
Yet if the Muse, unfaithful to her trust,
Has sometimes stray'd from what is pure and just,
Has she not oft with awful, virtuous rage,
Struck home at vice, and nobly trod the stage?
Made tyrants weep, the conscious murderer stand,
And drop the dagger from his trembling hand?
Then, as you treat a favourite fair's mistake,
Pray spare her foibles for her virtue's sake;
And while her chastest scenes are made appear,
(For none but such will find admittance here)
The Muse's friends, we hope, will join our cause,
And crown our best endeavours with applause.

Mr. Singleton afterwards published a volume.

Mr. Singleton afterwards published a volume of poems; the principal, or longest, was descriptive, or intended so to be, of the West India Islands."

It is not necessary for us to follow the future movements of our mimic band; their next exhibition was at Annapolis, and their third at a theatre erected in Nassau Street, New York. They afterwards went from place to place, as our provincial companies do now, and were a long while in the West India Islands. The prices of admission were very high, the boxes eight or six shillings, the pit five or four shillings, and the gallery three or two shillings. At Philadelphia there was considerable resistance offered to their obtaining a local habitation and a name; but they ultimately triumphed over the followers of William Penn, and, as they conducted themselves in a respectable manner, their success was as great here as any where

"The Quakers and their adherents carried a petition to the governor for the prohibi-

I have often seen the indigo left, for the same reason, to perish from want of water.

tion of profane stage-plays. Counter-petitions | said that the drama flourished under the re- | candid opinion of the merits and demerits of were signed and presented, and finally the friends of action and passion prevailed, and the manager was favoured by Governor Hamilton with a permission to open a theatre, and cause twenty-four plays, with their attendant after-pieces, to be performed, on condition that offered nothing indecent and immoral, and performed one night for the benefit of the poor of the city; and further, that the manager gave security for all debts contracted, and all contracts entered into by the company. How characteristic is all this of the time! Such was the treaty by which the first histrionic adventures gained a narrow and precarious footing in a new region which seemed forbidden ground. Once within the walls, they extended the boundaries of their conquest, not without opposition, until the whole city submitted to the invaders, who, by degrees, like the Tartar invaders of the Celestial empire, have become one and the same with the people they had conquered-not being arrested by the breeches-maker for six that the players became Quakers, but peaceable pair of leather breeches, sent to Mr. Gaine, and good citizens, no longer living on sufferance, or obliged to give bonds for their good longer at the Bible and Crown, but only at behaviour. All this had occurred previously the Bible, to request bail, as the prisoner's to the 18th of March, 1754, and a place been secured for the representation of plays in Philadelphia. Accordingly the players proceeded thither, and commenced theatrical exhibitions. This was the first theatre opened in the capital of Pennsylvania by artists or actors by profession. As early as 1749, it is on record that the magistracy of the city had been disturbed by some idle young men perpetrating the murder of sundry plays in the skirts of the town; but the culprits had been arrested and bound over to their good behaviour, after confessing their crime, and promising to spare the poor poets for the future. The first regular company of comedians opened their theatre, the store-house of Mr. William Plumstead, at the corner of the first alley above Pine Street, and commenced playing in April, 1754, with the tragedy of the Fair Penitent.

made alterations in the company; but still it went its round on the continent and in the West Indies. From 1764 to 1767 there was a deceitful calm, during which, "Thomas Godfrey, of Philadelphia, the son of the inventor of the quadrant in 1765, published a play called The Prince of Parthia, a tragedy, founded on, but deviating from history; whether intended for the stage, or only for the closet, is unknown. That it was not performed by the players is certain. This is the first American drama on record."

In 1774 the first American congress shut up the theatres, by agreeing "to discountenance and discourage every species of extravagance and dissipation; and among others named gaming, cock-fighting, exhibitions of shows, plays, and other expensive diversions and entertainments'-a strange medley! plays ranked with cock-fighting and gambling, and these last only censured because expensive. This resolution of congress was conveyed to Douglass, the manager, in a letter from the president, Peyton Randolph; and the committee of New York gave him likewise notice of the same.

An episode of the war of the revolution has too little connexion with the suspended drama (save where amateur English officers performed), to tempt us to notice it. After the peace of 1783, the actual players returned as "the American company," but were coldly "the American company," but were coldly received; and it was long before it could be 1884.

publican flag.

But, whether prosperous or otherwise, we need not, as reviewers of Mr. Dunlap's work, follow its history farther: for particulars we must refer to the book itself. The Contrast, by Royal Tyler, Esq.,* ranks first in point of time of all American plays performed by professional players. It was published by subscription in 1790. The next was The Father of an only Child, by the author of the history before us, brought out in September, 1789; and the first printed play which came from the American press as performed by regular comedians.

In 1791-2 the old company relinquished the sole dominion of the stage in the United States; and other competitors came forward to possess the land. Of some of these we select a few miscellaneous anecdotes

"West soon involved himself in debt; and who still printed the play-bills, though no name was in the bill for that night. gentleman took off his spectacles, and exclaimed, 'Six pair of leather breeches! never had one pair in my life! Six pair! Why how many legs has the fellow got?

The first visit of any of the Kemble family to America is thus told, 1793-4.

" About this time one of the Kemble family arrived at New York, a sister of Mrs. Siddons. John Kemble, Mrs. Whitlock, Charles Kemble. Stephen Kemble, and the other children of that highly talented family. This person was called Mrs. Hatton, and had a husband with her, a vulgar man. She introduced herself to the American world by writing a play called Tammany, which she presented to the Tammany society, who patronised it, and recommended it to the theatre through Hodgkinson, whose by the republicans in 1764, we find nothing from the sons of St. Tammany, and gladly reparticularly worthy of record. Time, of course, ceived this production of the sister of his made alterations in the component by the sister of his production of the sister of his made alterations in the component by the sister of his production of the sister of his made alterations in the component by the sister of his production of the his production of the sister of his production of the sister of his production of the his production of his production favour the authoress had secured. The mana-Siddons, seasoned high with spices hot from Paris, and swelling with rhodomontade, for the sonorous voice of Hodgkinson, who was to represent the Indian saint."

Anecdote of Mr. Bates.-" His manager was present in a first-rate character at rehearsal. when Bates entered to deliver a message, which he did with all the flourish of a hero who had been preceded by the sound of a trumpet. 'Mr. Bates,' says the principal, 'you surely don't intend to deliver that message in that manner to-night?' 'Yes, sir, but I do.' 'You are too loud, sir.' 'Loud, sir! not at all, sir; I'm only energetic. I've got a benefit to make as well as you, sir."

But we have "spun our yarn." The entrance of the drama into Boston is an entertaining passage; and many of the personal anecdotes may deserve from us a brief selection hereafter. We certainly feel indebted to Mr. Dunlap for his performance; and have only to add, by way of information to our readers, that he is already known to them by his "Life of George Frederic Cooke."

Poems by Alfred Tennyson. 12mo. pp. 163. London, 1832. Moxon.

MR. ALFRED TENNYSON may be considered a pupil of a poetical school, to offer a fair and any one of whom, from the Dux of the highest to the Dunce of the lowest form, is sure to bring the whole about your ears, buzzing, hallooing, yelping, abusing, and pelting, with all the fury of an incensed urchinry. We had a taste of this about a year and a half ago (July 30, 1830), when we humbly ventured to question the infinite beauty and excellence of Album Verses by C. Lamb (L.G. No. 703). This collection of pretty slip-slop, which could not have obtained partial applause at a tea-party, we said was unworthy of publication for general reading; and we regretted that vanity and egotism should have led the amiable writer into the weakness of suffering it to go forth to the world. This offence provoked the unmitigated rage of the school referred to, which, for want of a fitter name, we shall call the BAA-LAMB SCHOOL; and they hastened to pour out all their impotence upon us. Not only was the Literary Gazette bespattered from the little periodical vehicles whence they could open their tiny batteries; but the name of its supposed editor (or, rather, an approach to that name; for we ought not to expect good spelling from younkers of their class and calibre) furnished a most prolific theme for their exceeding wit and felicitous humour. Not only did they evaporate their prodigious resentment with such weapons as anonymous squibs in the Examiner newspaper, but they actually prevailed on Poet-laureate Southey (as an old friend of Mr. Lamb) to thunder off some verses in the thundering Times (August 6), against the head of the mauled and soresuffering reviewer. This was the unkindest cut of all. To be attacked by the bearish boys was bearable; but to be assailed also by a big fellow not belonging to the school, and who had no business with the quarrel - one who might be considered even as a professional brother, labouring in the same vocation for an honest livelihood, - this was too bad! But then the execution was worse than the design. Don't take our word for it; -- here it is:-

"To Charles Lamb, on the Reviewal of his Album Verses in the Literary Gazette.

Charles Lamb, to those who know thee justly dear Charles Lamb, to those who know thee justly dea For rarest genius and for sterling worth, Unchanging friendship, warmth of heart sincere, And wit that never gave an ill thought birth, Nor ever in its sport infix'd a sting; To us who have admired and loved thee long, It is a proud as well as pleasant thing To hear thy good report, now borne along Upon the honest breath of public praise; We know that with the elder sons of song. In honouring whom they have delighted will We know that with the elder sons of song, In honouring whom thou hast delighted still, In honouring whom thou hast delighted still, Thy name shall keep its course to after days. The empty pertness, and the vulgar wrong, The flippant folly, the malicious will, Which have assail'd thee, now or heretofore, Find, soon or late, their proper meed of shame: The more thy triumph, and our pride the more, When witling critics to the world proclaim, In lead, their own dolt incapacity. Matter it is of mirthful memory To think, when thou wert early in the field, How doughtily small Jeffrey ran at thee A-tilt, and broke a bulrush on thy shield. And now, a veteran in the lists of fame, I ween, old friend! thou art not worse bested, When, with a maudlin eye and drunken aim, When, with a maudlin eye and drunken aim, Dulness hath thrown a jerdan at thy head.

The point, the delicacy, the true spirit of poesy, the elegance, the admirable polish and the finish of these lines, require no comment. They stamp the character of the writer. A man who has always exercised the duty of criticism without partiality or asperity, and one, therefore, who could ill brook the least apparent departure from the course which he had approved—a man so consistent in all his own opinions, from youth to age, that he must view any difference from them in the light of an absolute crime, - from such an Aristides no mercy was to be expected, even for a venial error, if error was committed; and we could only sink under the fatal blow of the conclusive line, with which the refined laureate volunteered to trouble us. Till now, indeed (so severe was the shock), we have never recovered sufficiently to say a few words in our own defence, or to sing our misericordia. Now that we are able to do so, we protest, on the honour of critics, that we did not desire to kill this Lamb -this gentle and fleecy animal, so pastorally supported on South-ey Down; we were merciful sacrificers, and not butchers. Never did we imagine there could have been such a bleating throughout the flock; but rather expected, as Gay affirms, that the unconscious creatures would have licked our hand. Not so: witness the exquisite simplicity and headlong innocence with which the other sheep bolt after the leading ram of the lake breed. The Examiner of the 15th of August (under the appropriate title of rejected epigrams) follows explicitly in the track: thus-

Q. What is the meaning, pray, of heavy wet?
A. Why, J—— and his Literary Gazette.

2. Our forefathers bestow'd the name of Lurdan On despicable things :—we now say jerdan."

And, for fear the intelligent reader should not know what Lurdan, thus explained, means, the author displays his learning in a note :-"Lurdan, or Lurdane, originally Lord Dane" (not so bad, either!) "applied by our Saxon progenitors to their Danish oppressors, naturally falling afterwards into a name of contempt." The next "Rejected Epigrams," 3 and 4, are too nasty to be copied into our page; and in truth we are almost afraid that in quoting Dr. Southey, LL.D. and Poet-laureate, we may already have offended decency too far: but the exposition is intended for the good of a considerable number of the lambkins and their admirers, and we trust the benevolence of the motive will plead our excuse. The next week's Examiner continued the Bag in the same strain. only gallantly trying to lug female names into the field, and avowing, in prose and rhyme, the charitable wish to ruin the poor editor (jingling to "guerdon" and "heard on") and his too-popular journal. The awful threats are thus expressed : - "To be continued weekly, till the proprietors of the publication in question shall have dismissed their present editor* for incompetency and imbecility - an event which is calculated as probable to happen about the first week in October."

[Thy wishes, Hal, were father to that thought !] The further " rejected epigrams"-

"In merry England I computed once
The number of the dunces—dunce by dunce:
There were four hundred, if I don't forget,
The readers of the I.——y G.——e;
But if the author to himself keep true,
In some short months they'll be reduced to two. Gracchus cries out on mobs, the devil on curses. Gracenus cries out on mobs, the devil on curses, And J.—n upon Ladies' Album Verses!
He, whose whole merit lies in Album dregs,
That could not stand one minute on his legs
Without his female crutches on each side,
By whom his paper's all be-ladified.

(To be continued.)"

But, to the best of our knowledge and belief, the silent contempt with which we treated these, as we do all other similar and despicable attacks, put an end to the promised continuation, and the writer retired from before the face of an insulted public into his natural privacy of

We would not have wasted these remarks

* To act on this well-meant advice, " the present editor" must have committed tho-de-se, as a principal proprietor, and dismissed himself!!

volume we are about to notice, but that we deem it inexcusable in an individual so highly distinguished in the literature of his age and country as Dr. Southey, to have lent his example to an unjust outcry against temperate and unbiased criticism - against criticism generally, which no one knows better than he to be a very difficult and arduous, and often painful, duty. Honestly performed it is a great public benefit, even though it may lack superior ability: and with this feeling we take our leave of the topic, sustained by it far above either invidious misrepresentation or vindictive slander.

True poetry is derived from nature. Nearly all the human race have a sense of the poetical In the lower grades it never expresses itself, but is more or less alive to beauties elicited and expressed by others. Higher up it takes a positive form, and we have innumerable examples of persons who write neatly, pleasingly, without offending taste, and even with occasional touches of the true spirit. In the rare and loftiest rank its intensity pervades the soul, and the genuine and legitimate child of song bursts forth upon an admiring world in all his glory.

In ranking the disciples of the school to which this notice principally alludes as varieties of the second order, we do them no disparagement. Lamb himself, in his Rosamond Gray, and several of his earlier productions, displayed much sweet simplicity; but the volume which we censured had diverged utterly from this style. A preposterous inclination to engraft antique phraseology upon common-place notions which occur to every body, and are of equal facility at all times, and under every change of diction, was its marked feature; and Mr. Tennyson has fallen into a like ridiculous mannerism. They mistake for the source of the pleasure they derive from old poetry, the mere form of speech in which the ideas of that poetry are clothed; and Donne, and Cowley, and others, in whom rich veins of original thinking are almost hid under rugged phrases and impracticable metre, become their models for their faults and not for their beauties. In poems of any length, this copying of quaint conceits and rough composition, unless skilfully contrasted with opposite qualities of equability and sweetness (as in Beaumont's Psyche, for instance), is eminently disagreeable. It can-not be relished in an old master: in a modern imitator it is intolerable. An occasional discord may make music; but a perpetual discord is too monstrous for any nerves to endure.

We have now paved our way, generally, to the particular work which has just reached Mr. Tennyson published a volume before, which we remember only to have seen through friendly reviews, that hailed him as the most gifted rising bard of the time. We thought the specimens did not support the judgment; but the writer was young, and evidently warm in the pursuit; and we have seen many worse débutants make very distinguished figures in their riper years. We therefore said nothing to damp his ardour. Nor would we now, but that we believe he is confirming himself in the most erroneous pursuit of an ignis fatuus, while possessing talents which, if better

Since July 1830 we have reviewed publications of Southey with the tribute of honour due to his genius and to them: we have frequently bestowed warm praises on the efforts of the very parties who have tried to do us this wrong — and why? because for seventeen years we have held our good faith to the public superior to every other consideration, and have not once allowed favour or resentment to influence a line of the Literary Gazette.— ED.

upon the subject, connected as it is with the | directed, might lead him to the brightness he aims at in the temple of fame; for Mr. Tennyson seems to possess the impulse which determines a man to be a poet; and a fixed determination, though it cannot accomplish all, frequently accomplishes much, if not misled by the force of bad example. Thus we find in these pages a fine perception of rural objects and imagery, and descriptive passages of no mean truth and beauty. The sentiments are also, in general, pure and natural, but marred by the affectation which works them out till pathos expires with ennui. Another good quality to be noted is enthusiasm - that without which there never was and never will be a poet that which needs only to be regulated by taste and judgment to lead the possessor on to We will cite some instances of distinction. what we admire :-

"If I were loved by thee —
All the inner, all the outer world of pain
Clear love would pierce and cleave, if thou wert mine,
As I have heard that, somewhere in the main,
Fresh water-springs come up through bitter brine."

Again, in a rather protracted and very mannered poem to Eleanore, the bard asks how "full-sailed verse may express," among quaintnesses without the same merit,

"Every turn and glance of thine, Every lineament divine, Eleanore, Eleknore,
And the steady sunset glow
That stays upon thee? For in thee
Is nothing sudden, nothing single;
Like two streams of incense free,
From one censer, in one shrine,
Thought and motion min-ine. Thought and motion mingle, Mingle ever. Motions flow To one another, even as tho' They were modulated so To an unheard melody, To an unneard melody,
Which lives about thee, and a sweep
Of richest pauses, evermore
Drawn from each other mellow-deep
Who may express thee, Eleänore? I stand before thee, Eleanore-I stand before thee, Eleanore—
I see thy beauty gradually unfold,
Daily and hourly, more and more;
I muse, as in a trance, the while
Slowly, as from a cloud of gold,
Comes out thy deep ambrosial smile;—
I muse, as in a trance, whene'er
The languors of thy lovedeep eyes Float on to me. I would I were
So tranced, so wrapt in ecstacles,
To stand apart, and to adore,
Gazing on thee for evermore,
Serene, imperial Eleanore!
Sometimes with most intensity Sometimes, with most intensity Garling, I seem to see Thought folded over thought, smiling asleep,
Slowly awaken'd, grow so full and deep
In thy large eyes, that, overpowered quite,
I cannot veil or droop my sight,
But am as nothing in its light."

And then, as if tired of being poetical, with sufficient peculiarities, the writer proceeds to venture more startling similes, more queer versification, and more dubious grammar and meaning.

"As though a star, in inmost heaven set,
Ev'n while we gaze on it,
Should slowly round his orb, and slowly grow
To a full face, there like a sun remain
Fix'd—then as slowly fade again,
And draw itself to what it was before;
So full, so deep, so slow,
Thought seems to come and go
In thy large eyes, imperial Eleanore! In thy large eyes, imperial Eleanore!
As thunder-clouds that, hung on high,
Did roof noonday with doubt and fear,
Floating through an evening atmosphere,
Grow golden all about the sky—
In thee all passion becomes passionless, Touch'd by thy spirit's mellowness,
Losing his fire and active might
In a silent meditation,
Falling into a still delight
And luxury of contemplation—
As waves that from the outer deep
Roll into a quiet cove,
There fall away, and, lying still,
Having glorious dreams in sleep,
Shadow forth the banks at will;
Or sometimes they swell and move, Or sometimes they swell and move,
Pressing up against the land,
With motions of the outer sea;

And the selfsame influence
Controlleth all the soul and sense
Of Passion gazing upon thee.
His bowstring slacken'd, languid Love,
Leaning his check upon his hand.
Droops both his wings, regarding thee,
And so would languish evermore,
Serene, imperial Eleanore."

After the charming line, "In thee all passion becomes passionless," with its wretched rhyme, "mellowness"—his fire is spoken of, but whose fire no guesser of riddles can tell; and then we have the confused metaphor (vaguely surmising what the ideas are) of sleeping waves having glorious dreams, and shadowing forth banks at will-which to us appears to be just-nonsense, as well as the conclusion that the selfsame influence, i. e. the influence of the outer sea, controls all the soul and sense (?) of Passion when gazing on Eleanore, like waves pressed up against the land! In this same poem we hear of "honey in fair gardens culled;" and, within four lines, have the compounds goldenrinded and grapethickened. Such compounds enter in such prolific abundance into Mr. Tennyson's versification, that a small new dictionary might be published of them.

The ensuing poem is called "The Miller's Daughter," and it also exhibits some things to praise, and some things to blame. Its opening shews that the author has no fear of ludicrous association.

"I met in all the close green ways,
While walking with my line and rod,
The wealthy miller's mealy face,
Like the moon in an ivytod.
He looked so jolly and so good—
While fishing in the milldam-water,
I laughed to see him as he stood,
And dreamt not of the miller's daughter.

" I was a long and listless boy, And son and heir unto the squire."

Yet the following, though familiar, is very natural:

"How dear to me in youth, my love,
Was every thing about the mill,
The black and silent pool above,
The pool beneath that ne'er stood still,
The mealsacks on the whitened floor,
The dark round of the dripping wheal,
The very air about the door
Made misty with the floating meal!
I loved from off the bridge to hear
The rushing sound the water made,
And see the fish that everywhere
In the backcurrent glanced and played;
Low down the tall flagflower that sprung
Beside the noisy steppingstones,
And the massed chestnutboughs that hung
Thickstudded over with white cones."

We shall only offer one other example, from "The Lotos-Eaters," of mingled character.

"Courage!" he said, and pointed toward the land,
'This mounting wave will roll us shoreward soon.'
In the afternoon they came unto a land,
In which it seemed always afternoon.
All round the coast the languid air did swoon,
Breathing like one that hath a weary dream;
Above the valley burned the golden moon:

And like a downwoard smoke, the stender stream
Along the cliff to full and pause and fall did seem.
A land of streams! some, like a downward smoke,
Slowdropping veils of thinnest lawn, did go;
And some thro' wavering lights and shadows broke,
Rolling a slumbrous sheet of foam below.
They saw the gleaming river's seeward flow
From the inner land: far off, three mountaintops,
Three thundercloven thrones of oldest snow,
Stood sunsetflushed; and, dewed with showery drops,
Upclomb the shadowy pine above the woven copse.
The charmed sunset lingered low adown
In the red West; thro' mountain clefts the dale
Was seen far inland, and the yellow down
Bordered with palm, and many a winding vale
And meadow, set with slender galingale;
A land where all things always seemed the same!
And round about the keel with faces pale,
Dark faces pale against that roxy flame,
The mildeyed melancholy Lotos-caters came,"

The repetitions of the words marked in italics only shew the perverseness with which the Baa-Lamb school endeavour to mar their better parts.

But take the opening sonnet as a fair specimen of the whole.

f the whole.

"Mine be the strength of spirit flerce and free,
Like some broad river rushing down alone,
With the self-ame impulse wherewith he was thrown
From his loud fount upon the echoing lea:—
Which with increasing might doth forward flee
By town, and tower, and hill, and cape, and isle,
And in the middle of the green salt sea
Keeps his blue waters fresh for many a mile.
Mine be the power which ever to it's sway
Will win the wise at once, and by degrees
May into uncongenial spirits flow;
Even as the great guifstream of Florida
Floats far away into the Northern seas,
The lavish growths of southern Merico."
This sonnet, beginning with a mine and end.

This sonnet, beginning with a mine and ending with Mexico, is nevertheless no treasure: we have Italicised a few of its objectionable words and thoughts. Selfsame is an absurd pet phrase applied on all occasions—nothing continuous, especially with increasing might, can have the selfsame impulse;—Lea is rhyme without reason, seeing that a pastoral enclosure is not the place for a river to acquire this said increasing might;—green and blue we only note as a favourite fashion the author has of trying the opposition of colours, as in the next page the fields and woods

"Grow green beneath the showery gray." and the final comparison, with its affected rhymes of Florida to sway, and Mexico to flow, though introduced with "even as," does not hold good in a single point, as the gulf-stream neither wins the wise at once, nor (the idea, as far as we can catch it, is pretty well spiced with egotism) flows full of riches into uncongenial spirits, like the power coveted by Mr. Tennyson.

Turning over the leaf, we have one of those productions which ought, from their subject, to touch the heart, if they were not overstrained into vexatious trifling pedantry.

o vexatious trining pedantry.

"Shake hands, my friend, across the brink
Of that deep grave to which I go.
Shake hands once more: I cannot sink
So far-far down, but I shall know
Thy voice, and answer from below.
When, in the darkness over me,
The fourhanded mole shall scrape,
Plant thou no dusky cypresstree,
Nor wreathe thy cap with doleful crape,
But pledge me in the flowing grape.
And when the sappy field and wood
Grow green beneath the showery gray,
And rugged barks begin to bud,
And through damp holts, newfushed with May,
Ring sudden laughters of the jay;
Then let wise Nature work her will,

Then let wise Nature work her will,
And on my clay her darnels grow.
Come only when the days are still,
And at my headstone whisper low,
And tell me if the woodbines blow."

The "laughters" of the jay may be facts in the country where Mr. Tennyson hath been, but we never heard aught of the kind. But, perhaps, he fancies that all birds laugh; for at page 147, it is said of one "Kate,"

"I know her by her angry air,
Her brightblack eyes, her brightblack hair,
Her rapid laughters wild and shrill,
As laughters of the woodpecker
From the bosom of a hill."

Of the following about Buonaparte we cannot make sense at all:

"He thought to quell the stubborn hearts of oak,
Madman!—to chain with chains, and bind with bands,
That island queen that sways the floods and lands
From Ind to Ind, but in fair daylight woke,
When from her wooden walls, it by sure hands,
With thunders, and with lightnings, and with smoke,
Peal after peal, the British battle broke,
Lulling the brine against the Coptic sands."

Sure hands they must have been, to light our wooden walls with thunder or smoke either—we do not find fault with the lightnings! The "Lady of Shalott" is a strange ballad, without a perceptible object, and as roundabout as

"The yellowleaved waterlily, The greensheathed daffodilly, Tremble in the water chilly, Round about Shalott."

We have said that the author shewed no fear of ludicrous associations; but as there is nothing either romantic or pathetic in this piece, he was safe enough with his Shallot, an onion which could make nobody shed tears, and might be thus not more laughably parodied:—

On either side the dishes lie
Brave plates of beefsteaks, beefsteak pie,
That stuff the wame and feast the eye;
And 'bout the table, beer runs by
To many a thirsty throat.

The yellowleaved piccalilly,
The greensheathed pepper chill,
Tremble (pen me aught more silly!)
Round about Shallot!!

We shall not, however, go into parody: our remaining extracts shall speak for themselves. A lady translates a kiss (it must have been a hearty one) thus:—

"O Love, O fire! once he drew
With one long kiss my whole soul through My lips, as sunlight drinketh dew."

But there is passion and power in the lines whence this extravagance is taken. Can we say the same of the annexed?

ay the same of the annexed of
"There is a dale in Ida, locelier
Than any in old Ionia, beautiful
With emerald slopes of sunny sward, that lean
Above the loud glerniver, which hath worn
A path through steepdoom granite walls below,
Mantled with flowering tendritteine. In front
The codarshadowy valleys open wide.
Far-seen, high over all, the Godbuilt wall
And many a snawyodummed range divine,
Mounted with awful sculptures."

The sheer insanity of versification! and enough to satisfy a jury de lunatico inquirendo. But, to make the verdict unquestionable, see a song, signifying nothing:—

"Who can say
Why today
Tomorrow will be yesterday?
Who can tell
Why to smell
The violet, recalls the dewy prime
Of youth and buried time?
The cause is nowhere found in rhyme."

Is the jury agreed? Unanimous—"Insane since the date of writing the foregoing!" No further proof need therefore be led from "O darling room," and lines "to Christopher North," &c. &c. &c.; nor from those sad disorders of the imagination exhibited in allegories and classical paraphrases. Low diet and sound advice may restore the patient: in the mean time we must commit him to what his publication does not deserve to have—a cell.

Customs and Manners of the Women of Persia, and their Domestic Superstitions. Translated from the original Persian Manuscript, by James Atkinson, Esq. 8vo. pp. 93. Printed for the Oriental Translation Fund. London, 1832. Murray; Parbury and Co.

In free countries, with European customs, something ("a triffle") of the characters of women, and of the modified nature of the woman-kind, may be obtained from close study and observance in society. To be sure, the intelligence will, at best, be dubious and uncertain; but there will be a glimmering of light to illumine the mind of the devoted and incautious wretch who is determined at once on the acquisition of a forbidden knowledge, and his own loss of Paradise. In oriental climes, and in Persia particularly, it should seem as if all information were utterly shut out; and it is only from a strange book, like this, that we gather a sus-

 The five lines of the verse preceding the quotation just made are:

"On either side the river lie
Long fields of barley and of rye,
That clothe the wold and meet the sky;
And through the field the road runs by
To manytowered Camelot."

picion of the truth-the true and universal truth —" Women are superior to men; and ought throughout the whole world to be allowed the supremacy, without dispute, let, hindrance, or molestation."

How pleasantly would life wag were this slight matter conceded! Domestic squabbles would be diminished at least seventy-five per cent-the police reports would be abbreviated by nineteen cases in twenty-many national wars would be avoided-inexpressibles would fit their owners...Jerrys would be turned into Jennys-instead of a mere annus mirabilis, there would be an accelerated millennium-the petticoat would be more potential than the flag of the prophet, unfurled; -and under female dominion, there would be happiness and peace in every spot and quarter of the globe.

That such might be the case in the Persian empire has been the cause of seven wise women digesting and promulgating the admirable code of which Mr. Atkinson has given us this animated translation. It is, he tells us, "a specimen of Persian humour, a jeu d'esprit, founded upon female customs and superstitions. It pretends to be a grave work, and is, in fact, a circle of domestic observances, treated with the solemnity of a code of laws, by five matron law-givers, assisted by two others. The original manuscript is called Kitábi Kulsúm Naneh, Kulsúm Naneh being the name of the principal lady-judge whose rules and maxims are therein recorded, especially on the household rights and privileges—les petites morales, as the French call them—of Persian women.

The customs (he adds) here described, puerile as they may be thought, shew the actual state of Persian life behind the curtain; and therefore the book may be considered curious as an expose of manners and habits, which are accurately enough described, notwithstanding the amusing turn often given to the descriptions. It presents a view of domestic life, not as it ought to be, considering human conduct with reference to perfect order, but as it is, and consequently deserving of attention.

Accomprehensive view of man and things;
A comprehensive view of man and things;
Tis not a picture of the Raphael school,
Or grand creation of old Angelo,—
But a familiar portrait, such as Demer
Was wont to paint, or Gerard Dow; each hair,
Spot, mole, and wrinkle, faithfully depicted,
With microscopic power."

Mr. Atkinson goes on to mention many privileges possessed by oriental females, which shew that they are by no means such slaves as is usually supposed; but enjoy, in their way, as much freedom as the sex in countries where it is erroneously fancied they are more favoured; and he thus concludes his preface:-"But, seriously, this little book contains some highly characteristic points of domestic arrange-ment in a Persian family; and has not only novelty to boast of, but it is mainly valuable on account of its coming from the fountain-head, and offering, as it does, another proof, added to thousands, that human nature is every where the same, and only modified, when it is modified, by external circumstances."

We now enter upon the translation, which treats of the female world in connexion with the bath, fast-days, music, marriages, children, domestic concerns, gossipping, and other mat-ters; upon which the work advises and directs in a vein of very amusing irony. " This learned treatise (the introduction declares) was not written for the use of the lords of creation, but for the instruction and edification of the female sex: should any woman, therefore, re-main in doubt as to the true mode of proceed-readiness to devote himself wholly to her will female sex: should any woman, therefore, re-ing in household matters, she has only to refer to the grave expounders of those laws and observances, which are deemed so highly important and necessary among women who aspire to conduct themselves with propriety, prudence, and decorum. These expounders of the laws are five accomplished females, peculiarly qualified by study, and a complete knowledge of the pursuits and habits of the sex, to settle every point of difficulty or embarrassment that may occur in the course of domestic life. Their names are—Kulsúm Naneh, the senior matron; Shahr-Bánú Dadeh; Dadeh-Bazm Ará; Bájí Yasmin: aud Khala Gul-bari. And there are two other functionaries, named Khála Ján Aghá and Bíbí Ján Afróz, who deliver their opinions with equal confidence, and who support or question the judgment of the other five on points of great importance, which naturally require the most careful consideration. It is proper to remark that there are four degrees of obligation specified in this work, viz. wajib, necessary, expedient; mustahab, desirable; sunnat, according to the law and traditions of Mohammed; and sunnat mu'akkad, imperative, or absolutely necessary."

Be it our perilous task to thread these mysterious labyrinths, and bring forth a few specimens of what we consider most likely to interest our female friends and readers, whether as curious customs and superstitions, or as entertaining examples of the spirit in which these semi-mock counsels are given.

"The learned conclave are unanimous in declaring that many instances have occurred of women dying from the barbarous cruelty of their husbands in this respect; and if the husband be even a day-labourer, and he does not give his wages to his wife, she will claim them on the day of judgment. It is incumbent on the husband to bestow on the wife a daily allowance in cash, and he must also allow her every expense of feasting, and of excursions, and the bath, and every other kind of recreation. If he has not generosity and pride enough to do this, he will assuredly be punished for all his sins and omissions on the day of resurrection. And whenever he goes to the market, he must buy fruit and other little things, and put them in his handkerchief, and take them to his wife, to shew his affection for her, and to please her heart. And if she wishes to undertake a little journey, to go to the house of her friends for a month, to attend the baths, or enjoy any other pastime, it is not fit for the husband to deny those wishes, and distress her mind by refusal. And when she resolves upon giving an entertainment, it is wajib that he should anticipate what she wants, and bring to her all kinds of presents, and food, and wine, required on the festive occasion. And in entertaining her guests, and mixing among them, and doing all that hospitality and cordial friendship demand, she is not to be interrupted or interfered with by her husband saying, 'What have you done? where have you been?' And if her female guests choose to remain all night, they must be allowed to sleep in the woman's room, whilst the husband sleeps apart and alone. The learned conclave unanimously declare that the woman who possesses such a husband - a man so accommodating and obedient - is truly fortunate; but if he happens to be of an opposite character, morose, disobliging, and irritable, then indeed must she be the most wretched of womankind. In that case she must of necessity sue for a divorce, or make and pleasure. If a divorce is denied, she must then pray devoutly to be unburthened of her husband, and that she may soon become a widow. By artifice and manouvring the spouse may thus be at length induced to say: 'Do, love, whatever you please, for I am your dutiful slave.' Bibi Jan Afrez says, 'a woman is like a nosegay, always retaining its moisture so as never to wither.' It is not, therefore, proper that such a lovely object should be refused the comfort and felicity of taking pleasant walks in gardens with her friends, and manifesting her hospitality to her guests: nor is it reasonable that she should be prevented from playing on the dyra, and frequently visiting her acquaintance.

'Tis perpetual spring
When a woman is kind;
But her frowns always bring Winter tempests to mind."

Nothing can be more just: but again-"On the very day a woman goes to the house of her husband, upon being married, it is necessary that every thing of importance relating to her own interest and advantage should be first settled; all arrangements made to secure her own comfort, and the uninterrupted exercise of her own will; so that she may be exonerated from the responsibility which might otherwise attach to her; for it is sunnat that all blame should be invariably laid upon the back of her husband; and whatever he does, she must require again of him, as if it had not been done at all. Kulsum Nanch says, she is astonished how a woman can live all her life with one husband in one house. Why should he deprive her of the full enjoyment of this world's comforts? Days and years roll on and are renewed, whilst a woman continues the same melancholy inmate, in the same melancholy house of her husband. She has no renewal of happiness, none.

The seasons change, and spring
Renews the bloom of fruit and flower;
And birds, with fluttering wing,
Give life again to dell and bower. But what is woman's lot? No change her auxious heart to cheer; Confined to one dull spot, To one dull husband all the year!"

Our following quotations are rather exhibitions of peculiar customs, though still imbued with the sageness of proper feminine advice. "With respect to marriage and bridehood, and whatever depends upon them, it is proper, when a woman is engaged, that all conjugal arrangements should be completed at once. They present a lighted candle before her face, and place the Korán near her, and a mirror, and also a tray with ambergris-tapers, different kinds of perfume, some arzen and dried dates, called kyáni morád, and cress-seed, aspund, and other articles required by ancient usage. And it is proper, also, that a person should stand at the head of the bride and pronounce the Khotbeh of Hazrat Adam; and they should also throw over the head of the bride a sort of veil of a green colour, se that her whole person may be enveloped in its folds. The bride herself must not speak to any one. She must then be undressed, even her gauze chemise taken off, and whilst thus hid from view, a large brass basin must be turned upside down, and a lighted lamp put under it, fed with oil made of ox-fat. Upon this basin they must place a saddle, if they have one, and then a pillow, on which the bride is seated, the attendants singing aloud:

The husband is saddled, the journey begun, And the beautiful bride her own race has to run." A pretty symbol, poor fellow! but he deserves it, and it is all right. Other strange charms, &c. are thus described:

"Khála Ján Aghá says, that when a cock crows in the house unseasonably it must be killed, according to the old rhyme:

If a cock crows untimely, the wise ones have said, We should always be careful to wring off his head."

" If a girl is of a timid disposition, place a frying-pan at the street door, and put fire into it to make it hot. The mother and daughter must then stand on one side of the frying-pan, close to each other, and every time they change hands they must scatter a little salt and water into it. They must then look steadfastly upon the frving-pan, and particularly upon the spot where the salt and water were thrown, and, wonderful to relate, the image of the beast or animal which is the secret cause of fear will be seen! Again, on a Sunday night take an unburnt brick, and pour some oil upon it, drop by drop, and with a knife scrape up wherever the oil has fallen, and say, This is the eye of such a one, man or woman, mentioning their names. After that, put a piece of cotton and an egg upon the brick, then set fire to the cotton, and place the brick on the road. In returning home be careful not to look back. Kulsúm Naneh says, this is an excellent preservative against the evil eye. Again, the claws of the tiger and the wolf are also of great power in destroying the pernicious influence of enchanters. Some of these amulets are bound round the temples, and others over the shoulders, and some again near the heart. With regard to fortune-telling, a variety of stories are related. Take, hot from the oven, a loaf that is joined to another, and throw them both at the head of the girl whose fortune is to be told. If they do not separate she will soon be married. Take some bride-millet seed, called arzen arúsí, and when the bride is entering the bridal chamber, throw them backwards after her, pronouncing her name, and by counting the seeds that fall, her future fortune may be ascertained. Upon first seeing the new moon, a girl should look at a crow, that her destiny may be known; if the girl's eyes and the crow's eyes meet each other at the same moment, the omen is propitious. If the palm of the hand itches, rub it on the head of a boy whose father and mother are still living, and a present of money will be the consequence. If a dog catches a fly, take and wrap it up in the corner of a handkerchief, and undoubtedly some good will ensue.

"Shahr Banu Dadeh recommends every man to steep the bread of the month of Ramazan in water; and also to kill a kid and eat it. and during that year he will have no pain in his throat. And it is further ordained and directed, that when a person dies it is necessary to spill all the water to be found in the house of the deceased, for if any one should drink of that water, he will have an inflammation of the stomach. This doctrine is of the greatest consequence."

No doubt it is !-- of very great consequence But it is time for us to finish, which we shall do with part of a poem of Persian sentiment expressed by flowers and fruits - and an epigram.

"A youth, in passion's whirlpool tost, His peace of mind for ever lost, With eyes all tears, his colour gone, Thus fondly, wildly, makes his moan: 'Since thou wert in an evil hour Beatowed on me, thou regal flower,†

Like Majnun mad, thou mayst discern I in the fire of absence burn. Unhappy flower! the curse of heaven Had better far than thee been given. And hul, too, is a symbol true, It tells of heart-wounds ever new, And many a rending tale of grief, How worm destroys the rose's leaf; It tells how sorrow poisons sleep, And how for thee I groan and weep; With love my soul is void of light. With love my hair is silver white; Sweet idol! not one transient smile, A lover's anguish to beguile; Darchini* cannot soothe my wo. My tongue has almost turned my foe,
And fails to plend the cause of one
By thy resistless charms undone;
Fulful† amidst the flames I've thrown, But fulful cannot cure the pain
Which tears my heart and dries my brain."

The epigram-

" Who in politeness, Lokman, was thy guide?" The unpolite,' the learned sage replied."

In conclusion, this is an extremely curious and entertaining book; and we reckon it a great misfortune, a sad pity, that there is not a similar one in the English language, for the general instruction of our own fair dames, now left so much alone to nature and their individual genius! A very delicious little Persian girl is lithographed by the author (equally able with pencil and pen), as a frontispiece: if her countrywomen were all like her, we should not wonder at the Persian coveting a number of wives-or, rather, ought not he to be contented with such a ONE ?

Letters of Sir Walter Scott, addressed to the Rev. R. Polwhele, &c.: accompanied by an Autobiographical Memoir of Lieut.-General Sir Huesey Vivian, &c. 12mo. pp. 103. London, 1832. Nichols and Son.

A LONG life of literary pursuits, embracing almost every species of intellectual and moral improvement, has made the amiable author of this volume well known to the public; though, perhaps, better to the preceding generation, when the press was not so prolific and turbulent, than to the last quarter of a century of noise and tumultuous competition. From a list at the end of the present publication we see that he began his career in 1778, with "The Fate of Lewellyn, and the Genius of Karnbre," since which, to this day, a multitude of works have appeared from his pen, including "Local Attachment," a poem which has gone through several editions; the "Unsex'd Females," "The Fair Isabel," a continuation of Beattie's Minstrel, translations of Theocritus, Lucretius, &c., histories of Devonshire and Cornwall, sermons and other productions in divinity, and miscellaneous poetry, essays, &c. &c. which it would require a space more than we can spare to enumerate and describe. Apparently ever ready for the field, and equipped for all sorts of exhibition, whether in friendly joust or absolute warfare, he is the foremost in the ranks of the book battalia, whom we may expect to see drawn forth by the death of the mighty minstrel of the north. Periodicals have of course already been busy with the subject; and we have seen a world of silliness and ignorance displayed upon it, together with some interesting information; but this is the first volume it has elicited which has met our eye.

There is not much worthy of notice in it yet, though slight, it is pleasing as far as it goes. At page 82, we find that Mr. Polwhele had, seven years ago, asked leave to publish the letters he had received from Scott, who, in answer to the application, civilly says, " I am sure you could not wish to publish any of my letters, containing in them matter not fit for the public eye. At the same time, bearing no recollection of the subjects at this distance of time, I should be glad to have an opportunity of looking them over before publication, as they may possibly regard topics on which my more mature age may have induced me to change my mind, or perhaps opinions hastily and inaccurately expressed in the confidence of private correspondence. I will be, therefore, greatly obliged to you if you would have the goodness to transmit me the letters under the cover of Mr. Croker, of the Admiralty, who, if the parcel is addressed to him, will forward them safely to me. I have little reason to suppose that there will be any cause to refuse compliance with your wishes, and certainly shall be very little disposed to decline compliance with any thing you can wish." And after having examined them, he writes in a subse-quent letter, "I return the enclosed, and can have no possible objection to your disposing of them as you please. I would, however, submit to you that the greater part of them are too frivolous to interest the public; and I hope you will be so good as to mention, that I have consented to your wish merely because it was your wish, and without any idea on my part, that what was written for your own eye deserved a more extensive circulation."

> · Cinnamon. † Long pepper.

In both these letters we see the good sense of the Author of Waverley-first, in doubting the propriety of that evil of our day, the rage for publishing private correspondence, - and secondly, the opinion that the greater portion of such correspondence (no matter how eminent the parties) is generally too frivolous for public interest. His death has, however, added to the interest in this case; and we are not sorry to have the proof before us.

An introductory poem, tracing his peaceful life, shews the kindly and estimable character of Mr. Polwhele; and the earlier letters, commencing in 1803, are curious, as exhibiting the giant in his literary swaddling-clothes, grati-fied by every sound of praise, and anxious even for private opinions favourable to his first efforts as an author. As his celebrity and fame increases, we observe still the same courtesy and unaffectedness of disposition, but less of care and pains-taking: delays are necessarily frequent, and compliment, well turned, succeeds to earnestness and veritable purpose. Scott had too much on hand to busy himself beyond the circle with which his exertions were connected; and though his epistolary employment amounted to a prodigious sacrifice of his time, it was nevertheless generally and properly conducive to his own views, and he cautiously avoided embroiling himself either in controversy or details. To every applicant a civil and a flattering reply was given; every present of a new book was rewarded with a note of praise; even the horrors of manuscripts were returned with not discouraging intimations: and we have rarely, if ever, met with an individual dissatisfied with a letter or opinion of Sir Walter Scott, who in this respect was truly all things to all men. Take an example in his reply to Mr. Polwhele, who wanted to publish something on the question.

" Abbotsford, Feb. 29, 1812. "Your favour, and soon after your poem, reached me here when I was busy in planting, ditching, and fencing a kingdom, like that of irgil's Melibœus, of about one hundred acres-I immediately sent your poem to Ballantyne, without the least intimation whence it comes. But I greatly doubt his venturing on the pub-disputes of the Huttonians and Wernerians, though they occasioned, it is said, the damning of a tragedy in Edinburgh last month, have not egitated our northern Athens in any degree like the disputes between the Bellonians and Lancastrians. The Bishop of Meath, some time a resident with us, preached against the Lancastrian system in our episcopal chapel. The Rev. Sir H. Moncrieff, a Scottish baronet, and leader of the stricter sect of the Presbyterians, replied in a thundering discourse of an hour and a half in length. Now, every body being engaged on one side or the other, I believe no one will care to bring forth a poem which laughs at both. As for me, upon whom the suspicion of authorship would probably attach, I say with Mrs. Quickly, 'I will never put my finger in the fire, and need not! indeed no, la!' "

[&]quot; "In the north of England there is a similar supersti-tious notion, only the hen is the sufferer: if a hen happens to crow like a cock, it is immediately killed."

This quotation is more interesting, as it contains an early notice of the delight he took in Abbotsford, to which, his own property, he had recently removed from Ashieshiel. Upon this spot his whole heart was set; and we cannot read even these slight allusions to it without earnestly hoping that the subscription now on foot may preserve it as the cherished memorial of his own creation to his latest posterity.

Again he writes of it:

"I am busy here beautifying a farm which nothing but the influence of Local Attachment could greatly recommend, unless a Christian wished to practise at once the virtues of faith, hope, and charity; for it requires the whole to judge of it favourably, its present state being altogether unpromising. It has, however, about a mile of Tweedside, and that is a sufficient recommendation to a Borderer."

And again:

"My present address is 'Abbotsford, Melrose,' where I have settled myself in a little cottage, with about one hundred acres of land, as my 'hoc erat in votis.' We have the living fountain and the silver Tweed; but, alas! the groves are yet to rise."

At page 20, A.D. 1803, we hear something of his contributions to the Quarterly Review; and at page 81, A.D. 1816, of his doings for the Edinburgh: we quote both passages.

" I consider it as no slight favour that you are willing to intrust to me the task of reviewing my early and great favourite, the beautiful poem on Local Attachment, and I will write to Mr. Gifford, our chief commander, offering my services. The only objection I can foresee is, the poem having been for some time printed; but it has been customary of late years to get over this. I will at the same time mention to Mr. G. your obliging offer of assistance, which I do not doubt he will consider as highly valuable. It may be necessary to say, however, that I myself have no voice in the management of the Quarterly Review, and am only a sincere work. The management is in much better hands; but I am sure Mr. Gifford will be as sensible of the value of your co-operation as I should be in his situation.

* His opinion of the Bell and Lancaster controversy is

The editor of the Edinburgh Review is my particular friend; but he and I often differ on points of criticism. If I find he views your poems with the same eye that I have done for many years, I am sure he will give them an honourable niche in his temple of fame, or rather his theatre of anatomy. I have myself long ceased to write in a work, the political sentiments of which do by no means correspond with mine; indeed, I never did touch upon any poetical productions, conscious that either my praise or censure might be easily misconstrued. The articles I used sometimes to furnish had chiefly relation to antiquities."

In another letter, he presents to Mr. Douce one of twelve entier copies printed of Sir Tristrem; the rest being Bowdlerised previous to publication. The following remarks on Scottish history deserve attention from such a quarter:

" Boethius is altogether fabulous; and to follow him, as Buchanan has done, would only be adding to exploded error. Something might be gleaned from the English chronicles, and a good deal from old Wintown and Barlowe. But I apprehend the only way to get at something like historical fact, would be to consult the few records which remain of that early period. These, indeed, are very few, have suffered much, and are not over and above legible. They consist of charters, and of various rolls and chamberlains' accompts, kept by our monarchs and their officers of state. If these were carefully examined, I am convinced much fable might be corrected by the application of dates to facts, and perhaps some im-portant truths recovered. Lord Thurles was the first who introduced accuracy into Scottish history: all who precede him may be considered as absolutely legendary. There is, therefore, a fair field for patient and persevering research and industry."

There are only two other short sentences to which we shall advert; the first shewing how soon the system of publishing had led Scott into that commercial sea on which the bark containing his fortunes was ultimately wrecked; and the last, what pains he bestowed in rendering the local scenery in his works strictly accurate—so accurate, indeed, that landscapes might be painted from them.

" Abbotsford, Sept. 10, 1812.

" I find from the state of my own transactions with them [his friends and printers], that they are not disposed, in the present state of mercantile credit, to publish any thing for which they are not under actual engagements. The facility of commercial discounts has been narrowed from nine and ten to three months, which of course obliges all prudent adventurers, who have not the means of extending their capital, to meet the inconvenience by retrenching their trade. To this, therefore, the Muse must give way for the present; so far, at least, as Edinburgh is concerned. This is the real state of the case; otherwise, independent of the merit of the performance itself, your name alone would have been sufficient to recommend any thing to a publisher in Scotland. But at prelication, nor can I much urge him to it. The | well-wisher and occasional contributor to the | sent there is nothing to be done. I have a poem on the stocks myself; but shall find some difficulty in getting it launched, at least in the way I expected, and must make considerable sacrifices to the pressure of the times.'

Our second extract follows : -

" Sept. 1814.

" I believe I shall make another adventure myself about the same time, upon a subject of Scottish history; I have called my work the 'Lord of the Isles.' The greater part has been long written, but I am stupid at drawing ideal scenery, and waited until I should have a good opportunity to visit, or rather to revisit, the Hebrides, where the scene is partly laid."

Having afforded so much space to so moderately-sized a volume, we shall not need further to recommend it to general regard. It will ever be a pleasant companion to the publications of the immortal man to whom it chiefly relates.

We are glad, however, to take this opportunity of discharging a debt we have for sometime owed to its venerable editor; namely, to mention, as a curious and entertaining production, his Biographical Sketches in Cornwall,* which has lain upon our table among the postponements for several months. It is replete with miscellaneous matters, and exhibits the Cornubian worthies, of all ages and professions, in a light and agreeable manner, except where the characters call for graver notice. It certainly deserves a shelf among the works of its kind, and must be peculiarly welcome to those in the west of England.

Part of a Life of Sir W. Scott, with critical notices of his writings, has also appeared in Edinburgh (T. Ireland, jun.; and Fisher and Son, London); but it seems to be an inferior performance, merely to fill the demand of the Geography in all Ages. By the Author of "History in all Ages," "History of the Jews," &c. 12mo. pp. 608. London, 1832, Hamilton, Adams, and Co.; Leeds, Knight. ONE of those useful compilations of industry, skill, and labour, which cost much to do, and are of infinite value when done; and which, yet, rarely meet the applause they deserve. But it is, perhaps, the test of utility to have small éclat, even where it obtains extensive approbation. The latter ought to be the fate of this compendious and well-arranged volume, which contains all that the geographical learner may need for instruction and reference.

The Family Library, XXXVI. Six Months in the West Indies. London, Murray. To have Mr. Coleridge's popular work in this cheap form (a third edition, too, with additions) is a treat. We praised the original publication highly; and, though books cost us little, we must say that the present volume well becomes its best associates as part of a Family Library.

Shakespeare, with Illustrations, Vol. II. 12mo.

Valpy.
THE Merry Wives of Windsor, Measure for Measure, and the Comedy of Errors, are contained in this continuation of a very pleasing series, in which the fine illustrations of Boydell, by Smirke, Peters, and eminent artists, happily illustrate the text of our immortal bard. Unless Shakespeare is forgotten, this neat edition, notwithstanding all preceding and contemporaneous, must take its place upon ³ vols. 12mo. Nichols and Son, Longman and Co., Simpkin and Marshall, Whittaker and Co.

^{*} His opinion of the Bell and Lancaster controversy is worth quoting.

"I like the poetry very much, and much of the sentiment also, being distinctly of opinion that the actual power of reading, whether English, or Latin, or Greek, acquired at school, is of little consequence compared to the habits of discipline and attention necessarily acquired in the course of regular study. I fear many of the shorthand acquisitions will be found 'in fancy ripe, in reason rotten.' After all, however, this applies chiefly to the easier and higher classes; for, as to the lower, we are to consider the saving of time in learning as the means of teaching many who otherwise would not learn at all. So I quietly subscribe to both schools, and give my name to neither. I trust the charlataniem of both systems will subside into something useful. I have no good opinion of either of the champions. Lancaster is a mountebank; and there is a certain lawsuit depending in our courts here between Dr. Bell and his wife, which puts him in a very questionable point of view."

[•] Mr. R. Dagley, the esteemed author of Gents from the Antique, and other were is of fancy and art, when Ivanhoe appeared, had in his portfolio a sketch of the spot where Gurth and Wamba are represented as holding their opening colloquy. He had taken it some years before from nature, as a striking scene; and the description of it in the romance was a perfect description of his drawing, even to a tree.—Ed. L. G.

select the library.

Family Classical Library, Vol. XXXVI. THE third and last volume of Euripides -Potter's translation, and too justly appreciated to require our praise.

Select Library, Vol. VII. Memoirs of the late Dr. Mason Good. By Dr. Olinthus Gre-gory. 12mo. pp. 400. London, Fisher. ANOTHER well-judged volume for general reading. Dr. Good was a clever and a widely esteemed man. His memoirs are valuable to medicine, to religion, and to the community at large. We are pleased to have them in so popular a form.

Suggestions respecting the Neglect of the Hebrew Language as a Qualification for Holy Orders. By R. W. Jelf, B.D. Preceptor to Prince George of Cumberland, &c. &c. 8vo. pp. 53. London, 1832. Rivingtons.

An admirable pamphlet on a subject of great importance to our national church, and which we are glad to see engaging the attention of a clergyman and scholar so competent to its discussion. It seems strange that the value of Hebrew, to the theological student especially, should ever have been doubted, when we recollect that it is the language of more than threefourths of the Bible, and that even an accurate acquaintance with the Greek of the New Testament cannot be attained without recourse to its peculiar idioms and forms of expression. However, we think Mr. Jelf has set the question of its indispensability, as far as clergymen are concerned, for ever at rest; and therefore we warmly commend his performance to the serious consideration of all such as are conscious that they have hitherto neglected this necessary branch of theological learning.

The Veterinary Examiner. No. I. Edited by W. Dewhurst and Henry Braddon. WE have to acknowledge the receipt of this new periodical, and hope that, contrasting benevolence to animals with spitefulness toward contemporaries, it will be more useful to horses than its namesake is to human beings. The articles appear to be various, and on subjects of general interest.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

LINNÆAN SOCIETY.

A. B. LAMBERT, Esq. in the chair.—A monograph of the East Indian Solanea, in continuation, was read. Also a note from the Hon. C. A. Harris, giving an account of a species of thrush, killed at Heron Court, Hants, in January 1828, by the Earl of Malmesbury. It has been carefully examined, and found to be identical with the species called the Java thrush (turdus varius): there was not the slightest appearance of the bird having been in confinement,-hence there is no doubt of its being a stray one. The same species has also been found in New South Wales, which shews that it has a pretty extensive geographical range. The Earl of Caernarvon was proposed as a Fellow of the Society. Amongst the donations which lav on the table, was the third part of Mr. Gould's magnificent work on the Birds of Europe: the accuracy and great beauty of the plates commanded the admiration of the meeting.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

MR. HAMBLETON in the chair. Mr. Roths-

Society. The balance in favour of the Society on the accounts for Nov. amounted to 5171., and upwards of 4,000 persons visited the gardens during that month. The Hudson Bay Company presented a fisher weazel, and a young arctic fox: the latter was found by a ship's crew, floating on a piece of ice in the Arctic Sea, about 100 miles from the land. It was intimated that the Society would shortly adopt the system of other scientific institutions of the metropolis, and have regular meetings, at which papers connected with the pursuits of the Society would be read. It has been determined also, that Dr. Grant should deliver a course of lectures on the structure of animals. At a recent meeting of the committee of correspondence, a specimen was exhibited of a claw obtained from the tip of the tail of a young Barbary lion, recently presented to the Society. Homer observes (erroneously, however), that the lion, when angry, lashes his sides with his tail; a remark repeated by many of the ancient poets, Greek and Roman. Lucan and Pliny indicate their belief that by this means the ani-mal increases his rage. None of these writers advert to any peculiarity in the tail of the lion, to which so extraordinary a function was attributed: the existence of this peculiarity was discovered by Didymus Alexandrinus, one of the early commentators on the Iliad. For centuries the discovery was consigned to oblivion, until within twenty years back the subject was revived by Blumenbach, who verified the accuracy as to the fact, though not admitting the induction of Didymus Alexandrinus. The subject again slumbered until 1829, when Deshayes announced that he had found the prickle on both a lion and lioness which died in the National Menagerie of France.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

DR. MATON in the chair. Mr. Decimus Burton. and two other gentlemen, were elected fellows. Communications read before the Society are carefully, and we will add most judiciously, abridged by Dr. Roget, the chief secretary. This abridgment, or abstract, is read at next meeting. The president's address, delivered at the anniversary last week, was, of course, exempted from the doctor's operation; and the reading of it occupied the time of the present meeting, to the exclusion of any new paper. The manner in which H. R. H. acknowledged the honour of being elected to the president's chair, and the assistance and co-operation of the council, was feeling and impressive, as his remark on the new arrangements relative to the reception or rejection of papers was lofty and just. In future the Society will fol-low the example of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, admitting no paper into its transactions which has not been previously considered deserving of a place by at least two members of the council, lest any unworthy thing should be engrafted on the stock of that knowledge contributed by such men as Newton, Halley, and in later days, Young, Wollaston, and Davy. In noticing the support given by the governments of other countries to men of science and learning, the president lamented the absence of such encouragement at home. However anxiously he looked to the period when similar sup-port would be provided by our own government, it was with satisfaction he viewed the labours of individuals eminent in literature, the arts, and sciences. He considered the institution of the the shelves where economy and good sense a dozen other individuals, were elected into the ence as constituting a proud epoch in the scientific history of the country. A just eulogy was paid to the memory of Cuvier, whose great work on fishes contains descriptions of 6,000 species, 4,000 of which are not to be found in any other writer. The feeling of "hope upon hope" manifested by the Royal Duke, when he came to speak of our intrepid countryman Captain Ross, was very touching;—that brave sailor had undertaken the solution of the great nautical problem, a north-west passage,—an attempt which baffled the most daring and skilful navigators of the reign of Elizabeth; his fate for three years had remained unknown; and it was with melancholy pleasure that H. R. H. had become the chairman of a committee appointed to manage a subscription to be employed in ascertaining it

The awarding of the Copley medal, and other points of the Royal Duke's address, were noticed in our last Lit. Gas.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

DEC. 5.—The conclusion of Col. Gunter's narrative relating to the escape of King Charles II. was read. Notwithstanding the care and devotedness of his friends, Charles's journey and embarkation were attended with great difficulty and frequent risk of discovery. approaching Arundel the party met with Capt. Morley, governor of the castle, who was out hunting; at Bramber, they found themselves suddenly and unexpectedly in the midst of a troop of horse, which had just entered the village; and great alarm was excited among the king's attendants at Brighton, in consequence of his being recognised by the landlord of the George Inn, where they put up. No small distress was occasioned to them likewise by the untractableness of the owner of the vessel which Col. Gunter had engaged to convey the royal fugitive across the channel. But the most curious adventure that befell the monarch during the two days in which the colonel acted as his guide, happened at the honse of a person named Symons, who was married to the colonel's sister, where the party passed a night. At this house they arrived without previous notice, while the master was absent. Symons, on returning home (and having enjoyed his glass), is surprised to find a party in his parlour at supper. He recognises the greater part of his uninvited guests as old friends; but observes, with astonishment, one whom he takes for a Roundhead, in their company. This is the king himself, who, with his attendants, to avoid the necessity of explanation, favours the mistake, while Symons talks and drinks with the supposed Roundhead, in a sort of bantering mood, between fear and courtesy: the king, meantime, says the narrator, acting his part to admiration. The whole scene is excellent; and we hope to be enabled to extract it and lay it before our readers in our next number.

A passage in a letter from Sir W. Gell to Mr. Hamilton was afterwards read by that gentleman, in which some particulars were communicated respecting a most interesting discovery, made by Colonel Robinson, of the masts of a number of ancient vessels existing in the port of Pompeii. A drawing, by Sir W. Gell, was likewise exhibited, from a mosaic picture lately found there, representing some event in the life of Alexander-probably the death of Darius: the original is among the most perfect specimens of ancient pictorial art yet obtained, and belonged to the house of the Faun.

The Chevalier Brönsted submitted to the inchild, the celebrated lean-contractor, and about British Association for the promotion of Sci-spection of the members a drawing of a singular terra-cotta, of Athenian fabric, found at Ægina. This relic is a kind of box, of a peculiar form; and was probably intended to contain the bones made use of in the child's game played with small bones from the sheep's foot. It is ornamented with numerous elegant figures, representing Prometheus on the rock, visited by the Oceanids.

FINE ARTS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Memorials of Oxford.—Edited by the Rev. J. Ingram, D.D. President of Trinity College. With Engravings by J. Le Keux, from original Drawings by F. Mackenzie. No. II. Oxford, Parker, Slatter, and Graham: London, Tilt.

To the second number of this interesting work we may justly extend the praise which we bestowed on the first. The "Interior of the Cathedral," and "The Library, Christ Church," are both very pleasingly executed. Some of the wood-cuts are exceedingly curious.

Interiors. Drawn on stone by Samuel Prout. No. I. Ackermann and Co.

THERE is no artist in the country more competent to the execution of such a work as this than Mr. Prout. The selection which he has made of subjects in this No. is admirable. They are "Ulm," "Heidelberg," "Arque," "Arundel," "Kirpstall," and "Rouen;" and he has imparted to them all that breadth and richness of effect for which he is so justly celebrated.

British Flowering Plants. By W. Baxter, A.L.S., F.R.S. &c. Whittaker and Co. A VERY pretty little work, now publishing in numbers, the object of which is " to supply the lovers of botany with a set of figures which may be relied on for accuracy, while every unnecessary expense will be avoided."

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

THE DUCHESS OF BERRY.

"Oh, my friend! whatever these revolutionary maniacs may say, a monarch is not merely a man."—The Author of the following.

AT a moment when another sorrowful page is added to the eventful and checkered story of the princess who is at present the subject of public attention, I offer the translation of a few extracts from a narrative hastily put together by the able pen of M. le Vicomte de Chateaubriand, at the period of the Duc de Berry's assassination. I cannot imagine that any will refuse their sympathy in the fate of a widowed and unfortunate woman, whatever may be the bias of political sentiments; and to those who, like the writer of these lines, are bound by the ties of grateful recollection to the illustrious though exiled house of Bourbon, I can need no apology for the revival of circumstances under which both the Duc and the Duchesse de Berry appear so deserving the respect and admiration of every well-disposed mind.

"In 1816 I witnessed the splendid pageant of the entrance of Caroline of Naples into Paris; and shortly after, the ceremony of her marriage with Charles Ferdinand, Duc de Berry. In 1820 I saw the remains of that murdered prince prematurely consigned to the vaults of St. Denis! In 1820 I listened with the breathless interest to the peal of artillery which announced to the populace of Paris the sex of the posthumous infant, so miraculously preserved to the widowed mother, spite of the various attempts made to destroy the germ of its existence. And the painting must be from the heart which can convey an adequate idea of the scene of powerful interest in which the amiable governess of less enfants de France, la Comtesse de Gontaut, presented the infant Comtesse de Gontaut, presented the infant Henri, Duc de Bourdeaux, to those who, like myself, hastened to offer an anxious blessing on the orphan prince, there cradled in every insignia of sorrow and lamentation.

"To the royal wife and mother, who at that period was, at her youthful age, a bright example of the influence of religion, heroism, and domestic affection, these recollections are inscribed.

" The Duc de Berry, last prince of the house of Bourbon in the direct line, was, like the first king of the race, the victim of an assassin's blow. On Sunday, the 13th of Feb. 1820, the Duc and the Duchesse de Berry went to the opera, to partake in the amusements customary during the season of the carnival. Between the acts of the first piece they went from their own box to that of the Duc d'Orleans, where his good-humoured laughter, and caresses of the young Duc de Chartres, attracted from the audience their repeated notice and applause. In returning to her box, the duchess slightly hurt herself by the opening of a door, at the moment of passing; and feeling fatigued she expressed a wish to retire, at about twenty minutes before eleven. The Duc de Berry accompanied her to the carriage, intending to return into the theatre. The duchess's carriage had drawn up to the door, the soldiers on guard were within the lobby, the prince having long waved the etiquette of their attendance under arms: one man remained at the door as a sentinel; and while presenting arms to their royal highnesses, his back was turned to the street, as was that of the Comte de Choiseul, an aide-de-camp in waiting. The Comte de Mesnard, senior equerry to the duchess, conducted her to the carriage on the left, while the duc was on her right. The Comte de Clermont Lodève (gentleman in waiting) was in attendance, to return to the theatre with the prince. At this moment, a man, coming from the Rue de Richelieu, hastily passed between the sentinel and a servant who was putting up the step of the carriage: pushing him aside, he threw himself on the duke, at the instant when, turning from the carriage to reenter the theatre, he said, 'Adieu! we shall meet by and by.' The assassin, leaning his left hand on the left shoulder of the royal victim, stabbed him with his right hand in the right side, a little below the breast. Thrown back by the blow on the Comte de Mesnard. the duke pressed his hand to the spot, exclaiming, 'I am assassinated—this man has killed me;' and raising his voice, 'I am murdered! I am murdered!—I hold the poniard!' At the first exclamation of the prince, the Comtes de Clermont and de Choiseul, the secretary, the servant, and several other persons, pursued the assassin, who had fled by the Rue de Richelieu. The duchess, whose carriage had not yet driven off, heard her husband's voice, and tried to throw herself from the door, resisting every effort to detain her, and scarcely waiting till the step could be let down. 'Leave me!-I tesse Bethizy (the lady in waiting), she flew to him at the moment he had withdrawn the knife from his bosom, and given it to the Comte de Mesnard, his friend in exile. He was then seated on a bench in the lobby, his head leaning against the wall, and his clothes were opened to examine the wound: it was bleeding profusely. The prince then repeated,—'I am dying!—let a priest be sent for. Come, my wife! that I may expire in your arms.' Faint-ness succeeded. The young princess threw herself on her husband's bosom, and in a moment her splendid attire was steeped in his blood. Meantime the assassin had been taken, and with difficulty saved from the summary vengeance sought by the soldiers. When lodged in the guard-house, he was searched, and another poniard found on him, together with the sheath of the one he had left in the bosom of his prince. The most immediate surgical assistance that could be obtained was that of Drs. Blancheton and Drojard, who found the wounded prince removed to the ante-room of his box in the theatre. On regaining his senses, his first inquiry was, 'Whether the guilty man was a foreigner?' and on being answered in the negative, the son of France observed, 'It was cruel to him to die by the hand of a Frenchman!' The duchess earnestly inquired of the surgeons what was their opinion, promising to support it with firmness; and they tried to encourage some hope, from the circumstance of his not having bled at the mouth. After cleansing the wound from the clotted blood, they proceeded to bleed him in the right arm. The sufferer rallied sufficiently to say to the two medical men, that 'he was truly sensible of their kind efforts; but that they were useless, as he was beyond cure.' M. Blancheton sought to persuade his royal highness that the wound was not deep: 'I do not deceive myself,' he replied; 'the poniard was buried to the hilt—I say so positively.'

The duchess tore off her sash, to serve as a bandage: she alone preserved her presence of mind in these dreadful moments, and evinced a character greatly above the common. The prince, whose sight became more feeble, said, from time to time, 'My wife! are you there?' 'Yes!' replied the princess, wiping her tears, 'I am here, and will never quit you.' One of the professional men, who had at the earliest intelligence flown to offer his aid, and who was particularly attached to the Duc de Berry, was desirous of sucking the wound, till the instruments for cupping could be got. 'My dear Bougon,' observed the royal patient, 'what would you do, my friend? my wound is mortal, and probably poisoned!'

"The Duc de Berry had most anxiously requested the attendance of a minister of the church, and the Bishop of Chartres soon arriving, found him supported in an arm-chair, surrounded by the surgeons, and in full possession of his senses. The wounded prince held out his hand to this respected prelate; and uttering every sentiment of faith, resignation, and repentance, prayed for the consola-tion of his support. The bishop exhorted him to rely on the goodness of his Creator, and bestowed a general absolution, according to the forms of the Catholic church, till such time as the penitent could make a more detailed confession. The Comte de Mesnard, still flattering himself that the wound was not mortal, had gone for the Duc d'Angoulême, who had retired to bed, but hastily dressing himself, flew to the command you to let me pass!' she franticly scene of suffering, where the meeting between cried. The wounded prince made an effort to the two brothers was affecting beyond description. They mingled their tears, for expression was denied them. It was then decided to remove the Duc de Berry to an adjoining room, where he was laid on a couch, formed by four chairs, till a camp bedstead could be prepared. The Duc d'Angoulème, fearful of some new calamity, had not allowed the duchess to accompany him on leaving the Tuileries; but madame did not delay to follow him. What were perils to her? Has she ever shrunk from the endurance of sorrow or adversity? To her scenes of wo were familiar. It was not the first time that the daughter of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette had tended on a dying brother! The Comte d'Artois (afterwards Charles X.) soon followed; and those only who know the kind paternal heart of this afflicted father can judge of his sufferings. Monsieur had insisted on coming unattended; and he knew not that one of his best servants, the Duc de Maillie, had, in order to follow him, bestowed honour on a place the least considered. The Duc de Berry expressed a wish to give his blessing to mademoiselle (the princess, his daughter). She was brought to him by the Comtesse de Gontaut, when the prince, placing his nerveless hand on his child, 'Poor girl,' said the dying father, 'may you be less unhappy than others of my family." The Duc (present King of the French) and Duchesse and Mademoiselle d'Orleans, with whom he had been at the theatre, were added to the sorrowing party, which was also joined by the father of the Duc d'Enghien (late Duc by the father of the Duc d'Enghien (late Duc He was surrounded by weeping servants: 'My de Bourbon). Bleeding of the feet was tried father,' he exclaimed, 'take charge of these ineffectually; but, after repeated application of the cups, some relief was obtained; the pulse became stronger, the complexion reanimated, the blood flowed freely. The anxious group rejoiced to see blood flow! The celebrated Mons. Dupuytren arrived at one o'clock. He found the prince lying on his right side. His paleness, his altered features, his short breathing, the groans which escaped from his bosom, the cold sweat which hung on his brow, his convulsive movements, the disorder of his blood-stained bed, and, above all, the horrid wound exposed, struck consternation into the mind of a man whose duty, however, called him daily to scenes of mental suffering. The prince informed M. Dupuytren, extending his hand to him, that he suffered great pain; when, after examining the wound, and some conversation with the practitioners previously in attendance, it was decided to enlarge it, as the only means of giving vent to the blood collected on the lungs. M. Dupuytren approached the prince, and questioned him as to his feelings; but not obtaining any reply, he requested the Duchesse de Berry to repeat the inquiry. 'I entreat you, my beloved, to say, or point out to me the spot where you suffer most pain.' When recalled by a voice so dear, he took his wife's hand and placed it on his breast, making an effort to express that he was suffocating. Monsieur was desirous that his daughter-in-law should withdraw during the operation: 'My father, she said, 'do not force me to disobey you!' and, turning to the professional men, 'Gentlemen,' she added, 'do your duty!' She knelt by the bed-side during the operation, holding the prince's left hand. When the caustic was applied, the Duc de Berry exclaimed, 'Leave me to die, since it must be so.' 'My beloved,' said his weeping wife, 'endure this for my sake. One word from this young and amiable scile to her, she desired they would kiss their princess softened his agonies, and he became sister. The feelings of deep sorrow for the princess softened his agonies, and he became sister. The feelings of deep sorrow for the all resignation to the will of God. When this dying prince were only equalled by the admiraprincess, 'Take her hence, my father; her painful operation was over, the Duc de Berry, tion and respect which his princess inspired sobs distract me!' Her royal highness was passing his hand over the duchess's hair, said, My poor wife, how unhappy you are!' The depth of the wound was now ascertained. The knife with which it had been inflicted was six or seven inches long, the blade flat, narrow, and with two edges, like that of Ravaillac, and extremely sharp.

^{*} At a period when the fate of the Duchess of Berry involves not only a story of strong personal interest, but a question of much national importance, we trust that the following narrative, for which we are indebted to a friend, will be acceptable to our readers. The opinions, of course, where any are hinted, are those of our correspondent, with whom, however, we entirely agree as to the individual sympathy which such an affecting narrative is so well calculated to excite.—Ed. L. G.

" A few moments of tranquillity followed the painful operation alluded to. To the dying is generally granted a short cessation from suffering, which affords time for a rapid glance at the past-like the traveller who rests for a moment on the summit he has laboured to ascend, before he turns his footsteps down the opposite side of the mountain. The prince placed his hand in that of M. Dupuytren, and begged that he would give him notice of any change in his pulse; thus placing at the post of life a sentinel too vigilant to permit of his being surprised by death. Mors, ubi est victoria tua? During this respite from pain, he addressed these words to the Duchesse de Berry: ' My dear love, do not let grief overpower you; take care of yourself, for the sake of the infant you carry in your bosom.' declaration afforded the truest satisfaction to all present, while the regrets for that prince were rendered even more bitter; who, at the moment he was, to all appearance, putting an end by his death to the existing monarchy, thus considerately announced its revival. Wherever the Duc de Berry turned his closing eyes, it was to evince some kind and grateful feeling. good people—of all my household.' Violent retchings followed. The prince continued to assert that the poniard was poisoned. He had previously requested to see his assassin: What have I done to this man?' he said; 'I may have offended him unintentionally.' 'No, my son,' replied monsieur, 'you never saw, never offended this man; he could have no personal enmity against you.' 'He is then a madman,' observed the duke. He was most anxious for the arrival of the king (Louis XVIII.): 'I shall not have time,' he said, 'to ask for this man's pardon;' and then added, ' promise me, my father, promise me, my brother, that you will solicit his pardon from the king.' "The Duc de Berry had, during his emigration in England, formed a connexion, which, though forbidden by religion, to human weakness may be excused, under the circumstances of the royal exile. At the moment of his death, desiring not less to give a public proof of the sincerity of his penitence, than of his confidence in the high soul and generosity of his wife, he expressed to her a wish to embrace the two little innocent creatures, the daughters of his banishment. 'Send for them,' exclaimed the young princess; 'they are also my children.' The two little strangers arrived in less than an hour. They knelt down, sobbing, by the bed-side of their royal father, their faces bathed in tears, and their hands clasped. The prince, in English, ten-derly spoke of his approaching death, desired they would love and fear God, be good, and remember their unhappy father. He then blessed them, and embraced them; and turn-ing to the Duchesse de Berry, said, 'Will you, then, be so good as to take care of these poor orphans? Her royal highness opened her arms to receive them; and calling mademoiamongst the beholders. He was placed on a mattrass on the floor, while his bed was arranged. It was then he made his private confession to the Bishop of Chartres, and after-wards avowed his faults in an audible voice. He recalled to the beholders the scene of St. Louis expiring on his bed of ashes. In asking pardon of his Creator for himself, he added, 'pardon! my God, pardon! for the man who has robbed me of life.' After receiving the extreme unction, and piously conforming to every religious duty, the prince felt his last hour drawing near. 'How long is this night!' he was heard to murmur; 'how I suffer! will the king soon arrive?' He repeatedly called his father, who, stifling his sobs, assured him he was near him. He was told that the maréchals were arrived. ' I had hoped,' said the expiring man, 'to have shed my blood amongst them for my country.' Night of horror and of pleasure! night of virtue and of crime! While the wounded son of France was borne dying to the ante-room of his box, the performances continued on the stage. In one spot the sounds of music, in the other the groans of the expiring prince. The curtain only separated the follies of the world from the destruction of a dynasty. The priest, who bore the holy cup of salvation, passed through a crowd of masks. At length the unconscious spectators dispersed, and pleasure gave way to grief; the streets were deserted, silence reigned, interrupted only by the tramp of guards, and the arrival in succession of persons attached to the court; some in full dress from fetes, others hastily called from their beds,"

"Three bulletins had been despatched to the palace of the Tuileries. At five o'clock, A.M., the king arrived. The true statement of the prince's danger had not been made to him. The dying man, hearing the noise of the horses in the street, seemed to rally; and on the king's entrance, rousing himself as for the purpose - 'Give me your hand, my uncle!' he said, 'that I may kiss it for the last time.' The king approached, overwhelmed by his grief, and embraced his nephew; when the Duc de Berry earnestly exclaimed, 'Grant me, my uncle, the life of the man!' 'You are not so ill as you imagine, answered the king, deeply affected; 'we will speak of this another time. 'The king does not say 'yes,' observed the prince, still persisting in his entreaty;— 'pardon for this man, that I may die in peace!' then, after a short interval, 'This man's pardon would, however, have softened my last moments;' and, while his accents became imperfect by the near approach of death, he still murmured, 'At least let me carry with me the hope that a fellow-creature's blood will not be shed for me after my death!' The king inquired, in Latin, of M. Dupuytren, his opinion of the prince. His reply was a gesture that left no hope to his majesty. Still, there was a return of some strength, and momentary relief from the excitement of the meeting with the king; and the Duc de Berry signified his uneasiness that his rest should have been disturbed, begging him to return to his bed; but his majesty replied, 'My night is over, my son ;it is now five o'clock, and I shall not quit you.'
Day, in fact, then dawned on the expiring martyr - about to awake amidst angels, at the moment when he was accustomed on earth to shake off the bonds of sleep. Feeling his end drawing near,- 'It is now over!' he said, and added, on hearing a burst of sorrow from the princess, 'Take her hence, my father; her borne forcibly from the room to one adjoining; but on promising to be more calm, she was suffered to return to that in which her dying husband was. Every shadow of hope had fled, and the most alarming symptoms had appeared. The Duc de Berry desired to be turned on the ther side. The medical men opposed this, but the royal patient insisted. He was heard to murmur, 'Holy Virgin, have mercy on me!'

These were his last words. He was turned on his left side, as he wished. In an instant every faculty had fled. When removed from the sight of her husband, the duchess lost all self-command, and gave herself up to the most frightful despair. To the Comtesse de Gontaut she cried, 'Madame, I confide my daughter to you; my husband is dead, and I also will die!' And then, breaking from those who would have prevented her, she flew back to the chamber of death, and, overthrowing every thing that stopped her progress, she flung herself, screaming, on the body of her husband. The Duc de Berry had just expired! In vain the glass of the king's snuff-box was placed on his lips-the breath of life was extinct! It on his knees; united in tears and prayer, every eye was turned to heaven.
"'I have a last duty to perform,' said the king, when urged to retire;—'I have a last duty to perform towards my son!' Leaning on M. Dupuytren's arm, he approached the bed, closed the eyes of the dead, and, tenderly kissing his hand, withdrew without uttering a ANOTHER novelty, called Mr. Busy, has been word. The spectators silently dispersed."

DRAMA.

DRURY LANE.

THE only novelty we shall notice this week, for Macready's William Tell and Virginius are but excellent revivals, is the debut of Miss Mordaunt, a younger sister of Mrs. Neshitt, in melodrame. She is very pretty, very spirituelle, and but a mere girl. She promises much, and is full of talent; though she might well have sung to the audience,

"Young I am, and sore afraid."

COVENT GARDEN.

On Saturday Artaxerxes was produced at this theatre, with a débutant, Mr. Lenox, in the part of Artabanes. He has a fine voice; and when we have said so, we have pretty well summed up his present qualification for the stage; for, to speak negatively, it was not well managed, his articulation was not distinct, and his action was not graceful. Nor could we forget his great predecessors in this character - Incledon with his extraordinary organ, and still more immediately Braham, with powers far superior to any competitor. In other respects the opera left us little or nothing to desire. Miss Shirreff never acquitted herself so advantageously as in Mandane; and we but echo the general impression when we state, that she greatly increased her reputation by this performance. The clearness and precision of her execution, the free display of all the high qualities of her voice, and the good sense which marked every passage of expression, stamped her as one of the best and most delightful singers the present time can boast. She was much and most deservedly applauded throughout. Miss H. Cawse was a very unaffected and pleasing Artaxerxes; and Mr. Wilson sang charmingly in Arbaces. Sweet music could hardly be more sweetly given; and we noticed also that the orchestral accompani-ments were extremely well played. The opera ments were extremely well played. The opera 64 times in an hour—being upwards of 21,000 was succeeded by a new petite comedy, in one feet in 12 hours—without any individual know-posed to be mortally wounded in the West Indies, marries a sergeant's widow (Miss Kelly), who nursed him affectionately, in order that she may be rewarded with the pension due to his rank. He, however, miraculously bitterest of evils, as it prevents his union with a certain beloved Emmeline (Miss Lee), and blasts all his prospects of happiness. The piece rested on the appearance of his simple and ignorant Irish wife in England in the midst of his higher connexions; and Miss Kelly did all that was possible for the character. But the thing turned out to be dull; and, in spite of her exertions (which were distinctly applauded), it was doomed to that bourne whence no petite comedy returns. Miss Sydney played a sou-brette lady's maid with much vivacity. The rest of the dramatis persona had so little to do, that we can only say they did it well.

On Thursday, the grand ballet of Massa-niello was produced with great splendour, as at the King's Theatre. Mons. Coulon was the had returned to God! Every one present fell fisherman, Elvire his wife Madlle. Adele, and Fenella his sister Madlle. Pauline Le Roux, her first appearance here. The performance and scenery were magnificent; and boleros, tarantelles, &c. danced exquisitely, delighted a and covered and preserved by the eruptive volcrowded audience.

ADELPHI.

produced here, and, after the first night, with increasing success. The plot is somewhat equivocal and broad, resting on a series of intrigues watched by a busy-body, Mr. Reeve; but it is now smartly acted, and the hits excite much laughter. What more could the writer (Mr. G. Dance) or the manager (Mr. Yates) desire ?

VARIETIES.

A Miss-translation. - Some young ladies, lately, on going into the country, left a card at the house of an acquaintance, with whom they were not on very intimate terms. "What," said mamma to a daughter looking at it, "is the meaning of this P. D. A. in the corner?" "It stands for pour dire adieu," replied the damsel, who understood French better than her mother; and the latter exclaimed, "Well. that beats all for familiarity! Poor dear! adieu! Indeed! well!"

China.—The first specimen of an Anglo-Chinese Kalendar and Register has been published in China for the year 1832. According to this authority, the population returns of the celestial empire, in 1813, amounted to 362 millions; of which number the capital, Pekin, alone is said to contain five millions.

Western Literary Institution .- At the halfyearly meeting of this establishment on Monday, Sir J. Hobhouse took the chair; and we rejoice to find from the report made, that it flourishes in all its parts and purposes.

Ingenious Mechanism .- The Exeter Gazette mentions that Mr. Bradford, a country watchmaker, residing at Newton Abbott, has produced several pieces of very curious mechanism. First, a machine representing a lamp, suspended by a small brass rod, hung to the ceiling, which constantly turns round, carrying a quantity of watches and two lights, and is made to work in different parts. The second is a brass ball, which runs a distance of 28 feet act, called the Irish Wife. Sir Randall O'Con- | ing the cause of its going, except the mechanist ner (Abbott), when a poor officer, and sup- and his family. The last is a timepiece, going without weights or springs, shewing the hours, minutes, days of the week, and days of the month.

Roman and British Antiquities, &c .- Among the curious remains of antiquity found in marecovers, and finds his ill-suited match the king the foundations for the New London Bridge, and the excavations in Crooked Lane, and sold this week among the effects of the late Mr. Knight the engineer, were a penny of Wulfred, archbishop of Canterbury; two of Ethelred II., and five of Cnut; and also the lower jaw, and three other bones, of Peter of Cole Church, the original architect of London Bridge, found on removing the foundation of the ancient chapel.

Pompeii: most interesting Discovery. - Our report of the last meeting of the Royal Society of Literature notices a letter of great interest from Sir W. Gell, relative to recent important discoveries at Pompeii. Colonel Robinson, it seems, in boring as the French do for Artesian wells, first fell upon a spring resembling the Seidlitz waters, which is already much resorted to, and has performed many cures. But a far more striking discovery ensued - no less than that of the long-anticipated Port of Pompeii, with its vessels overthrown upon their sides, canic matter, which has thus anchored them for so many ages. About thirty masts have been found. What a mine of curiosity lies below, to gratify our thirst for knowledge of these remote times! Earnestly do we hope that funds will be found to carry on the work of exploring briskly, and on a large scale, instead of the tedious and imperfect process hitherto adopted by the Neapolitan government.

Panorama of Stirling. — A private view was yesterday given of a panoramic picture of the ancient city of Stirling and the surrounding country; the joint effort of Mr. Burford and Mr. Slous. The picture appeared to be well painted and highly characteristic; but the day set apart for viewing it was so foggy, that no correct estimate of its merits could fairly be formed. We must therefore defer any farther notice of it till our next.

Asthma and Extravagance .- " Do listen," said Mr. A., whose asthma and age had increased together, "to that fellow bawling out his mutton pies; why, he wastes as much breath in a minute as would last me for a month."

The Doctor.—A wag was rallying Dr. ——on his want of skill, which the doctor took of me," he said. "That is exactly what I should have supposed," replied his tormentor.

Niagara .- A curious prospectus has just been put into our hands, for building a city on ! (or near) the Falls of Niagara. It is proposed to call it the City of the Falls.

The Prophetic Widower, or Anticipatory Courtship. — The following letter is one sent by Lord P. to a young lady who caught his "truant fancy:"—" Dear Miss,—Will you be my next? Yours, &c. P."

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

An important and great philological desideratum is just announced, viz. an Egyptian Lexicon of the Coptic, Sahidic, and Bashmuric Dialects: containing all the Words preserved in the rich Collection of Manuscripts late in the possession of the Chevalier Marcel, of Paris; in all the accessible Manuscripts in Public and Private Libraries; and in all the Published Works in the Dialects of Ancient Egypt: with their Signification in Greek and Latin. By the Rev. Henry Tattam, M.A. F.R.S.L. &c. The work is now in the press, under the auspices of the University of Oxford. This is as it ought to be.

The Epigrammatist's Annual for 1833.

The Aplarian's Guide; containing Practical Directiona for the Management of Bees, upon the Depriving System, for the Management of Bees, upon the Depriving System, by J. H. Payne.

Nearly ready, the History and Origin of the Coldstream Guards, from the Formation of the Regiment under Gen. Monk, to the Battle of Waterloo: dedicated to the King. Six Weeks on the Loire, with a Peep into La Vendée. Frank Orby, a Novel.
Another periodical, the Field Naturallst's Magazine, and Review of Animals, Plants, Minerals, the Structure of the Earth, and Appearances of the Sky, edited by Professor Remie.—is anounced.

fessor Rennie .- is appounced.

fessor Rennie,—is announced.

The Causes of the French Revolution.
A Teacher's Lessons on Scripture Characters, with Catechisms, by Charles Baker.
A Treatise on Happiness.
Second Vol. of Elements of Materia Medica and Therapeutics, by Anthony Todd Thomson, M.D.
Another Monthly, to be called the British Library, comprising the Classic Authors of Great Britain, is announced for early publication, with illustrations on wood, &c.
Mr. Bernard, whose new piece at the Olympic we noticed last week, has, we understand, the conclusion of his father's Memoirs nearly ready for the press, under the title of Retrospections of America, &c. by John Bernard, edited by his Son.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Loudon's Magazine of Natural History, Vol. V. 8vo. 28s. bds.—Cole's Renegade, and other Poems, fcp. 6s. bds.—Rogerson on Inflammation, Vol. I. 8vo. 15s. bds.—Phillips on the Urethra, &c. 8vo. 8s. bds.—Britton's Picture of London, 18mo. with Maps, 6s. bds.—Britton's Picture of London, 18mo. with Maps, 6s. bds.—Britton's Picture of London, 18mo. with Maps, 6s. bds.—An Inquiry into the i rinciples of Population, 8vo. 10s. bds.—An Inquiry into the i rinciples of Population, 8vo. 10s. bds.—An Inquiry into the i rinciples of Population, 8vo. 10s. bds.—The Year of Liberation, 2 vols. post 8vo. 18s. bds.—Ely's Winter Lectures, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Rennie's Alphabet of Botany, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth; Insects, 18mo. 2s. 6d. cloth.—Faulkner's Visit to Germany, &c. 2 vols. post 8vo. 21s. bds.—D'Abrantes' Memoirs, Vol. IV. 8vo. 14s. bds.—Letters of Sir Walter Scott, post 8vo. 4s. cloth.—Select Library, Vol. VII. Gregory's Memoirs of Good, 12mo. 6s. cloth.—Jones's Biographical Sketches of the Reform Ministers, 8vo. 18s. cloth.—Mrs. Austin's Selections from the Old Testament, 12mo. 5s. boards.—Count Pecchio's Observations on England, post 8vo. 10s. 6d. bds.—Biblical Cabinet, Vol. II. Dr. Brown's Philological Tracts, Vol. I. 12mo. 5s. cloth.—Masque of Anarchy, a Poem, by P. B. Shelley, with a Preface by Leigh Hunt, fcp. 2s. 6d. bds.—Tenpyson's Poems, fcp. 6s. bds.—Marcet's Tales for very Young Children, the Seasons, Winter, 18mo. 2s. hf.-bd.—Happy Week, or Holydays at Beechwood, 18mo. 4s. 6d. bd.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

MT
November.	Then		nometer.		Barometer.
Thursday 29	From	34.	to	45.	29.52 to	o 29·56
Friday 30		30.	••	45.	29.75 Sta	ationary
December.		42.	• •	56.	29.72	· 29·64
Saturday · · 1		50.	• •	57.	29.52	• 29·42
Sunday 9					ł
Monday 3		37.		47.	29:39 •
Tuesday · · 4		41.		47.	29·45 to	o 29·8 9
Wednesday 5	1	32.	• •	43.	30.06	 30·14

Wind S.W. and N.W.
Except the 29th ult. and 4th inst., generally cloudy, rain frequent, and wind tempestuous; a heavy shower of rain in the evening of the 2d, accompanied by two or three peals of thunder, and vivid lightning.
Rain fallen, 375 of an inch.
Edmonton.

CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Edmonton. CHARLES H Latitude 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

There has been such an influx of new publications since our last, that we are compelled to postpone our Reviews of Sir James Mackintosh's Third Volume of the History of England, Leigh Hunt's Poems, the Life of a Sailor, the continuation of Sir A. Faulkner's Tour, and other novelties, though all prepared for the press.

J. N. of Manchester is too ornate for passion or pathos. Poetry must be congenial to the subject, and not merely poetical.

"Matrimonial Happiness in the Country" will do better for a provincial newspaper. We do not want to give our town readers the jaundice, poor souls!

Though we decline the office, we must say we have been amused with our unknown Correspondent's grave proposition, to give literary employment to his debtor (Mr. S. A.) to the amount of Sik.; in order that the aforesaid Mr. S. A. may be enabled, as he is willing, to pay him what he owes him. The plan is certainly Ingenious, and we dare say ingenuous too; but it is novel, and out of our way.

way.

Gertrude is feeling; but we can hardly find place for a sweet thought, gracefully versified.

E.'s lines, forwarded by a father, are also touching, and must interest those near and dear; but we could not predicate so much for general circulation.

We have found the two volumes, "a View of the Early Parisian Greek Press," too important to be dismissed at a cursory inspection; and yet it seems to us to be a work which we must, after more mature deliberation, satisfy ourselves with cordially recommending to all scholars, without having the power to illustrate it, or state the grounds for our judgment.

ERRATUM.—In our last, p. 761, col. 1, line 9 from bottom, for "Miss Dufenlin," read "Miss Dujardin,"

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

To the PROTESTANT NOBILITY.—

A Married Ciergman, of the Church of England, in full Orders, under thirty, you of see, of Matter's tending, and who bottamed very high honours at one of the Universities, having been obliged, from family arrangements, to give up his public duties in the Ministry, is anxious torce elve into his family, where there are no children, the Son or Nose of a Nobleman. The Advertiser resides in a large and old established family mansion, about fifty mies from London, in an extremely healthy and pleasant neighbourhood. The house is retired, with extensive and deliahfful grounds; and being disengaged from all parochial duties, he would be enabled to give his entire time to cultivating the minds and forming, the character of his Pupils, in a manner most calculated to adorn the high rank and conspicuous station which a Nobleman is called on to fill as soon as he has arrived at the years of manhood. The Advertiser would not only give instruction in the Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural and Aloral Philosophy, Political Economy, History, and in recently the property of the pro

Beclesiastical Revenues' Commission, 44. Parliament Street, Dec. 1831. THE COMMISSIONERS appointed by HE COMMISSIONERS appointed by HIS MAJESTV to INQUIRE into the REVENUES of the CHURCH, being desirous of completing their Report, it was ordered, at a Board held on the 4th instant, that an Advertisement be inserted in the Public Papers, requesting that such ofthe Clergy as may not have received the Queries issued by the Commissioners, will apply for them, either personally or by letter, to the Secretary; and that those who have received them, and have not yet returned their Answars, will do so before the 20th instant. All Letters to be sent, under cover, to "The Under-Secretary of State, Home Office, London;" with the words "Ecclesiastical Revenues' Commission," in the corner of the cover.

Published by Moon, Boys, and Graves, 6, Pall Mall; and may be had of all Book and Printsellers.

The Proof Plates to the Keepsake and Picturesque Annuals, for 1833.

TO PEDESTRIANS, SPORTSMEN, &c.
PATENT PEDOMETERS for the Walstcoat Pocket, at Paynes', Watch and Clock Makers, 163, New Bond Street.

MUSIC.

NEW CATHOLIC MUSIC, as performed

YEW CATHOLIC MUSIC, as performed at the Bararian Chapel, Warwick Street.
Composed by H. G. NIXON,
Organize to the Royal Bavarian Embassy in London.
Cantate Dormino, Solo for a Treble Voice, reompanied by a full Choir. Price 5s.
Respice in me, Solo for a Bass Voice, 2s. 6d.
Adjuva nos, Deus, Duet for a Treble (or lenor) and Bass, 2s. 6d.
Victimes Paschali, Grand Motett for a full hair. 2s. 6d.

Chair, 8s. 6d.

Preparing for publication, In te, Domine, Solo for a Treble Voice, 2s. Ave Verum, Duet for Two Trebles, 2s. 6d.
Published by Monro and May, No. 11, Holborn Bars.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

The Child's Own Book.

Embellished with Three Hundred Cuts, price 7s. 6d. in fancy boards, or 8s. 6d. bound,

THE CHILD'S OWN BOOK. The 2d edition.
London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside; N. Halles, Piccadilly! Bewdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; R. Griffin and Co. Glasgow; and Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh.

4s. 6d, in fancy boards, or 5s. 6d, b

Uniform with Byron.
Price 5s. and a Portrait of the Author

Price 6s. and a Portrait of time Author,

PLENDID VILLAGE, CORN-LAW

RHYMER, EXILE, BOTHWELL, SPIRITS and MEN,
WHARNCLIFFE, and other Poems.
By EBEREZER ELLIOTT.

Beojamin Stell, 99, Paternoster Row.

In 2 vols. 8vo. price 18s. boards,

THE YEAR of LIBERATION; or, a

Journal of the Defence of Hamburgh against the French Army under Marshal Davoust, in 1813. With Sketches of the Battles of Lutzen, Bautzen &c. &c.

Printed for James Duncan, 37, Paternesser Row.

Mrs. S. C. Hall's New Romance. In 3 vols. post 8vo.

H E B U C C A N E E R.

By the Author of "Sketches of Irish Character," &c.

Richard Bentiey, New Burlington Street (late Calbara and Bentiey). T H E

Just published, price 15s. cloth lettered,
TAMPS on DEEDS and ASSURANCES.
By THOMAS COVENTRY, Esq.
Barrister-at-Law.

Also, Conveyancer's Evidence, price 12s. boards.
J. and W. T. Clarke, Pertugal Street, Lincoln's Inn.

In 8vo. 4th edition, enlarged, 7t. boards,

ART of VALUING RENTS and TILLAGES, and the Tenant's Right on entering and quitting Farms explained.

By J. S. BAYLDON, Land Agent, &c.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Lengman.

By the same Auther,
Treatise on the Valuation of Property for the Poor's Rate. Svo. 7s. 6d. boards.

Amusement for Winter Evenings and the Fire-side Circle.

THE FLOWERS of ANECDOTE, WIT, GAIBTY, HUMOUR, and GENIUS. Second edition, illustrated with 18 Plates by Landseer and Heath. Price is:
neatly bound.
"One of the best things of the class with which we have met:
various, brief, entertaining, and unsolled by any taint of ribaldry."

Literary Gazette.
"A cheap and amusing volume, containing hundreds of 'good things." The plates are excellent."—Chronicle.

The Art of Tormeuting; a Series of Illustrations of the most approved Methods of excelling in this valuable Acquisition: comprised in Forty-four Subjects. Frice 6. plain; 128. coloured.

Old Ways and New Ways; or, the Contrast between Ancient and Modern Manners, exemplified in Seventy Laughable Groups. Price 6s. plain, or 18s. coloured.

Illustrations of Smollett, Fielding, and Gold-smith; in a Series of Forty-one Plates. Designed and engraved by George Cruikhank. With Descriptive Extracts from the Novels. Price 18s. nextly bound.

The Epping Hunt: a Poem. By Thomas Hood, Esq. Illustrated with six Engravings on Wood, after the Designs of George Cruikshank. 3d edition, feelscap 8vo. 2s. 64.

" Hunt's reasted "-VI.

Whims and Oddities. By Thomas Hood, Eq. A new edition. The 3 vols. new comprised in 1, uniform with the Comic Annual, 12s. bound. Charles Tills, 86, Pleet Street.

Principles of Population. In 1 vol. 8vo. price 10s. boards,

AN INQUIRY into the PRINCIPLES of POPULATION, exhibiting a System of Regulations for the Peor, designed immediately to leasen and finally to remove the citis which have hitherto pressed upon the Labouring Clauses of Society.

Printed for James Duncan, 37, Paternoster Row.

In 8vo. 6th edition, with 30 Plates and Cuts, 18s, cloth.

INSTRUCTIONS to YOUNG
SPORTSMEN; with an Abridgment of the New Game Laws.
By Lieut. Col. P. HAWKER.
"Col. Hawker is one of the best shots in England, and his Instructions to Sportsmen' the very best book we have on the subject."—Blacknood Mag.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Constable's Miscellany. With several Engravings, 8s. 6d.

POPULAR GUIDE to the OBSERVA. A TION of NATURE; or, Hists of Inducement to the Study of Natural Productions and Appearances, in their Connections and Relations.

elations.
By R. MUDIE,
Author of the "British Naturalist," &c. Forming the 77th Volume of "Constable's Miscellany."

By the same Author, First Lines of Zoology. 6s.
First Lines of Natural Philosophy. 5s.

Where may be had,
The Girl's Own Book, with 120 Cuts, price price 122.
Whittaker, Treecher, and Co. Ave Maris Lane. The Picture of India. 2d edition, 2 vols. Interesting New Works,

Just published by Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street (late Colburn and Bentley). PRESENT STATE OF HOLLAND AND BELGIUM.

In 2 vols. post 8vo. VISIT TO GERMANY

And the Low Countries.

By Sir A. B. FAULKNER.

II. The 4th Volume of the English Translation of the MEMOIRS OF MADAME JUNOT, (DUCHESS OF ABRANTES.)

Written by HERSELF.

Camprising, among other interesting features, an account of Gen. Junoi's Secret Mission to the Courts of Madrid and Lisbon, with Anecdotes of the Nobility of Spain and Portugal.

III. 2d edition, in 3 vols. post 8vo.

ZOHRAB, THE HOSTAGE.

By the Author of "HAJJI BABA." criptions full of strength. It is the very best book we have read for a considerable period.

IV. Complete in $ vols. 3vo. with fine Portrait, engraved by Finden, from an original Painting by Sir H. Raeburn, Maps, &c.

LIFE OF SIR DAVID BAIRD, Bart.

By THEODORE HOOK, Esq.

scluding his Carrespendence with the Duke of Wellington, the Marquess of Wellesley, Lords Melville and Castlereagh, Siz Moore, and many other distinguished Characters: from the Originals, in the possession of Lady Baird.

V. In 3 vols. post 8vo.

OTTERBOURNE;

Or, the Early Days of Hotspur.

By the Author of "Derwentwater."

we think, is destined to occupy a distinguished place as an historical novelist."-Mora " The anthor of this very striking story, ing Post.

"Otterbourne" is a spirited tale of the Walter Scott class. The author has a quick eye for the picturesque, and much vigous and liveliness of fancy,"—Suc.

VI.

VI.
In 2 vols. Svo. with numerous Plates and Vignettes

WILD SPORTS OF THE WEST.

By the Author of "Stories of Waterloo."

"A work altogether after our own hearts."—Specialor. "Seery species of 'wild sport' peculiar to the British Isles is inimitably described, and seasoned with anecdotes, sketches, and tales, atternately humorous and pathetic, but all true to nature."—United Service Journal, Dec.

VII. Complete in 3 vols. handsomely bound in cloth, 27s

THE SPANISH NOVELISTS.

By THOMAS ROSCOE, Esq.

Comprising a Series of National Tales of Life and Adventure. Translated from the Originals, with Biographical and Critical Notices, &c.

"Freductions that have been popular many centuries in their native soil."—Speciator.

"The tales are all remarkable, and many admirable. The work will prove a valuable addition to our literature."—New

VIII.

Complete in 1 vol. price 6s, neatly bound and embellished, and printed uniformly with the Wavarley Novels,

FLEETWOOD:

Or, the New Man of Feeling.

By W. GODWIN, Esq.

With a New Preface by the Author, containing Anecdotes of his Literary Life, written expressly for this edition; forming the Twenty-second Volume of the "Standard Novels."

In 18me. the 2d edition, with Additions, price 1s. 6d. cloth, SERMONS and PRAYERS, delivered by JOSEPH JOHN GURNEY in the Friends' Meeting House at Liverpool, 1828.
Thomas Hedgeon, Liverpool; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Are Maria Lane, London.

French Literature.—Sciect Writers of the present Age.

Just published, complete in 8 vols. pocket size, 10s. 6d. in extra canvass boards, ORINNE: l'Italie. ou. Par Mme. Is BARONNE DE STAEL.

Forming the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Volumes of Bibliothèque Portassivede Dames, or a Collection of the best French Works of the 19th Century.

Edited by M. DE ROUILLON.

Each Volume contains about $50 pages, and may be had sepa rately.

Each Work is preceded by a Biographical and Literary Sketch of the Author.

In the Author is also wall adapted for the superior Classes in

of the Author.

This work is also well adapted for the superior Classes in Schools.

Volumes already published,
Vol. I.—Choix des meilleures Pièces de M. Vol. II.—L'Hermite de la Chaussée d'Antin.

Par M. De Jouy (the Addison of France). Toms I.
Vol. III.—Histoire Ancienne. Par M. le
Comte de Ségur. Tome I.
Vols. IV. V. and VI.—Corinne; ou, l'Italie.

Vol. VII.—Histoire Ancienne. Tome II. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and and John Stacey, Old Haymarket, Norwich.

In 2 vols. 8vo. 21. in boards, the 4th edition of ELECT PIECES, in Verse and Prose.

By the late JOHN BOWDLER, Jun. Esq.

Of Lincolnis Inne, Barrister-st-Law.

Printed for T. Cadell, Strand; and Hatchard and Son, Piccadilly.

 The profits of this Edition were, by direction of the late John Bewdler, Esq. the Father of the Author, given to the Society for the Suppression of Vice, of whose Committee he was a Member.

Hooke's History of Rome—New Edition.

In 6 vols. 870. with Maps, new edition, price 3s. 3s. boards,

OMAN HISTORY, from the Building of Rome to the Ruln of the Commonwealth.

London: Printed for Lougann, Rees, Orme, and Co.; Jeffery and Son; J. and W. T. Clarke; T. Cadell; J. Richardson; Carpenter and 8on; R. Scholey Baidwin and Cradock; J., 6s., 10 Reivington; J. Booter; Haution, adams and Co.; White daren, Treacher and Co. T. T. T. and J. Tegg; Simpkin and Marshall; J. Bohn; J. arburt, S. J.
Yere; G. and J. roominon, an array.

Crevier's Roman Emperors, from Augustus to Constantine. From the French, by J. Mill, Esq. 10 vols. 8vo. 4t.

Corporate Reform... 8vo. price 5s. sewed.

BSERVATIONS on the PRINCIPLES to be adopted in the ESTABLISHMENT of NEW MUNICIPALITIES, the Reform of Ancient Corporations, and the Cheap Administration of Justice: addressed to Henry Hallam, Esq. Together with the Heads of a Bill for the Fature Regulation and Government of Corporations.

By Sir PRANCIN PALGRAVE, K.H.

Loadon: J. Hatchard and Son, Piccadilly.

New Novels, &c. by Distinguished Writers. A 3d and cheaper edition, in 2 vols. 16s. of

T H E A L H A M B R A.

Author of the "Steich Book," "Tales of a Traveller," &c.

2. The Heathen's Wall; or, the Heidenmauer. By J. F. Cooper, Author of the "Spy," "Pilot," &c.

3 vols.

3. Tales of the Early Centuries. By the Author of "Brambletye House," the "Tor Hill," &c. 8 vols.

4. Legends of the Rhine and Low Countries. By the Author of "Highways and Byeways." 3 vols.

5. Henry Masterton; or, the Young Cavalier. By the Author of "Richelieu," "Darnley," and "De l'Orme." 3 vols.

6. Tales from Proissont. By the late Barry.

1ºOrme." a vols.

6. Tales from Froissart. By the late Barry
8. Ledger, Author of "Githert Earle." 3 vols.
7. The Highland Smugglers. By J. B. Fraser, Esq. Author of the "Adventures of a Kuzzilbash." 3 vols.
8. The Schoolfellows; or, History of Stanley Baxton. By John Galt, Esq. Author of the "Ayrshire Legatees," "Annals of the Parish," &c. 3 vols.
9. The Courteat By the Earl of Muleyraya.

e., "Annals of the Farlin," Nc. 3 vols.

9. The Contrast. By the Earl of Mulgrave, uthor of "Matilda," and "Yes and No." 3 vols.

10. Arlington. By the Author of "Granby," d "Herbert Lacy." 3 vols. and " Herbert Lacy.

11. Fortune Hunting. By the Author of

"First Love." a vote.

12. Sir Ralph Esher; or, Adventures of a Gentleman of the Court of Charles II. By Leigh Hunt. 3 vots.

13. The Fair of May-Fair; or, the Miseries of Mariago. By the Author of "Mothers and Daughters." 3 vols.

Containing the Flirt of Ten Seasons—The Special License—The Separate Maintenance—The Divorcés, &c. &c.

14. Advantumes of a Vounger Son. 3 vols.

The Separate Maintenance—The Divorces, occ. occ.

14. Adventures of a Younger Son. 3 vols,
"We believe the celebrated Trelawney (the intimate friend of Lord Byron), to be the author of this work, and that it embodies a condicable portion of the events of his earlier life."—Literary Considerative potential of the Castife.

Published for H. Colburn, by R. Bentley, New Burlington Street; Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh; John Cumming, Dublin; and to be had of all Booksellers, and at all respectable Libraries.

New Week's Preparation, with considerable Improvements, by the Rev. S. Wiz. In Two Parts, each 92. 6d. neatly bound in black; or complete, 5s. neatly bound in calf,

NEW WEEK'S PREPARATION for a WEW WEEK'S PREPARATION for a WORTHY RECEIVING of the LORD'S SUPPER, as recommended and appointed by the Church of England; and a COMPANION to the ALTAR, directing the Compland; and his Behaviour and Devotions at the Lord's Table: with Instructions how to live well after receiving the Holy Sacrament. Revised by SAMUEL WIX, A.M. F.R. and A.S. Vicar of St. Bartholomew. London. Printed for Longman, Ress, Orme, and Co.; S. Hodgson; J. M. Richardson; J. M. Richardson; J. M. Richardson; Hatchard and Son; Baldwin and Cradock; J., G., and F. Rivington; J. Duncan; Hamilton, Adams, and Co.; Whittaker, Treacher, and Co.; Simpkin and Marshall; and Houlston and Son.

Of whom may be had.

Of whom may be had,
Original New Week's Preparation for a Worthy Receiving of the Lord's Supper, &c. 2 Paris, each is. 64.

New Whole Duty of Man, 8vo. 9s. bound, Elegani Christones Presents.

Sharpe's Editions, in Cabinet Vois. with beautiful Engravings from Westall, is. 6d. each, beards,

THOMSON'S SEASONS—Beattie's

Minstret—Cowper's Task, Table-Talk, and Minor Peems, 3 vois.—Milton's Faredise Lost, 3 vois.; Paradise Regained, and Minor Forms, 3 vois.—Falconer's Shapwresk—Goldenstith's Peems; and Gray's Forms.

Uniform with the above, 5s. 6d. each,
Bacon's Essays...Elizabeth...Gregory's Legacy-Chapene's Letters...Mason on Relf. Knowledge...Paul and Virginia...Rasselas...and Vicar of Wakefield.

Young's Night Thoughts, with 10 Engrav-

Small Octavo Editions of the foregoing may be had: also of Burns's Poems and Songs, 2 vols. 18t.—Sturm's Reflections, 4 vols. 20t.—and Pope's Poetical Works, 2 vols. 15t.  The above are generally hept in elegant bindings. London: Published by the Proprietors.

To the Clergy, Heads of Families, Emigrants, Travellers, and Captains of Vessels. Price 3s. 6d. 3d edition, DIRECTORY, and Family Catalogue of Drugs, Chemicals, &c.; with the Preparties and Doses, and the best mode of administration of all preparties and Doses, and the best mode of administration of all preparties and Doses, and the best mode of administration of Diseases, with the most approved methods of Treatment, according to Modern Practice.

"We have not seen the preceding editions of this useful volume; but do not wonder, on looking it over, that it should have reached a third impression. For common family reference, for the Lady Bountifuls (if auch now exist in country quarters), felergymen, and other benevolent persons, who may be called upon to assist the sick, or those who have met with accidents at distance from medical advice, this Directory is an excellent guide. We cordially recommend it to notice as a work which may assuage much human misery, and enable every one to do much good to his fellow-creatures."—Literary Gazette.

Butter's Medical Hall, 64, Lower Nackville Street, and W. F. Wakeman, Dublin; Simpkin and Marshall, London; Oliver and Royd, Zdinburgh; King, Cork; and all Beoksellers in the United Kingdom.

8, New Burlington Street, December 1.

Mr. Bentley (late Colburn and Bentley) will publish the following New Works during the present Month.

THE COLDSTREAM GUARDS.

Dedicated by Permission to His Majesty.

ORIGIN & SERVICES OF THE COLDSTREAM GUARDS.

From the Formation of the Regiment under General Monk, to the Battle of Waterloo.

By COLONEL MACKINNON.

MEMOIRS OF SIR WILLIAM HOSTE, Bart.

R.N. K.C.B. K.M.T.

Including his Correspondence, &c.

By LADY HARRIET HOSTE.

III.

THE AMERICAN STAGE.

Including Anecdotes of English Performers in the United States, from 1752 to the Present Time. By WILLIAM DUNLAP, Esq.

Author of " Memoirs of George Frederick Cooke," &c.

TRAVELS IN UPPER INDIA

And in Parts of the Himalaya Mountains. With Sketches of the Courts of the Native Princes, &c. By MAJOR ARCHER.

Also the following New Works of Fiction.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A CHAPERON.

Edited by LADY DACRE.

THE LIFE OF A SAILOR. By a CAPTAIN in the ROYAL NAVY.

In crown 8vo. price 12s. in cloth boards, uniform with Ritson, Ellis, &c.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS, Ancient and
Modern; including the most Popular in the West of England, and the Airs to which they are sung. Also, Specimens of French Provincial Carots. With an Introduction, and Notes,
By WILLIAM SANDYS, F.A.S.

Lately published, with an Introduction by the same Author, price 4s. 6d. in cloth boards, Specimens of Macaronic Poetry.
Printed for Richard Beckley, 42, Piccadilly; and sold by Simpkin and Marshall, Stationers' Hall Court.

THE ADOPTED INDIAN BOY
Remarks on Mr. Trollope. In 3 vols. post 8vo. Just ready, Golden Legends; containing the Bracelet, the Locket, and the Signet Ring.

The Puritan's Grave. By the Author of the "Usurer's Daughter."

Saunders and Otley, Public Library, Conduit Street.

And this extensive Establishment, the perusal of all New Publications, English and Foreign, may be obtained in Town or Country. Terms on application.

In 9 vols. 12mo. price 10r. 6d. in cloth,
TALES and CONVERSATIONS; or, the New Children's Friend.
By Mrs. M. ARKHAM,
By Mrs. M. ARKHAM,
Author of fit stoories of England and France.
"We conscient fit stoories of England and France."
"These volumes contain excellent instruction, in a very agreeable form."—Spectator.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

In a few days, 8vo. (Second edition),

KETCH of the SIKHS, with an Introductory Chapter regarding the Navigation of the Indus.

By Sir JOHN MALCOLM.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALEN-DAR for 1833, (on the same plan as the Oxford and Cam idge University Calendars). Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London; and Curry and Co. Dublin.

ON the ADMINISTRATION of BRITISH INDIA, illustrated with Official Papers and authentic Documents

By Sir JOHN MALCOLM.

John Murray, Albemaric Street.

In a few days will be published, in Quarto, with 19 Plates,

THE PHILOSOPHICAL TRANS-

THE PHILOSOPHICAL TRANSACTIONS of the ROYAL SOCIETY of LONDON, for the Year 1823, Peri II.
Containing the following Papers:—1. Dr. Davy on the New Yolcano in the Mediterranean—2. Dr. Davy's further Notice of the same—3. Capitain Smyth on the Site and Origin of Graham Island—4. Dr. Davy's Experiments and Observations on the Torpedo—5. Dr. Bitchie's Experimental Researches on Voltaic Electricity—6. Sir Charles Bell on the Organs of the Human Volce—
7. Dr. Hall on Repiration and Irritability in the Animal Kingdom—8. Dr. Hall on Hiyernation—9. Mr. Lubbock's Researches in Physical Astronomy—10. Mr. Newport on the Nervous System and Metamorphoses of the Sphinr Ilgusti—11. Mr. Baily on the Correction of a Pendulum for the Reduction to a Vacuum—12.
Commander Belcher's Magnetical Experiments on the Coast of Africa—13. Mr. Osler on the Anatomy and Habits of Mariner Textscows Moliusca—12 the Anatomy and Habits of Mariner
Barometer of the Royal Society—16. Mr. Hudson's Hourly Observations and Experimental Investigations on the Barometer—17.
Mr. Lubbock on the Tides in the Port of London—18. Mr. Lubbock's Researches in Physical Astronomy.

Printed by Richard Taylor, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street; and sold by all Bossellers.

New Journal devoted to the People.
On Saturday, the 15th of December, in Sixteen 4to. pages, pice 7d. the First Number of

On Saturday, the 15th of December, in Sixieen 4to, pages, price 7d. the First Number of THE REFLECTOR; a Weekly Newspaper of Politics, Literature, and the Drama. The Reflector has been undertaken to supply certain of those new wants which have arisen among the People, with their acturement of new ideas. The deep feelings which they have undergone for the last thir y years on every subject interesting to the properties of the last thirty years on every subject interesting to year on the last thirty years on every subject interesting to the properties of the last thirty years on every subject interesting to the year of the last thirty years on every subject interesting to have suffered—far deeper, where, and nor conscious of itself, than can readily be conceived by those who have suffered—far deeper, where, and nor conscious of itself, than can readily be conceived by those who have suffered—far deeper, where, and nor have suffered—far deeper, when the happiness of all, the Reflector will devote itself. Its cause will be, unceasingly, that of the People—of the Labouring Population. The Reflector's several department will consist of Domestic and Foreign Politics—The Moral Lessons of the Polico Offices—The Political Uniom—Notes of the Week—Historical Politics; History of the House of Commons—Essays on Literature—The Political Uniom—Notes of the Week—Historical Politics; History of the House of Commons—Essays on Literature—The become eminent in literature, it will claim a right to no ordinary and the properties of the pro

On the Pirst Monday in January,
NEW ANTI-JACOBIN.

On the 13th of December will be published, in 1 vol. 8vo. with Plates, with Plates,

SIX WEEKS on the LOIRE, with a Peep into La Vendée; a Route which, in addition to the beautier of Scenery it must always command, deriver a political cluding many of the common that the basardous enterprise and "hair-breadth escapes" of the Duchesse de Berri have taken place.

The Apiarian's Guide; containing Practical
Directions for the Management of Bees, upon the Depriving System. By J. H. Payne, Author of "The Cottager's Guide."
London: Published by W. Simphin and R. Marshall, Statloners' Hall Court.

Dramatic Library, in Monthly Volumes.

On the 1st of January, 1833, will be published, price 4s. 6d.

neatly bound in cloth,

THE DRAMATIC LIBRARY, Volume
the First, with Remarks, Critical and Biographical,
By (EORGE DANIEL and Biographical),

Embellished with a full-length highly characteristic Plate of Mr. Dowton in Sir John Faistaff, with a Vignette Title and Portrait of Shakpeare, beautifully engraved on Sieel by the ceitbrated Artist Conrade Cooke, and Eight Pictorial Scenes.

Also, on the 15th of January, 1833, will be published, neatly bound in cloth.

The Dramatised Works of Sir Walter Scott, Bart. London: Published by Thomas Hurst, 65, St. Paul's Churchyard.

In a few days will be published, in 1 vol. 8vo.

DISSERTATIONS vindicating the Church of England on contain and contains. of England on certain essential Points of Polity and Doctrine.

By the Rev. JOHN SINCLAIR, M.A. P.R.S.E.

Of Pembroke College, Oxford, and Minister of St. Paul's Episcopal Chapel, Edinburgh.

London: Printing for J., G., and F. Kivington, St. Paul's

Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall; and Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh.

Now publishing, under the direction of the Committee of General Literature and Education, appointed by the Society for Fromoting Christian Knowledge, ORIGINAL FAMILY SERMONS, in Monthly Parts, at is. each.

Part I. contains Sermons by the Bishop of London; Dr. Dealtry; the Dean of Chichester; Rev. E. G. Marsh; Rev. T. V. Short.
Part II., Sermons by the Bishop of Bangor; the Dean of Chester; Rev. A. M. Campbell; Rev. S. Rickards; Archdeacon Bather; Rev. C. W. Le Bs.
London: John, W. Parker, Saturday Magazine Office, West Strand.

New Work by the Author of "Cavendish."

In a few days will be published, foolscap 8vo. price 5s. 6d.,

HELAOUS

AUREA

A Literary, Political, and Naval Satire of the Day.

Addressed to Lord Brougham.

Orders received by all Booksellers.

Messrs. Saunders and Otley have just ready the following interesting Works:

In 8 ro. price 18s. bound,

M. R. LODGE'S PEERAGE for 1833.

The new edition, considerably augmented, and corrected to the present date.

"A work which corrects all errors of former works."—Times.

II.
In 2 vols. post 8 vo.
Memoirs of Louis XVIII. Written by Himself.

"We have not for a long time perused any work from which we have gained more matter in the way of amusement and interest."—Betropolitan.

II 1.

In 2 vols. Bro. Plates,

Records of Travels in Turkey, Greece, &c. in the Years 1829, 20, 21; and of a Tour in the Black Sea with the Capitan Pasha. By Adolphus Slade, Esq.

IV.

In 2 vols. 8vo. with 52 Vigneties,
Characteristics of Women. By Mrs. Jameson.
"Two truly delightful volumes; the most charming of all the works of a charming writer."—Blackwood.

In 3 vols. 8vo. with Plates, and a Map of the Author's Route, Fifteen Months' Pilgrimage through Untrode of Tracts of Khusitan and Persia. By J. H. Stocqueler, Eac,
"Mr. Stocqueler has added immensely to our geographical knowledge of Asia."—Court Magazine,
British and Foreign Public Library, Conduit Street.

a At this extensive Establishment, the persual of all New Publications, English and Foreign, may be obtained in Town or Country. Terms on application.

A new Number of
THE QUARTERLY REVIEW will be published in a few days.
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTR OFFICE, 7, Wellington Steet, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 18, South Moulton Street, Order Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange; E. Marlhorosgh, Ave Maria Lane, Ludgate Hill: A. Rick, Kdinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinson and Co. Glasgow; and J. Cumming, Dublin. Agent for America, O. Rich, 19, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 26, Castle Street, Leicester Square-

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 830.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Semi-serious Observations of an Italian Exile, during his residence in England. By Count son; Dublin, Wakeman; Edinb. Waugh dearly they love their rural walks." and Innes.

COUNT PECCHIO, an accomplished Italian, and a writer of well-known talent, who has tions of county societies, is a striking proof of resided a considerable time in England, and the fallacies into which even observant tramarried an English wife, has in this volume favoured us with his observations upon many particulars in our national character. Having made Italy, and afterwards Spain, too hot to hold him, he looks, from his agreeable home at Brighton, with much complacency on our customs, manners, and institutions. England, illumined by the spirit of liberty, very naturally appears to such a man couleur de rose; for liberty, hardly prized enough by those who have enjoyed it from their cradle, brightens every object to the exile driven from his native land in consequence of his fervent love of freedom. If, therefore, Count Pecchio is fully as favourable to us as we deserve, it at least proceeds from a generous feeling, and a noble motive; and we can readily balance the flattering unction, by the censures and abuse so liberally bestowed upon us by many other foreign authors of the Monsieur Pillet school.

In his preface, the count confesses that his work is one of mere sketches, not entering into competition with De Pradt on our politics, or with Dupin on our statistics, or with Cottin on our judicial administration, or with Washington Irving on our national manners. Is it not curious that all these references concerning us should be to foreign writers, as if we had no equal authorities belonging to ourselves? and, in truth, it would be difficult to quote

The volume begins with a fanciful essay on the effects of our being sunless. Out of this deficiency, it seems, arises our fireside habits, our inferiority in the fine arts, our industry, &c. &c.; much of which is moonshine. Owing to the celestial want, our people are very much attached to terrestrial ornaments.

"The nation altogether has a particular love for trees and flowers. The lord has in his parks caks of a thousand years' growth, untouched by the axe—hot-houses full of exotic plants, exquisite fruits, and the rarest flowers; there is not a cottage in England which has not before it a little piece of ground for the cultivation of flowers; and even the poor townimprisoned artisan works at his loom in sight of pots of flowers, placed on the window-sill (with a mind no less generous than my lord's), in order that the passengers also may enjoy the sight of them. The love of flowers is in itself a great sign of civilisation. From time immemorial there have existed in England footpaths for general use across the fields belonging to private individuals. Some years ago the land-owners, every where insatiable, endeavoured to close these footways, and deprive the public of riodical press far more deserving of Count Pecalmost every county a society has been formed for defending the rights and recreations of the during his residence in England. By Count People. This will sufficiently shew how nearly Pecchio. London, 1833. Effingham Wil-

> The generalising of the Richmond footpath case, and, at most, two others into the operavellers are apt to fall. What then can be expected from post-haste tourists? Our next extract relates to the public journals.

"The Sunday papers, and the frequent public meetings which the mechanics attend, and where the most eloquent speakers address the multitude on public affairs, are an aliment and a stimulus to their minds. Mr. Hume, in the House of Commons, on the 13th December 1826, declared that the stamp-duty on newspapers was far too heavy in England. In the United States, the population of which is little more than half that of Great Britain, there are 590 newspapers; while in Great Britain, on account of the weight of the taxes, there are no more than 484. He gave notice, after these details, that he should move for a reduction of the duty, at least on those weekly papers which are chiefly intended for the working classes. Mr. Brougham, who is ambitious of making that popular instruction he has so wonderfully promoted a durable monument to his name, with his accustomed eloquence, seconded the proposal. The influence that the press must exercise in a state where it is free, must (I would repeat it a thousand times) be incalculable. I will venture to say, that its influence must be greater than that of religion itself! It is from these fountains that public opinion springs forth; and this is alone sufficient to correct all the errors of legislation, and restrain all the abuses of power. It is a real panacea. The newspapers are the 'daily bread' of morning and evening to every Englishman."

Acknowledging the prodigious power thus ascribed to the press, it surely casts a fearful responsibility upon these organs of popular direction and stimulus. Would that we could join the author in his peean of unqualified praise; but sorry are we to say, that the evils are often so great, as in many minds almost to outweigh the weight of the good. Among other reforms, society could receive no greater benefit than a reform of the press-of its falsehoods, personalities, misrepresentations, and licentiousness. This can only be brought about by itself, and by those branches where honour and principle, and gentlemanlike feeling, inform the publications with a spirit which should belong to all. But the worthy and respectable shrink from collision with the mean and blackguard-the timid play their game-the profligate abet their infamy - and the country is disgraced and injured by their mal-practices. When these troubled times have subsided into comparative quietude, we trust to see our pe-

ing in them. What was the consequence? In | entitled by the grand fundamental and essential quality of being, how much soever partially abused, a bulwark against wrong and oppression.

Another important consideration is suggested by the quotation we have just made, viz. the comparison between the English and American newspapers. Surely numbers have little to do with a judgment upon the value and utility of the press. Fifty bad or inferior journals are not only not worth one good and intelligent one, but are calculated to do mischief in proportion to their amount of circulation, while the other improves its human sphere. There are not a dozen of newspapers in the United States which display either political or literary talent. The rest are merely advertising vehicles, hot partisans of particular persons or interests, or compilations of the poorest description. Were there ten thousand such, a single sheet in extensive popularity, conducted with ability and honesty of purpose, and true patriotism, were infinitely to be preferred to the indifferent mass. And this greatly affects a question now at issue in England; whether it would be advantageous to throw open the flood-gates of opinion to every adventurer who might wish to obtain notoriety, seek emolument, or push his self-interests by publishing a periodical. The taxes on knowledge is a very ad captandum repeal to call for; but in lightening Knowledge of her burdens (and we doubt, from the experience of what we see all around us, that they are so depressingly heavy), do not we run a sad risk of swamping her altogether by the influx of pseudo-knowledge—of depravity ministering to bad passions of delusion of inferiority poured through every channel by which mankind can be rendered wiser and happier? A press without character or responsibility, requiring neither property to commence, nor reputation to support it, may indeed boast of being free and unrestricted; but lamentable as are the proofs which now exist of its debasement, we should, we truly fear, soon have to look back upon its present day, as one of virtue, elevation, and social blessing.

Connected with this subject, and quite opposed to his views upon it, are the author's emarks on education.

" Of all civilised people, the English are the least removed from nature. I am not, however, a blind admirer of every thing done in this country. There are two things in the present system of education I cannot approve. First, the excess of reading. When Rousseau wrote his Emilius, there was much less reading in England - perhaps too little: now there is too much. There is now such an inundation of poetry, novels, romances, and literary journals, that many minds must be stifled under it. At three years of age intellectual education commences: at the infant schools, the baby has already before his eves the elements of several sciences. Then come fables and little histories; then Latin, Greek, and the healthful and innocent recreation of walk- chio's panegyric, to which at present it is only history, mingled with voyages and travels, romances and magazines without end. mind has no time to digest this incessant food: a new novel drives from the recollection that of the preceding week, as a new wave presses upon and destroys its predecessor. Several times I chanced to ask some youth the plot of a romance he had read a few months before,he had no more than a slight indistinct recollection of it, as one has of a dream. A more certain inconvenience of this ceaseless reading is weakness of sight, which is very common in England. I cannot prove that my judgment on the subject is correct, because English education, in all its parts, especially the intellectual, underwent a thorough alteration about twenty years ago, and the effects of this assiduous and inordinate reading have not yet had time to shew themselves. Twenty years more must elapse before it can be determined with certainty, whether, in respect to solidity of judgment and vigour of body, there has been gain or loss."

Indeed we need not wait twenty days for the solution. The reading of our times makes the same impression on the sense as the kaleidoscope: our incessant succession of change leaves no image implanted on the mind; neither knowledge, nor information, nor ideas, nor facts, are gathered from the process; and after perusing half-a-dozen of vastly cheap publications, the jumble of the brain is but a chaos, only worse than the previous aptitude of va-cancy for perception. Yes, the modern cry for instruction for the people, is assuredly carried into effect in so strange a way, that we may well call it the kaleidoscope system. Much is seen, nothing remembered. The forms of the useful, the entertaining, the liberal, the pious, the comic, the evangelical, and a thousand others, flit before the eye, presto at the bottom of the tube, such shapes of brilliancy, and beauty, and usefulness. Another shake, and they vanish for ever; or examine the material, and lo! bits of broken glass, of tinsel, of straw, threads of gauze, broken shells, &c. &c., represent the clear moral essays, the oratorical flourishes, the education, the arguments, the natural history, &c. &c. of the writers who inundate the afflicted population with their loud boastings and their industrious insigni-The readers are confused, not inficance. formed. The kaleidoscope of learning does not even amuse and please, like the philosophical toy; though the gulled public, as was the case with another clever toy about the same period, the velocipede, mounted the hobby, and pushed along on their own feet, and by their own efforts, persuaded all the while that they were indebted for their motion and advance to the wooden machine they had been tempted to purchase and bestride. Would not, we ask Count Pecchio, a similar degradation of the newspaper press lead to a similar depreciation of its proud constitutional bearing and efficacy; as we here see produced in science and literature by the charlatanry of universal instruction? It is a grave question, and ought to be well sifted before we yield our reason to the sounding brass and tinkling cymbals of crude experiment and popular declamation.

We now turn again, however, to our author, who thus notices another of our characteristics.

" There is no tomb so vast as London, which swallows up the most illustrious names for ever: it has an omnivorous maw. The celebrity of a man in London blazes and vanishes away like a firework: there is a great noise, numberless invitations, endless flattery and exoggeration, for a few days, and then an eternal of private life, how many are the disappoint. Thus man, in all ages, and all times, goes their first appearance made a crash like thunder, when they died excited no more attention than a falling leaf. General Mina, when he landed at Portsmouth, was carried to his hotel in triumph, and deafened with applause, for a month together, at the theatre in London. He was more famous than the Nemean lion. then? He fell very soon into oblivion, and the grave closed over his name. The English people are greedy of novelty; childish in this alone, it makes no great distinction between good and bad-they want only what is new. They pay for the magic lantern, and pay well but they always want fresh figures. To feed this insatiable whale, that always pants with open jaws-

' And after meals is hungrier than before,' toil incessantly journalists, engravers, historians, travellers, philosophers, lawyers, men of letters, poets,-ministers with schemes for new enactments - the king with schemes for new palaces and buildings, and the liberals with schemes for parliamentary reform."

This is very true; and the spring of it all is, that every man is so much engrossed with his own concerns in our busy, stirring, and striving (must we add borne-down?) community, that novelty is the general relaxation. For the author also neatly observes -

" In England, time is a revenue, a treasure, an estimable commodity. The Englishman is not covetous of money, but he is supremely covetous of time. It is wonderful how exactly the English keep to their appointments. They take out their watch, regulate it by that of their friend, and are punctual at the place and hour. English pronunciation itself seems invented to save time: they eat the letters, and whistle the words. Thus Voltaire had some reason to say, 'The English gain two hours a day more than we do, by eating their syllables. The English use few compliments, because they are a loss of time, their salute is a nod, or at the utmost a corrosion of the four monosyllables 'How d'ye do?' The ends of their letters always shew more simplicity than ceremony: they have not 'the honour to repeat the protestations of their distinguished regard and profound consideration' to his 'most illustrious lordship,' whose 'most humble, most devoted, and most obsequious servants' they have the honour to be. Their very language seems to be in a hurry; since it is in a great part composed of monosyllables, and two of them, again, are often run into one: the great quantity of monosyllables looks like an abridged way of writing, a kind of shorthand. The English talk little, I suppose that they may not lose time: it is natural, therefore, that a nation which sets the highest value upon time should make the best chronometers; and that all, even among the poorer classes, should be provided with watches. The mailcoach guards have chronometers worth eighty pounds sterling, because they must take care never to arrive five minutes past the hour aprelations, friends, and servants, are already collected to receive passengers and parcels. When a machine is so complicated as England is, it is essential for every thing to be exact, or the confusion would be ruinous.

Yet every thing does not go exactly by clockwork amongst us; though the count proceeds to illustrate his statement by some curious examples which do not strike the natives. Punctuality is indeed the soul of a commercial nation; and if we take the matter even into the details silence. Paoli and Dumourier, after having at | ments, vexations, losses, and misfortunes which we may every day trace to slight failures in this respect! Every thing in its proper place, and every thing to its proper use, is a maxim to render every house comfortable: every thing at its proper time will carry the benefit throughout all the transactions of life. But we are prosing; and only wish to be in parliament that we might legislate on this branch of economy, which we could do to the infinite advantage of the country, in sundry particular instances, which have not yet occurred to unreformed collective wisdom, although, as our author relates, "education has become so common in England, that, by way of economy, ladies are now employed to make the calculations for the Nautical Almanac.'

Count Pecchio entertains an unfavourable opinion of the ultra-sin ultra-salvation doctrines of a well-meaning, but wofully mistaken sect amongst us, and which he erroneously ascribes to the whole class of Methodists. A carpenter was hanged for knocking his wife's brains out with the most barbarous cruelty:

"The court," he says, "was crammed full of people: if I must speak the truth, it displeased me to see a great number of well-educated young ladies among the spectators. should have liked, at least, to whisper in their ears, that they should remember never more to blame the Spanish girls for taking pleasure in a bull-fight. The culprit appeared at the bar with a tranquil mien. This brutal Othello seemed determined to bear his sentence of death with intrepidity. All eyes were fixed upon him, the unfortunate hero of the day. All are anxious in such moments to watch the efforts of the struggle that a single man is then obliged to sustain against the whole body of society, which armed against him, yet leaves him to the privilege of defending himself. None of the spectators, however, I believe, experienced emotion greater than mine. I remembered at that moment, that some years before I was to have been placed in a similar conflict, from which only the favour of fortune enabled me to escape; and I pictured to myself the bar, before which, without witnesses, without counsel, without the presence of the public, my friends were condemned to death.

"Two days after, the condemned criminal was hanged—a barbarous mode of putting a man to death, which the English palliate by the use of a constant poetical expression, 'He was launched into eternity.' The prisoner, an hour before going to the gallows, told the mayor that he died happy and contented, being persuaded that in another hour he should be in Paradise; and he was in fact quite resigned. He had been inspired with this hope by the minister of the Methodist sect, to which he belonged. This sect, of which I shall speak clsewhere, holds the dangerous doctrine, ' greater the sinner the greater the saint;' and according to a Methodist, faith in the Lord's grace is sufficient to procure his pardon for all the sins he ever committed, without the necespointed. At the place of their destination, sity of repentance. This doctrine is a-kin to that which Ariosto puts into the mouth of Ruggiero, when in the whale's throat he comforts Adolpho, who is grieving at his heinous and infamous sins, with this stanza:

Cosa umana, è il peccar e pur si legge,' &c.

To all men sin is common, and we read
That seven full times a-day the just man falls;
Mercy divine hath ever, too, decreed
To pardon him who on that mercy calls;
Nay, o'er a sinner who of grace hath need,
Who strays, and then returns, when conacience galls,
More joys there are o'er him in realms of heaven,
Than maety-nine who need not be forgiven?

about seeking an antidote for the fear of death. The Epicurean admitted no responsibility for ictions beyond the tomb; the stoic held that he goal of life is death, and that we live but to The Pythagorean consoled himearn to die. elf with the idea of transmigration; and the lethodists, not content with the philosophical ystems, have found out a still more eligible vay of getting into Paradise."
We have at this moment on our table a sublication entitled "Narrative of the Converion (by the instrumentality of two ladies) of ames Cook, the Murderer of Mr. Paas, in etters addressed to a Clergyman of the Estalished Church. By Mrs. Lachlan;" which is bsolutely disgusting in its details, and horible in the conclusions to which it would lead, y the utter perversion of that doctrine which, nstead of affording a hope to the most penient of wretched sinners, is thus made a holy ponge, and, by consequence, an encouragement or the most dreadful of crimes. These two illmployed ladies, seem to hug themselves upon he atrocious guilt of the criminal, as a washervoman would upon the utter filth of the garnent consigned to her tub; "nothing could e more abominable, but see how clean I have nade it!" The more the dirt, the more the nerit. Alas! For a variety, we take a ketch of our sailors from the Italian pencil.

" Sailors, who are hearts of oak when they re at sea, are hearts of butter when at a avern, and generous as Cæsar himself. The heeks of the English sailor are not those sleek and florid cheeks which the climate naturally produces, nor are they of a tall and bulky nake, like farmers of the island. Their faces ire bronzed, or, to express it better with one if those enviable English epithets, composed of wo words braced together, they are weathereaten. They are in general of the middle reight, but large across the shoulders; their imbs clean made and sinewy, and all their novements free and unconstrained. When hey are walking, you observe in them a conidence in their own strength, and the audaity of a health proof against every thing. They raverse the streets with an indifference which 5 natural to them, as if cities were not made or them, or as if they were people who had een things more wonderful than a city. Their arge trowsers, their open jacket and shirt colar, their round hat, or plaid bonnet, all their ress, in fine, contributes to make them appear nore active, more free and easy. It is well nown that they never wear boots, because hey use hands and feet indifferently: they are our-handed or four-footed just as they will. Their eyes are not sparkling; but they are ntrepid, and express very well the heart of tak in their breasts. Their countenance geneally denotes intelligence; frankness and gererosity are stamped on it: one would say hat none of these faces had ever told a lie."

An interesting chapter gives an account of he Retreat (an establishment for the reception if insane patients belonging to the Society of riends) near York; and just praise is be-towed on the published volume, and on the ractice of Mr. Tuke as regards insanity. We mave ourselves visited that gentleman's estalishment, and received high gratification from he mode in which we saw the sorrowful iffliction treated. Mr. Tuke seemed to us to arry the soothing, and therefore the restoraive system, to perfection. How melancholy, and yet how interesting, it is to witness the various freaks of aberration in minds otherwise of a higher order!

" I remember," says our author, " seeing, many years ago, in the hospital of Cremona, the apartment of a painter who was subject to a periodical madness. He used to draw strange conceptions on the wall with coal-Among others, he had drawn a colossal Napoleon mounted on the Trojan horse. If this association of ideas had not risen in the head of a madman, it would have been said that it was worthy of Pulci or the Ricciardetto.

But we must now bring this review to an end with a few notes. The volume is not so entertaining for the English reader as we expected it would be, -it is rather addressed to foreigners, and treats of common topics in a very sensible manner. There is much about Spanish idleness - there is a kind, and we would not say flattering, view of the English female character - and there is a profession of Unitarianism-which occupy rather too much room; but the book is one to be generally read and approved.

A View of the Early Parisian Greek Press : including the Lives of the Stephani or Estiennes, Notices of other contemporary Greek Printers of Paris, and various Particulars of the Literary and Ecclesiastical History of their Times. 2 vols. 8vo. By the Rev. W. P. Greswell, author of the "Life of Politian," &c. Oxford, 1833. Talboys.

As we predicated, in the mention of this work among our notices to correspondents last week, we, on mature examination, find it more valuable than review-able. It displays great learning and research; its details are intimately connected with the revival of literature after the dark ages; and for a century and a half it exhibits, in connexion with the pursuits of learning and the efforts of the press, a singular picture of the feelings of mankind, and the religious struggles and persecutions which marked a most important era. It also shews that, with all their faults, kings and churchmen were sometimes the friends of scholars and artists; though at other times, the former forsook, and the latter burnt them for the glory of heaven! But the balance upon the whole appears to be much in favour of princes, and a little in favour of prelates,-a wonder, when we remember the tendency of the age to spoil the former and corrupt the latter.

Printing, that moral and political steam engine of a ten-million-of-men power, has changed all this in our day; but when we read earlier history, we must, like true philosophers, take into our consideration the very different ideas which then prevailed among mankind, when kings were gods, and generals heroes, and bishops saints, and lawyers oracles, and nobles irresponsible, and scholars exempt from hanging, - the mass nothing. So far from wondering that the élite were puffed up with pride. and unrestrained in the indulgence of their passions, in our opinion it is greatly to the honour of human nature, that they were so often highminded and generous, charitable, the patrons of science and learning; protecting, hospitable, and just; that their vices were the vices of the age, their virtues their own. Francis the First of France was an eminent example of our position; and of him and his court these volumes contain a picture seen in so novel a light as to be almost as good as new.

The book-knowledge is much derived from Maittaire, Chevillier, Le Clerc, Gaillard, and fifty other established authors; and the introduction of Greek printing to Paris, and the labours of the family of the Stephani, the principal theme, which binds all the rest to.

Mr. Editor.— Printer's Devil, backed by the pressmen, &c. &c. &c.

gether, the advancement of the art, the bio gether, the zero.

graphies of its chief professors, and the circumstances involved in this progress of typography.

In those days printers were great men, and, though it may be hardly credible now, admirable scholars.

"Robert Estienne has been frequently mentioned by writers in the controversy before alluded to, [viz. respecting the authenticity of the verse in 1 John, v. 7.] merely under the denomination of a printer and bookseller of Paris. Readers and hearers are generally influenced by names and terms as they are commonly understood; and these are designations which, in present estima-tion, certainly carry with them little au-thority. But Robert is entitled to be brought forward under the sanction of a higher and more dignified character; as a very extraordinary and distinguished proficient in Greek and Roman literature -as one of the most conspicuous restorers and promoters of learning as himself both an excellent judge and a zealous patron of literary merit_and, on the whole, as one of the most influential and patriotic characters of his age."

This is a severe cut. Who, then, are the patrons of literature? Princes are too much pared down to be able to afford it. Noblemen can no longer, beyond a dinner, or a smile (which is cheaper), to the literati they desire to befriend; and conjunctions resembling those so late as even the days of Queen Anne, would be more extraordinary than that of the Siamese twins. Public endowments are in the utmost disrepute; and the most exalted genius and the deepest erudition of modern times are, like small beer or grocery, handed over to the dis-criminating taste and refined encouragement of something called "the public." And the public, a splendid beast, with qualities of the elephant kind, does its duty very gravely. It can make a mighty fuss in picking up a pin; and can carry, oh! such a load, without appearing to feel the least weight. It can trample a poor wretch under its feet, without knowing why or wherefore it is kneading him to death. It can kneel to the most insignificant creature who flatters and commands it. It can be led with a ring through its nose by the force of a child. It can roar tremendously without doing much mischief; and it can do a great deal of mischief when it means no harm and is hardly conscious of what it is about. On its neck (as naturalised with us) is seated a guide, armed with a newspaper instead of an iron spike; and by digging into its marrow, he makes it do pretty well what he likes.

We do not mean to institute a comparison between the past and the present, as to the encouragement of great learning and abilities. perhaps not of a popular kind; but sorry shall we be to see the day when the only criterion, stimulus, and reward of such qualities shall be found even in that high and, on the whole, fair tribunal which is so competent to deal with inferior merits and labours. It is the declination to this, in fact, which is so rapidly reducing our literature to the stamp of manufacture and trade, unrelieved and unenlightened by one liberal sentiment beyond the sphere of cotton-weaving or cheesemongery. So it is; and there is no one to blame; it is the commercial change of the times - the uncertainty, and the pressure upon all ranks.

But to the history of Greek printing. was begun in the north of Italy, the earliest specimen being of the year 1465. The first | entirely Greek book was a grammar, by Las-caris; and in 1480 it was reprinted at Milan, which took up the revived art with great energy, and was soon closely followed by Venice, and afterwards by Florence; but the fall of the Medici closed that channel. Some meagre inchoate attempts preceded the introduction of Greek typography to Paris about 1507; and as the discussion of mere dates cannot interest our readers, we shall content ourselves with noting, that it flourished thereafter (mostly in the family of the Stephani) for nearly a hundred years; and that, by the by, it was not practised in England till 1643, in the reign of Henry VIII. A list of the names of its great ornaments and improvers in Paris, and an account of the difficulties and perils against which they had to contend, will be found in Mr. Greswell's volumes; some of them are very curious; and we select a portion of one of the memoirs, though rather for its extraordinary features than for its value in illustrating the subject.

Guillaume Postel, a native of Normandy, of poor parentage, was distinguished for his utter devotedness to letters, and for his chequered

"Francis I. sent le Sieur de la Forest on a special mission to Constantinople. Postel having previously attracted the notice of that nobleman, attended him on this embassy. In this expedition he perfected himself in the Greek language, and learned the Arabic. He is said to have collected a number of manuscripts written in that language and in Syriac: and some maintain that King Francis himself supplied Postel with a fund of four thousand crowns for this purpose, in order to increase the literary treasures of his Bibliothèque de Fontainbleau. Through various accidents, it is also said that some of the precious manuscripts, collected by Postel, were left in pledge to the Duke of Bavaria; others with the Doge of Venice. He first brought into Europe the Syriac version of the New Testament. It was printed at the expense of the emperor Ferdinand I., who caused characters to be cast for this special purpose. Postel, on his return to France, was most favourably received by Francis I. and his sister, the Queen of Navarre Soon afterwards he published together the al-phabets of twelve different languages, printed Parisiis, anno 1538. The same year came forth his treatise De Originibus Hebraicis, and the affinities of various languages; and about the same time his Arabic Grammar, Par. sine anno. All these three works are composed in the Latin language. By great offers of preferment he was invited to embrace an ecclesiastical life. But as he had added mathematical science to his other extraordinary attainments, he preferred the chair of Professor Royal en Mathématiques et en Langues, which was given him, with a salary of two hundred ducats. He received also a pension from the Queen of Navarre; but afterwards incurred her displeasure by interfering in favour of the chancellor Poyet, who was offensive to this princess, and had been entirely disgraced. A long and painful journey, which he undertook in behalf of his degraded friend, to Montmarson, in the Pyrenees, where the King and Queen of Navarre had their residence, not only proved of no avail for Du Povet, but, as we are told, very calamitous to Postel, who lost his horses and baggage, and with difficulty preserved his personal liberty.

"After various other adventures, Postel is found at Rome; where, by a personal acquaintance with the founder of the order of Jesuits, for the doings of his predecessors we must now sooner had the blood been tasted than the long.

an admission into that society. But the strange visionary notions which he now began to intermix with his religious opinions and discourses. soon rendered him offensive to the whole order, and he was expelled the society. Some say he found his way into the dungeon of the Inquisition, and was delivered from this perilous situation only by breaking his prison, in con-cert with others who suffered under the like confinement. I shall not enlarge upon Postel's strange reveries, which some impute to his eager perusal of Rabbinical books, and his attachment to judicial astrology—his pretended revelations, and his connexion with a woman of Venice, satirically denominated by Pasquier his 'Grand-mère Jeanne,' whom he pretended to introduce to the public under an extraordinary character, 'la rédemptrice des femmes, comme Jésus-Christ avoit été le rédempteur des hommes,' in a work which it is said was printed at Paris anno 1553, in 12mo, under this title, Des très merveilleuses victoires des Femmes; _his personating the character of St. John the Evangelist, and inducing a goldsmith to represent that of John the Baptist in a costume and with a style of preaching suitable to the character. For these and other particulars, foreign to our present purpose, the reader may consult the Mémoire of M. de Sallengre, which I shall hereafter more particularly specify. It is said that the goldsmith was actually burnt alive, in pursuance of an arrêt of the parliament of Toulouse, and that Postel ran great risk of sharing the same fate. As for him, after various migrations, in which he appeared at Venice, Geneva, Basil, Dijon, and at the court of the Emperor Ferdinand I., and after a public retractation of his errors, he was recalled to Paris by the king, and replaced in his chair of Professor Royal. But falling again into the public propagation of his visions and extravagant doctrines, he was at length shut up for life in the monastery of S. Martin des Champs. There he continued eighteen years; and died anno 1581."

He was above a hundred years old; and we may well apply to his extraordinary career and to himself, the observation of Seneca, nullum magnum ingenium sine mixtura dementiæ. His life is a curious picture of the employment of scholars in those days; and we shall not crowd our page with farther instances.

"Of the more distinguished literati who figured in the court of Francis, some of those who were first advanced to chairs of professorships in the royal college, have already incidentally been brought before the reader's notice. Others are now too obscure to deserve our special attention. Two of them, however, not hitherto distinctly noticed, may here claim our brief consideration. These are Petrus Danesius and Orontius Finæus. Danesius or Danès. was a native of Paris, and of noble extraction. At a period when able instructors were so rare. persons of high rank and station did not disdain to take upon them this office in behalf of the youth of honourable birth and expectation. Joannes Lascaris and Gulielmus Budæus were the early preceptors of Danesius, whose proficiency was such, that he was thought by Francis worthy to fill the Greek professor's chair. He acquitted himself with great success in this employment, and maintaining his credit in succeeding reigns, became preceptor to the dauphin, afterwards Francis II., by whom he was appointed to the episcopal see of Lavaur, and employed on important occasions."

Ignatius Loyola, he is led to solicit and obtain refer to these volumes, in which they are carefully recorded, together with much miscellaneous matter. Vale !

> The Life of a Sailor. By a Captain in the Navy. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Beutley. THREE most various and amusing volumes, with that great merit, an air at least of reality. They will be best characterised as maritime travels, told as our travellers used to tell their adventures, simply and earnestly. Lord Byron, Sir Peter Parker, Bolivar, Paez, are names to attract any reader; and the scenes are north, south, east, and west. The following narrative of a wreck off Havannah we shall only preface by observing, that the crew have been forced to take to the boat, which has upset. " Even in this moment of peril, the discipline of the navy assumed its command. At the order from the lieutenant for the men on the keel to relinquish their position, they instantly obeyed, the boat was turned over, and once more the expedient was tried - but quite in vain; for no sooner had the two men begun to bale with a couple of hats, and the safety of the crew to appear within the bounds of probability, than one man declared he saw the fin of a shark. No language can convey the panic which seized the struggling seamen: a shark is at all times an object of horror to a sailor; and those who have seen the destructive jaws of these voracious fish, and their immense and almost incredible power-their love of blood, and their bold daring to obtain it-alone can form an idea of the sensations produced to a swimmer by the cry of 'a shark! a shark!' Every man now struggled to obtain a moment's safety. Well they knew that one drop of blood would have been scented by the everlasting pilot-fish, the jackalls of the shark; and that their destruction was inevitable, if one only of these monsters should discover the rich repast, or be led to its food by the little rapid hunter of its prey. All discipline was now unavailing, the boat again turned keel up: one man only gained his security to be pushed from it by others; and thus their strength began to fail from long-continued exertion. As, however, the enemy so much dreaded did not make its appearance, Smith once more urged them to endeavour to save themselves by the only means left, that of the boat; but as he knew that he would only increase their alarm by endeavouring to persuade them that sharks did not abound in those parts, he used the wisest plan of desiring those who held on by the gunwale, to keep splashing in the water with their legs, in order to frighten the monsters at which they were so alarmed. Once more had hope begun to dawn; the boat was clear to her thwarts, and four men were in her hard at work: a little forbearance and a little obedience, and they were safe. At this moment, when those in the water urged their messmates in the boat to continue baling with unremitted exertion, a noise was heard close to them, and about fifteen sharks came right in amongst them. The panic was ten times more dreadful than before: the boat again was upset by the simultaneous endeavour to escape the danger; and the twenty-two sailors were again devoted to destruction. At first the sharks did not seem inclined to seize their prey, but swam in amongst the men, playing in the water, sometimes leaping about and rubbing against their victims. This was of short duration_a loud shriek from one of the men announced his sudden pain; a shark had seized him by the leg.

other shriek proclaimed the loss of limbs; some were torn from the boat, to which they vainly endeavoured to cling-some, it was supposed, sunk from the fear alone-all were in dreadful peril. Mr. Smith even now, when of all horrible deaths the most horrible seemed to await him, gave his orders with clearness and coolness; and to the everlasting honour of the poor departed crew be it known, they were obeyed: again the boat was righted, and again two men were in her. Incredible as it may appear, still, however, it is true, that the voice of the officer was heard amidst the danger; and the survivors actually, as before, clung to the gunwale, and kept the boat upright. Mr. Smith himself held by the stern, and cheered and applauded his men. The sharks had tasted the blood, and were not to be driven from their feast; in one short moment, when Mr. Smith ceased splashing, as he looked into the boat to watch the progress, a shark seized both his legs, and bit them off just above the knees. Human nature was not strong enough to bear the immense pain without a groan; but Smith endeavoured to conceal the misfortune; nature, true to herself, resisted the endeavour, and the groan was deep and audible. The crew had long respected their gallant commander; they knew his worth and his courage: on hearing him express his pain, and seeing him relinquish his hold to sink, two of the men grasped their dying officer, and placed him in the stern sheets. Even now, in almost insupportable agony, that gallant fellow forgot his own sufferings, and thought only on rescuing the remaining few from the untimely grave which awaited them: he told them again of their only hope, deplored their perilous state, and concluded with these words: 'If any of you survive this fatal night, and return to Jamaica, tell the admiral (Sir Laurence Hal-sted) that I was in search of the pirate when this lamentable occurrence took place; tell him I hope I have always done my duty, and that Here the endeavour of some of the men to get into the boat gave her a heel on one side; the men who were supporting poor Smith relinquished him for a moment, and he rolled overboard and was drowned. His last bubbling cry was soon lost amidst the shrieks of his former companions—he sunk to rise no more."

"At eight o'clock in the evening the Magpie was upset; it was calculated by the two survivors, that their companions had all died by nine. The sharks seemed satisfied for the moment, and they, with gallant hearts, resolved to profit by the precious time in order to save themselves; they righted the boat, and one getting over the bows, and the other over the stern, they found themselves, although nearly exhausted, yet alive, and in comparative security; they began the work of baling, and soon lightened the boat sufficiently not to be easily upset, when both sat down to rest. The return of the sharks was the signal for their return to labour. The voracious monsters endeavoured to upset the boat; they swam by its side in seeming anxiety for their prey; but, after waiting some time, they separated—the two rescued seamen found themselves free from their insatiable enemies, and, by the blessing of God, saved. Tired as they were, they con-tinued their labour until the boat was nearly dry, when both lay down to rest, the one forward and the other aft: so completely had fear operated on their minds, that they did not dare even to move, dreading that an incautious step might again have capsised the boat. They soon, in spite of the horrors they had witnessed, fell his fate seemed suddenly inspired with fresh nion had no means of assisting him. In the dreaded attack took place; another and an-other shriek proclaimed the loss of limbs; some they awoke to horrible reflections, and apparently worse dangers. The sun rose clear and unclouded, the cool calm of the night was followed by the sultry calm of the morning; and heat and hunger, thirst, and fatigue, seemed to settle on the unfortunate men, rescued by Providence and their own exertions from the jaws of a horrible death. They awoke and looked at each other-the very gaze of despair was appalling: far as the eye could reach, no object could be discerned: the bright haze of the morning added to the strong refraction of light; one smooth interminable plain, one endless ocean, one cloudless sky, and one burning sun, were all they had to gaze upon. The boat lav like the ark, in a world alone! They had no oar, no mast, no sail-nothing but the bare planks and themselves, without provisions or water, food or raiment. They lay upon the calm ocean, hopeless, friendless, miserable. It was a time of intense anxiety; their eyes rested upon each other in silent pity, not unmixed with fear. Each knew the dreadful alternative to which nature would urge them. The cannibal was already in their looks, and fearful would have been the first attack on either side, for they were both brave and stout men, and equals in strength and courage. "It was now about half-past six in the morning; the sun was beginning to prove its burning power, the sea was as smooth as a looking-glass; and, saving now and then, the slight cat's-paw of air, which ruffled the face of the water for a few yards, all was calm and hushed. In vain they strained their eyes - in vain they turned from side to side to escape the burning rays of the sun; they could not sleep, for now anxiety and fear kept both vigilant and on their guard: they dared not to court sleep, for that might have been the last of mortal repose. Once they nearly quarrelled, but fortunately the better feelings of humanity overcame the bitterness of despair. The fore. most man had long complained of thirst, and had frequently dipped his hand into the water, and sucked the fluid: this was hastily done, for all the horrors of the night were still before them, and not unfrequently the sharp fin of a shark was seen not very far from the boat. In the midst of the excruciating torments of thirst. heightened by the salt water, and the irritable temper of the bowman, as he stamped his impatient foot against the bottom boards, and tore his hair with unfeeling indifference, he suddenly stopped the expression of his rage, and called out—' By God, there is a sail!'"

Whilst they stood watching in silence the approach of the brig, which slowly made her way through the water, - and at the very instant that they were assuring each other that they were seen, and that the vessel was purposely steered on the course she was keeping to reach them,-the whole fabric of hope was destroyed in a second; the brig kept away about three points, and began to make more sail. Then was it an awful moment: their countenances saddened as they looked at each other; for in vain they hailed-in vain they threw their jackets in the air-it was evident they had never been seen, and that the brig was steering her proper course.

"The time was slipping away, and if once they got abaft the beam of the brig, every second would lessen the chance of being seen; besides, the sea-breeze might come down, and then she would be far away, and beyond all hope in a quarter of an hour. Now was it, hope and courage; he looked attentively at the brig, then at his companion, and said- By Heaven, I'll do it, or we are lost!' 'Do what?' said his shipmate. 'Though,' said the first man, 'it is no trifle to do, after what we have seen and known; yet I will try, for if she passes us, what can we do? I tell you, Jack, I'll swim to her; if I get safe to her, you are saved; if not, why I shall die without adding, perhaps. murder to my crimes.' What! perhaps, murder to my crimes.' jump overboard, and leave me all alone!' replied his companion : 'look, look at that shark. which has followed us all night-why it is only waiting for you to get into the water to swallow you, as it did perhaps half of our messmates: no, no-wait, do wait; perhaps another vessel may come; besides, I cannot swim half the distance, and I should be afraid to remain behind : think, Tom—only think of the sharks, and of last night.' • • He jumped overboard last night.' with as much calmness as if he was bathing in security. No sooner had he begun to strike out in the direction he intended, than his companion turned towards the sharks. The fins had disappeared, and it was evident they had heard the splash, and would soon follow their prey. It is hard to say who suffered the most anxiety. The one left in the boat cheered his companion, looked at the brig, and kept waving his jacket-then turned to watch the sharks: his horror may be imagined, when he saw three of these terrific monsters swim past the boat, exactly in the direction of his companion: he splashed his jacket in the water to scare them away, but they seemed quite aware of the impotency of the attack, and lazily pursued their course. The man swam well and strongly. There was no doubt he would pass within hail of the brig, provided the sharks did not interfere: and he, knowing that they would not be long in following him, kept kicking the water, and splashing as he swam. There is no fish more cowardly, and yet more desperately savage, than a shark. I have seen one harpooned twice, with a hook in its jaws, and come again to a fresh bait: yet will they suffer themselves to be scared by the smallest noise, and hardly ever take their prey without it is quite still. Generally speaking, any place surrounded by rocks where the surf breaks, although there may be a passage for a ship, will be secure from sharks. It was not until a great distance had been accomplished, that the swimmer became apprised of his danger, and saw by his side one of the terrific creatures: still, however, he bravely swam and kicked; his mind was made up for the worst, and he had little hope of success. In the meantime the breeze had gradually freshened, and the brig passed with greater velocity through the water; every stitch of canvass was spread. To the poor swimmer the sails seemed bursting with the breeze; and as he used his utmost endeavour to propel himself, so as to cut off the vessel, the spray appeared to dash from the bow, and the brig to fly through the sea. He was now close enough to hope his voice might be heard; but he hailed and hailed in vain-not a soul was to be seen on deck: the man who steered was too intent upon his avocation to listen to the call of mercy. The brig passed, and the swimmer was every second getting farther in the distance: every hope was gone, not a ray of that bright divinity remained: the fatigue had nearly exhausted him, and the sharks only waited for the first quiet moment to swallow their victim. It was in vain he thought of returning towards the boat, for he that the man who had been so loudly lamenting never could have reached her, and his compaact of offering up his last prayer ere he made up his mind to float and be eaten, he saw a man look over the quarter of the brig: he raised both his hands; he jumped himself up in the water, and, by the singularity of his motions, fortunately attracted notice. A telescope soon made clear the object: the brig was hove-to, a boat sent, and the man saved. The attention of the crew was then awakened to the Magpie's boat: she was soon alongside; and thus, through the bold exertions of as gallant a fellow as ever breathed, both were rescued from their perilous situation."

Anecdote of an American Robber .was systematic in his cruelties. A poor fellow, who was accosted by the robber near St. Martin, in the course of conversation mentioned his very sincere hope that he might not fall into the hands of Gomez. 'Why not?' asked his companion, who was the robber in disguise. 'Because,' continued the traveller, 'he is not only partial to robbing his victim, but he delights in the shedding of blood, and in the exercise of cruelty.' 'And who told you that?' said Gomez. 'Common report,' said the traveller; 'we know for a certainty that he murders every man he captures, and washes his hands in the blood.' 'Indeed!' replied the robber; 'now you shall yourself be a witness to the contrary; for here, said he pointing to a path in the wood, 'is the way to the abode of Gomez; and I will take the liberty to introduce you to him.' In vain the traveller expressed his detestation of all new acquaintances. or urged the importance of his business; he was forcibly conducted to the ground, and then had the inexpressible horror of finding the robber in his companion. 'Here,' said Gomez to some of his gang, 'bring that large chest here.'
It was brought. 'Now get in here,' he continued, addressing himself to his new acquaintance; which being complied with, the lid was fastened down, and the captive heard the following remark:—' Now, senhor, you shall know how false is common report. You shall die; but your blood shall not be spilt, neither shall I gloat over the murder, or wash my hands in the stream of life; -now starve, suffocate, and die!' The poor wretch in vain solicited mercy, and perished while the brutal murderers were laughing at his woes, and gambling on the chest."

Many sensible observations are scattered throughout the work, which, we are told, embodies the real adventures of a post-captain in the navy, and does its author much credit. He has seen "a deal of service," and describes what he has seen with infinite animation.

Hood's Comic Annual. Tilt.

MR. HOOD is late in the field this year, and so late in the week that we can only give a taste of his quality—a cut, and a poem. They are the best we can find; and therefore we will leave the volume to the public judgment.

I an extremely charitable man—no collar, and long hair, though a little carroty:

Demure, half-inclined to the unknown tongues, but I never gained any thing by charity.

I got a little boy into the Foundling—but his unfortunate mother was traced and baited,

And the overseers found her out—and she found me out—and the child was affiliated.

Oh, charity will come home to roost,

Like curses and chickens is charity.

I once, near Whitchall's very old wall, when ballads danced over the whole of it,

Put a bad five-shilling plece into a beggar's hat; but the old hat had got a hole in it,

And a little boy caught it in his little hat, and an officer's eye seemed to care for it,

As my bad crown-piece went through his bad crown-piece, and they took me up to Queen's Square for it.

Oh, charity, &c.

I let my very old (condemned) old house to a man, at a rent that was shockingly low, So I found a roof for his ten motherless babes—all defunct and fatherless now;

and tatheriess now;

For the plaguy one-sided party wall fell in, so did the roof, on son and daughter,

And twelve jurymen sat on eleven bodies, and brought in a very personal verdict of 'Manslaughter.'

a very personal verdict of "Manslaughter."

I picked up a young well-dressed gentleman, who had fallen in a fit in St. Martin's Court,
And charitably offered to see him home—for charity always seemed to be my forte;
And I've had presents for seeing fallen gentlemen home; but this was a very unlucky job—
Do you know, he got my watch, my purse, and my hand-kerchief—for it was one of the swell mob.

Retrinet—for it was one of the swell moos.

Being four miles from town, I stopt a horse that had run away with a man, when it seemed that they must be dashed to pieces,
Though several kind people were following him with all their might—but such following a horse, his speed held the horse while he went to recruit his strength, and

I mean to ride home, of course;
But the crowd came and took me up—for it turned out the man had run away with the horse.

watched last month all the drovers and drivers about

I watched last month all the drovers and drivers about the suburtls—for it's a positive fact, That I think the utmost penalty ought always to be en-forced against every body under Mr. Martin's act; But I couldn't catch one hit over the horns, or over the shins, or on the ears, or over the head; And I caught a rheumatism from early wet hours, and got five weeks of ten swelled fingers in bed.

Well, I've utterly done with charity, though I used so to preach about its finest fount;

Charity may do for some that are more lucky, but I can't turn it to any account—

turn it to any account—
It goes so the very reverse way—even if one chirrups it up with a dust of piety;
That henceforth let it be understood, I take my name entirely out of the list of the subscribers to the Humane Society.
For charity, &c."

Blind to his own interests

PICTURE OF EGYPT.

HITHERTO the political situation of Egypt appears not to have been perfectly understood either by the journalists of Europe or by Mohammed Alee himself. Long ago this vassal of the Porte entertained the project of breaking the bonds of allegiance that united him to his sovereign, and of declaring by open force the independence of his vast domains. It is with this view alone he has raised an army and organised a navy. He was strengthened in this determination by some persons who had access to him; and two consuls* were au-

The author alludes to Mons. Drovetti, French consul, and probably to Mr. Salt. I rather think they were not authorised. A statement was sent at the time to the British government by Mr. S. of the views and advances of the pashs, in which M. D.'s intrigues were partly explained.

thorised, without, however, advancing anything in a positive manner, to give him a hint of the possibility of obtaining the support of their governments. He then employed himself with redoubled ardour and confidence in the preparations required by this great undertaking; and he was about to put it into execution, when he received the order* to send a division into the Morea, under the command of Ibrahim Pasha. He endeavoured then to obtain a decisive answer from the consuls, who had flattered him with the hope of a powerful alliance; but they had no orders to give a positive de-claration; and Mohammed Alee, seeing that he could not reckon upon his single means, deferred the execution of his favourite project, and obeyed the orders of the Porte.

Ever since that period, all his exertions and all his actions have been directed towards the accomplishment of this single wish. He flattered himself that the geographical position of Egypt, at a distance from the seat of empire. defended on the sea-side by his ships and the guns of his forts, on the land side by extensive deserts, would shelter him from the attacks of the Porte. Extending his plans as soon as they became matured, he sent several emissaries at different times into Syria to engage the inhabitants, by fair promises, to place themselves under his banners: he then concentrated by degrees all his troops in the environs of Cairo and Alexandria, withdrew a part of those stationed in the Stedjaz and Upper Egypt, and only waited for their union and the organisation of his fleet to act on the offensive.

The intentions of Mohammed Alee were soon known to the Grand Signor, who, towards the end of 1828, despatched an Albanian pasha, named Ibrahim, to Egypt, with orders to take the command of all the Turkish ships escaped from the disaster of Navarino, as well as a certain number of Egyptian vessels, and w bring them to Constantinople. This pasha was also to endeavour to replace the ports of Alexandria and Damietta, as they had formerly been, under the immediate dependence of the Porte.

An extraordinary divan, which, by the by, the European journals eagerly transformed into a national assembly, composed of all the members of the viceroy's family, the ministers, and principal functionaries, was convoked at Alexandria, to deliberate on the sultan's demands. Mohammed Alee was in hopes of discovering in this assembly the secret opinions of the leading people of Egypt, and prepared to declare his independence without further delay, if he found them devoted to his service, and ready to assist him in his designs. But the opinion of the majority of the divan was quite opposed to his own, and it was decided that mild means were preferable. He was, therefore, obliged to come to terms. He made concessions and promises, and ultimately delivered to the Albanian pasha the Turkish

* This is not sufficiently explicit. It is a positive fact that the pasha had applied to the aultan to have the war of Greece intrusted to him, with the view of taking the Morea to himself; and his incautious expression, "the Morea is mine, not a single Osmanlee shall enter it." shews it was not undertaken to assist, but to thwart the object of the Porte; and that he only considered it a stepping-stone to more ambitious views. It cannot be denied that he has long entertained the idea of becoming rand signor instead of the present sultan; and reports are now purposely circulated in Cairo, that the Bosnam and several chiefs of Asia Minor have acknowledged him emperor of the Turkish dominions; but it does not appear that he had the intention of declaring his independence at the time here alluded to by the author; his object was to obtain possession of some other part of the sultani territory, which might keep the seat of war at a distanct from Egypt, and the Morea and Syria were fixed upon for that purpose.

versels and a considerable sum, with the as-|breaking the existing treaty, she would take|the common report of Ibrahim Pasha being surance of his obedience to his master, and the promise of always keeping the Egyptian fleet at his disposal. However, he did not renounce his ideas of emancipation; and his quarrel with the Pasha of Acre gave them a fresh impulse, from the arrangements he was ordered by the Porte to make for his march upon Syria. This circumstance put an end to his irresolution, and he promised himself that he would never retire again from Syria if he could once set foot within it. He would not even listen to the orders of the sultan, when he had sent to countermand his warlike preparations. He disobeyed without disguise, under the pretext of having private injuries to revenge; and the commencement of the present war followed.

Taking an abstract view of his situation as a subject, Mohammed Alee has committed a great fault in wishing to change his position. He could never find a more favourable one in every point. Monarch, in fact, and quite absolute, he wanted only the name; and it is to acquire this that he has consented to sacrifice so many certain advantages, of which no one would ever have dreamt of depriving him. The name of subject hurt his pride; but it did not impose any great obligations upon him: supreme chief of a superb country, which he governed and regulated according to his pleasure, he had no reason to envy many a sovereign.

The authority of the grand signor, long since purely nominal in Egypt, had no influence over the system of administration adopted by Mohammed Alee. He alone commanded the liberty and fortunes of his subjects. He was accountable to no one for his immense revenues, and the army he had formed obeyed him alone. But if that nominal dependence on a sovereign did not affect his power at home, it gave him a great preponderance abroad. Considered by the European nations as appointed by the Porte, they could not make any hostile aggressions upon his territory. His title of vassal, of which he is ashamed, protected him against all the ambition of the west; and this protection only cost him some outward marks of deferencesome trifling sacrifices compared with the benefit he derived from it. Egypt is much coveted; and the moment Mohammed Alee, separating himself from the Porte, shall renounce of his own accord the support of his sovereign-the moment, whatever he the cause, he shall declare himself independent ruler of the country, he must prepare for a serious defence against foreign invasion. Let him be persuaded that France and England would never have left him quiet possessor of so rich a country, if the only obstacle had been his expulsion. The fear of declaring an unjust war against the sultan has alone restrained them, in spite of the great desire they have of acquiring in the Levant a colony of such importance. Rapacious England, above all, has long since cast her eyes upon Egypt; and the last treaty of commerce, she has just made with Mohammed Alee, would render the accomplishment of her permanent views of conquest still more easy. Succeeding in establishing some mercantile houses (comptoirs) at Suez and Cosseir, + the commerce of the Red Sea, where of all the flags of Europe her's only floats, will be alone enjoyed by her. In short, those establishments furnishing endless pretexts, according to her convenience, of advantage, at a reasonable moment, of the facility thus offered for declaring a war, which would secure her prey. Those who have attentively observed the feeling of the British cabinet towards Mohammed Alee, have not failed to perceive its obvious aim of creating one more opening, by adding to its present possessions others in the Levant; and this wish would become more ardent, as the means of satisfying it were rendered easy.

The army and fleet of Mohammed Alee may answer very well to struggle for some time against the forces of the Porte; but of what weight would they be against a European expedition? He was well aware of this, when he offered his alliance to France against the Dev of Algiers. His intention was, to have secured a powerful ally, who at a later period would have thought it her duty to second his projects of independence, and to defend him against the hostile measures he dreads.

But, in spite of the great fertility of her soil Egypt is a ruined country, which would require several years of repose before a part of the misfortunes she has suffered could be healed. The population, thinned by the ambition and avarice of the government, only sighs for the moment when it shall see its chains broken; and if it has not sufficient energy to resist the tyranny of Mohammed Alee, it at least desires most ardently to be delivered from it; so that far from offering any resistance, it would welcome with enthusiasm that power which should present itself as a liberator.

As to the result of the present war, it may be long, but it is by no means doubtful. Hitherto Ibrahim Pasha has pursued his march without meeting any serious opposition: he has only routed some irregular troops, which could never have held out against him. Let us wait till he finds himself in presence of the grand signor's army—it is then that we may judge of the general, who has completely failed before the only obstacle he has yet met with, who at the head of 50,000 men, and after more than six months' siege, was unable to take St. Jean d'Acre,* whose garrison, reduced to 1200 men, never exceeded 2,500!

Biographical Account of Mohammed Alee Pasha.+

Mohammed Alee was born in the year of the Hégira 1182 (1769), at Cavalla (Cowalah), a small town of Roumelia, where his father was an officer in the troops of the governor. Although his education was entirely neglected, he gave proofs at an early age of a subtle and penetrating genius, an active imagination, and an enterprising disposition, which appeared to presage at that time the lofty destinies he has been called to fulfil. In his youth he had occasion to give a proof of his courage and prudence, in recalling to their duty the inhabitants of a village which had revolted against the authorities of Cavalla. This action gained for him the confidence of the chiefs and the attachment of a lady, whom he afterwards married, and by whom he had, during the life-time of her first husband, three sons, Ismail, Toussoum, and Ibrahim; which has given rise to his adopted son.

A particular circumstance placed him at the head of a body of 300 men, whom the district of Cavalla sent to Egypt, by order of the grand signor, against the French, on their taking possession of that country. Scarcely had he joined the Ottoman army, when he distinguished himself by the bravery of his conduct, of which he gave successive proofs, in the different actions in which he was engaged with the republican troops.

I shall not follow Mohammed Alee in his military career: this part of his life has been described by a modern author with all the detail the subject requires.† I hasten to that moment when, after having passed through every rank - after having met with all the vicissitudes incident to the profession of armsafter having been alternately blamed and re-warded by his superiors, he was chosen governor of Egypt, by a deputation of shekhs, on the 14th March, 1805. The country was then a prey to all the horrors of intestine divisions, fomented by a number of tyrants, known by the name of beys, or memlooks. He thwarted their schemes of opposition; and two months after his election (the 9th July, 1805) he was recognised by the Sublime Porte as Pasha of Egypt.

The English observed with displeasure that tranquillity was about to be re-established, by the energy of a single man, in a country which they had coveted, and whose commotions daily afforded a new stimulus to their pretensions. ± They declared openly against the government of Mohammed Alee, whose plans overthrew their long-cherished hopes. The British ambassador at Constantinople demanded his removal; and the agents of the cabinet of London excited new commotions. Their efforts succeeded with the Porte, which gave orders to Mohammed Alee to quit his pashalic, and take possession of that of Salonica; but he contrived to gain time by divers pretexts, until his services decided the grand signor to leave in Egypt the only man who was capable of governing it at such a critical moment, and of preserving it for the Ottoman empire.

The defeat of the English at Rosetta, at the time of their unsuccessful expedition in 1807, and their expulsion from Egypt, the annihilation of the memlooks, the wars against the Wahabees, and the conquests of the Hedjaz, Cordofán, and Sennar, were, at a later period, so many claims to the increase of favour and esteem he enjoyed from the sultan. His ambition has alone prevented him from maintaining it. He is persuaded that he has conquered Egypt by the power of his sabre, and is resolved to keep possession of it, and to transmit it to his heirs; § in short, he intends to found a new dynasty.

^{*} He had frequently applied for the pashalic of Damascus, which had been refused. One of the arguments used by him is very characteristic. "If," said he, "I am unworthy to be trusted, why leave me Egypt? but if I am a faithful subject, why refuse me Damascus?" † There is only an agent at each; one a native, the other a Greek.

^{*} He has at last taken it, and marched to and entered Damascus and Aleppo. The fleet, consisting of four line-of-battle ships and seven large frigates, besides sloops and brigs, has sailed to meet that of the sultan. A ship of 130 uns has just been launched.
† This pamphlet also contains notices of Ibrahim Pasha.

[†] This pamphiet also contains notices of torainin reside, Abbas Pasha, Maharrem Bey, Ahmed (or rather Mohamined) Bey Defterdår, Mahmood Bey, Shereef Bey, Osman Bey (now pasha and admiral of the fieet), and of Boghōs; but as they can be but of little interest to the general reader, I have omitted them.

Found a new dynasty.

This report originated from an affront offered by Ibrahim Pasha to Mona. Drovetti, which the French consultoped to revenge, by insinuating that Ibrahim was the son of the pasha's wife by a former husband. It is, however, acknowledged in the harem of Mohammed Alee, that he is his son, and as every one knows, the eldest of the three. The order of their birth is transposed by the author, Ibrahim being the eldest, and Ismail the youngest. M. Felix Mangin, Histoirede Pscapte wous Mehemet Ali.

This is really not amiss. The French never, of course, dreamed of such unjustifiable pretensions. But from what did it ever appear that the English had the project of mwaling Egypt and of annexing it to their dominions? The discontent of the people of Egypt, and the claims of Mohammed Bey el Elfee, induced the English to undertake the expedition of 1807; and it was at the solicitation of the Elfee Bey that they sent a small force to assist him in his attempts to overthrow the government of Mohammed Alee. We might have benefited our commerce; but our object could not then be the occupation of Egypt. Egypt.

|| Cherished, no doubt, ever since 1801.
| Not only Egypt, but all the countries where Arabic

Mohammed Alee unites with considerable courage the art of commanding; he is endowed with a subtle genius and uncommon perspicacity: nor is he unacquainted with all the machinery of policy and diplomacy, or the means of using it with address. Indefatigable and remarkable for his perseverance, which enabled him to learn to read and write at the age of forty-five; the restless disposition of an ambitious man, who is resolved on gaining a name at any price, is visible in all his conduct. Headstrong even to violence, he wants not however a certain share of humanity. He has taken from the grandees the odious privilege of putting to death without a trial. He has welcomed to his court a great number of subjects who had revolted from the Porte, where he treats them honourably, and whom he would never consent to give up; and during the revolution of Greece, he took under his protection those Greeks who happened to be in Egypt, kept them in his employ, and granted them an increase of favour. An enthusiastic friend to innovations, he adopts them with avidity, and frequently without previous examination; so that he has founded several schools, by whose failure his amour propre has been greatly mortified.

He is moreover affable, and has an easy and prepossessing manner. Void of prejudices, he knows how to appreciate European nations, affects even to imitate their customs, and is constantly blaming the grandees of his court for their mistaken notions of them. The expression of his countenance is gay and open, and his eye is full of fire. Constantly agitated, he sleeps but little, and seldom enjoys sound repose; and during the night two women watch alternately at his bed-side, to arrange the coverings he constantly throws off in his sleep. On making an acquaintance, he is communicative and curious, particularly in every thing that relates to Europe. In short, as an individual he possesses several estimable qualities: he is a good father, a faithful friendtemperate and regular in his habits.

Such is Mohammed Alee. But if some of the features of this sketch are daily losing their exact resemblance, we must attribute this change to inexorable age, which seems to augment in rigour as it weighs upon him.

CLEARING OFF ARREARS.

CLEARING OFF ARREARS.

As the end of the year approaches, we look round our tables, our chairs, our shelves, our sofa, our floor; and we feel with dismay, that, notwithstanding all our difference, there is yet a considerable arrear which ought to be cleared off, before we can justly claim the credit of having reported so fully on the productions of the last wedve months as to deserve the praise at which our tracette aims — namely, that of fairly and sufficiently reflecting the progress of literature, science, and the arts, whether for the information of present or of future times. It is true that a weekly sheet, however arranged and printed, so as to contain in fact a great quantity of matter, must in some measure fall short of this purpose; but still we conceive it may, and we hope it does, supply matter, must in some measure fall short of this purpose; but still we conceive it may, and we hope it does, supply a fund of intelligence so ample and useful as to enable every reader to form a tolerably correct notion of what has been done and how it has been done; what improvements have taken place, what failures have occurred; what new systems have sprung up, and what old things have been revived; in short, a view, in masses or detail, as circumstances seem to require, of the world "as it wags" in its intellectual development, its pursuits, its amusements, and all its various changes.

To render this picture more complete, we shall devote a portion of this and two succeeding Now. to the office indicated by our title, "cleaning off arrears."

is spoken; and many affirm that he even aspires to the throne of Constantinople.

There was great policy in that measure; and this is another of the many proofs of his intentions at that time of overthrowing the power of the sultan. A strong party among the Greeks would have been very useful. I have heard one of the chief men of the pasha's court observe, that Greece and Syria were two doors which led to the same place.

Notwithstanding the organs of destructiveness in school-boys and children, it is not a little extraordinary to see the endless publication of school-books and books of in-struction. It seems as if almost every teacher was also a writer; and that it was impossible there should be an adequate demand for these uncessing novelties; in which it must be acknowledged there is seldom any thing new, it must be acknowledged there is seldom any thing new, though, in some, new principles and new methods are occasionally enforced.

(1.) The Principles and Practice of Jacotot's System of Education has excited considerable attention. It purports to teach languages not only by a short way, but a rail-road and steam rapidity, by exercising the memory and the judgment, instead of wearying the learner with grammars and dictionaries. This system was first practised at Louvain; and its friends affirm that the theory has been carried into successful operation. (2.) The Art of Reading and Translating French at Sight, by M. Rudelle. has been carried into successful operation. (2.) The Art of Reading and Translating French at Sight, by M. Rudelle, nother "practice-theoretical" method, in which double-quick time is said to be gained by reading vertal interined translation. (3.) The Conversational Manner of Teaching Languages, &c. by S. B. L. P. Some improvements suggested on the systems of Jacotot and Hamilton. (4.) Grammar of the French Language, by J. R. L. Rubattel. A useful grammar, with well-chosen examples in the intellinear mode. (5.) Systematic Arrangement of the Genders of French Nouns, by C. Thurgar:—also useful, in briefly enabling the learner to overcome a great difficulty in this language. (6.) Homonymes Français, by D. Albert, LL.D. and Egerton Smith. A good book to follow the last and improve the learner in the niceties of French.

of French.

In German we shall at present only notice (7.) Stories from German Writers. On Locke's recommendation, with literal interlineal translations; the notes are instructive. (8.) Meditations from the German of Burckhardt. In English, and a pious and beautiful work. A prayer for a sick person (p. 137) is exquisitely pathetic, and finely expressed. (9.) La Declinaison Allemande Determinée, by M. Ollendorff. Very useful fixed rules for German declession. German declensio

In Latin, (10, 11.) Initia Latina, Pars Prima et Pars Se unda. The plan here laid down is pursued, we believe German declension.

In Latin, (10, 11.) Initia Latina, Pars Prima et Pars Secunda. The plan here laid down is pursued, we believe, at Lewisham school; and it has certainly advantages and improvements not always to be met with. It applies knowledge of words and grammar early to practice (12.) Thesaurus Linguæ Latinæ, by De Porquet. M. de Porquet is an excellent teacher, and this adoption of the plan of Le Tresor for translating English into Latin at sight is worthy of his intelligence. (13.) A new Latin Vocabulary, by W. Pinnock, jun. Mr. Plinnock's father has done much for the instruction of youth, and we are glad to see a son following in his footsteps.

In English, (15, 16, 17.) English Grammar Abridged—a Grammar of the English Language, with the Principles of Rhetoric, &c.— Exercises adapted to the same, by Richard Hiley. Of these three volumes we can speak with cordial praise. Not differing essentially from Lindley Murray (to whose labours and virtues the author pays just tribute), they do not servilely imitate that popular grammarian; but where there appear to be untenable positions, others are adopted and justified by references to able writers. (18.) Arithmetical Text-Book, by R. Cunningham. A skilful treatise on arithmetic; and well calculated to drill the mind for higher studies. (19.) Improved System of English Grammar, by R. Connel. A common grammar, with coolous exercises.

by R. Cunningham. A skilful treatise on arithmetic; and well calculated to drill the mind for higher studies. (198) Improved System of English Grammar, by R. Connel. A common grammar, with copious exercises.

The following are still books of instruction, though of a superior or more advanced character. (20.) Bayley's Algebra: designed for Eton school, and the work of an able mathematician. We are not acquainted with a more easy and ready means of acquiring the elements of the science. (21.) A Treatise on Geometry, by Robert Wallace, A.M. An excellent school-book edition of Euclid. (22.) Pritchard's Microscopic Cabinet, with Essays by Dr. Goring. With many coloured engravings, this interesting exhibition of microscopic objects unfolds to the youthful mind the wonders of nature. The descriptions are elaborate and scientific; and the whole is well adapted to illustrate, in a manner not hitherto done in this country, a branch of natural science of extraordinar's Guide, by R. Carr. There is a great deal of useful matter in this volume; but it is mixed up with little regard to connexion. Everypart—points of Latin grammar, pronunciation, translation of Greek proper names, rhetoric, a system of mnemonics, &c.—are all proofs of study and intelligence. (24.) An Anglo-Saxon Grammar, &c. by W. Hunter. We do not think Mr. Hunter throws much new light on the Anglo-Saxon tongue; but throws much new light on the Anglo-Saxon tongue; but

(1) By Joseph Payne. Pp. 56. London, Stephens.
(2) Pp. 68. The first book of Telemachus done into English.
(3) Pp. 52. J. Souter.
(4) Pp. 236.
(5) Pp. 61. Treuttel and Co., Dulau, &c.
(6) Pp. 108. Whittaker and Co.
(7) Pp. 88. J. Taylor.
(8) Pp. 144. Hatchard and Son.
(9) Pp. 35. Paris.
(10), 11) Pp. 24 and 68. Fellowes.
(12) Pp. 206.
(13) Pp. 114. Poole and Edwards.
(15, 16, 17) Pp. 123. 282. 210. Simpkin and Marshall.
(10) Pp. 252. Edinburgh, T. Ireland; Oliver and Boyd; London, Whittaker.
(19) Pp. 162. Glasgow, Atkinson.
(20) 8vo. pp. 100. Whittaker.
(21) 12mo. Glasgow, Griffin and Co.; Lond. Tegg.
(22) 8vo. pp. 246. Whittaker.
(23) 12mo. pp. 292. Kirkby Lonsdale, A. Foster; London, J. Richardson.
(24) 8vo. pp. 90. Longman and Co.; Edinb. Tait;
Glasgow, Atkinson, and Co.

his analysis of the styles of Chaucer, Douglas, and Spenser, is pleasing and useful. The argument, that for force and energy in English writers of the present day, derivatives from the Saxon fee factor of the theory of the control of the control of the theory of the control of the English scholar.]

(26.) Paul's Grecian Antiquities: a familiar abridgement from acknowledged authorities, and consequently a desirable book for students. (27.) A Guide to Syllogiam, &c. by the Rev. C. Wesley. A manual of logic, with examples of the method of teaching it at Cambridge. It mas the merit of being brief and clear—a capital exercise for youthful ingenuity and talent.

Touching Poetry, we hardly know whether we should complain of the pain, or congratulate ourselves on the pleasure, it gives us. About one publication in 300 pays its expenses; the odd 298 delight the writers by seeing themselves in print. There are a certain consumption of stationery, printers bills to be paid, a few advertisements with their stamp duties to increase the revenue; a great many private letters to friends with copies, and handsone complimentary answers in return: a few anxiously careful episiles, marked "private," to reviewers; and—as Hamlet, prince of Denmark, a great critic in his way, says,—" the rest is silence." The following are small waifs and strays. Translations of the Oxford Latin Prize Poems, first series, by N. Lee Torre; a task hardly worth performing, though very crediably executed as an exercise in composition—Pictures of the Past, by Thomas Brydson; proofs of good feeling and natural thoughts well expressed—St. John in Patmos, by one of the old living Poets of Great Britain: and long may be live, friend Bowles, an example of all that is amily: he has better tones left in it yet.—Hours of Revere, by L. H. R. Coutier; a strange imitation of versification, by a lady obviously more accustomed to write in French than precepts and effusions, Religion and Theology are not silent in our day.

(1.) A Portrait of Modern Scepticism, by Dr. John Morrison, is a volume honourable to the learning and plety of this excellent divine, a Dissenter without a sectarian blot, but a sincere and energetic Christian, as this publication demonstrates.

(2.) Hartwell Horne's Manual of Prayers for the Afficited is a book of balm and consolation under every species of sorrow.

(3.) The True Dignity of Human Nature, &c. by W. Davis, is also well calculated to lift the spirit of man above the transitory evils of this life, and point his aspirations to a sphere where trouble is unknown.

(4.) Christianity a Divine Revelation, &c. by R. Brad-

(25) pp. 164. Glasgow, Atkinson; London, Simpkia and Marshall. (26) Pp. 384. Oxford. (27) Pp. 133. London, Bohn; Cambridge, Deighton; Oxford, Parker.

(4) Pp. 136. Westley and Davis.
(3) Pp. 275. London, Cadell: Edinb. Blackwood.
(3) Pp. 237. Holdsworth and Ball.
(4) Pp. 136. Whittaker, Rivingtons, Hamilton; Manley; the best arguments against infidelity put in a very popular, and consequently very beneficial form.

(5.) The Pleasures of Religion, &c. by the Rev. H. Stowell, A.M.; a poetical essay to allure to a brighter world; to which are added some pleasing miscellaneous

(6. Example, or Family Scenes; moral tales, calculated to infuse a love of rectitude and virtue, by examples drawn from domestic life.

drawn from domestic life.

(7) Discourses and Sacramental Address, by the Rev.
D. B. Barker, A.M.; earnest exhortations to Christian duties, expressed in very Scriptural language.
(8) Sir T. Browne's Religio Medic; a neat reprint of a justly celebrated work.
(9.) Twenty-four Tales of the English Church. These contain some curious and interesting stories of early church history, and are well worth perusal; not merely for the doctrines they inculcate, but for the remarkable matters they relate, when abbots, priors, saints, popes, bishops, kings, &cc. &c. travelled in affairs connected with the diffusion of the gospel, struggles for power and ascendency, and many other strange things connected therewith.

therewith.

(10.) Explanatory Lectures on the Gospel according to St. Matthew, by the Rev. J. Penrose. An unassuming but excellent volume—plain in its expositions, and harmonious in its arrangements. These lectures may be read with advantage any where; and their preaching must have been a comfort both to Mr. Penrose and his

(To be continued.)

MEMOIR OF SIR D. BAIRD.

[Concluding Notice.]

It was our intention to have devoted, even after a continuation in three of our Numbers, a further portion of our space to this work; but we find later claims accumulate so fast upon us, that we are compelled to abandon it, leaving two-thirds of the last volume un-epitomised. We left Sir D. Baird in the command of the Cape of Good Hope, which he had conquered, and in improving the condition of which he was most successful. Among his other measures he sanctioned Sir Home Popham's expedition against South America; and the change of ministry at home, 1806-7, led to no favourable construction of his measures. He was recalled, and Sir Home tried by a court-martial and reprimanded. But when Sir David reached England, the Whig administration had been superseded; and he was soon after employed in the command of a division in the attack on Copenhagen. Here, as elsewhere, he greatly distinguished himself by his bravery and conduct, and was twice wounded. His next command was that of a camp of instruction formed in Ireland; whence he was selected to lead a British force into Spain, and proceeded with it to Coruña. The work here treats largely of his interesting correspondence with Sir John Moore, of the military events of that memorable period, and, finally, of the battle of Co-ruña, where his chief died the death of a hero, and he, the second in the field, was removed desperately wounded to the Ville de Paris, and had his arm extracted from its socket. The calm courage and serenity with which he submitted to this dreadful operation is touchingly described. Once more in England he was created a K.B. and afterwards a baronet; received the thanks of parliament, and was distinguished by many popular and public honours. He married Miss Preston, a daughter of the ancient family of Sir R. Preston, and subsequently resided on an estate derived from her in Perthshire. In August 1829 he died, and his widow erected a splendid monument to his memory; his biographer, with great appearance of justice, contending that he had amply merited a peerage from the government of the country he had served so faithfully and gloriously. He was an honest and gallant soldier: and history at least, instructed by these interesting volumes, will do honour to his merits.

Constable's Miscellany. Part LXXVII. London, 1832, Whittaker; Edinburgh, Waugh and Innee

THIS is a very pleasing volume-an original and selected mélange in various departments of literature, science, and the arts. Such productions, however, afford nothing for criticism, as they resemble the apothecaries' glasses, in presenting only changes of mixture, colour, and position. One is hardly better than another, and none can be read without interest and instruction. A neat vignette and fifteen appropriate wood-cuts illustrate this " guide to the observation of nature."

Pompeii, Vol. II.: Library of Entertaining Knowledge. London, 1832. Knight.

Or the first volume of this performance we spoke in the terms of warm approbation which it merited; and of the second we have only to repeat the same meed of praise. The series to which it belongs has not displayed any portion better executed, or more worthy of popular attention. Pompeii is a very interesting subject in itself, and still more so as an unburied link which connects ancient with modern times, and the earlier with the later habits, manners. and pursuits of mankind.

Part VII. of Loudon's Encyclopædia of Cottage Farm, and Villa Architecture. London, Longman and Co.

In this part Mr. Loudon continues his practical work most usefully. Every thing is so plain, that he who reads may act.

Selections from the Old Testament, &c. By Sarah Austin. 12mo. pp. 304. London, 1832. Wilson.

THE design of Mrs. Austin, in this excellent little volume, is to illustrate, in the words of the Authorised Version, the religion, morality, and poetry of the Hebrew Scriptures, by bringing together, under appropriate heads, the most striking passages of the Old Testament. She has performed her humble but laborious task in a manner that reflects much credit on her heart and judgment. As a sacred lesson-book for children we have seen none to be compared to it. The compiler is entitled to the best thanks of the religious world, and especially of every parent.

An Outline of a Plan for a new Circulating Medium. By Gerard Graulhié. Pp. 31. Ridgway.

THOUGH we cannot in our present Number pay that attention to Mr. Graulhie's pamphlet which it deserves, yet the extraordinary and novel nature of the proposition it offers for public consideration forbids us from passing it over in silence. As copper was succeeded by silver, silver by gold, gold by bills of exchange and paper money, in representing the value of commodities, as productiveness increased and commerce became extended; so, he argues, there ought now to be a circulating medium of greater intrinsic worth in smaller compass, to meet the augmented and multiplied wants of mankind. In diamonds and precious stones he thinks he has discovered that desideratum; and his pamphlet is altogether so curious, that we will, as soon as we can, bring its details and reasoning more fully under the notice of our readers.

Political Economy, Nos. X. and XI. Homes Abroad. For Each and for All. By Harriet Martineau. London, 1832. Charles Fox. AGAIN and again do we cordially recommend these volumes to universal perusal; they are graphic and vivid pictures of England as it is, conveying information in its most popular form - narrative : and whether we dissent from or agree in the inference drawn and the remedy proposed, we cannot but admit the extraordinary talent displayed, and the mass of intelligence collected. We are overcrowded with productions of a far more temporary nature, or would have quoted some striking scenes; but these are works to be read as a whole, from the first number to the last.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.

On Tuesday evening Mr. Aikin delivered the second illustration this season. The subject was, "On the solid substances used for artificial light, and on the manufacture of candles." Mr. Aikin took a view of his subject from the fabled fire of Prometheus down to the last invented patent composition, spermaceti and wax, candle made in England. Of course it is not our intention to follow the lecturer through his practical details (though it may disappoint our readers in the ward of Candle-wick); we shall, therefore, confine ourselves to the following notes of the illustration. At an early period, in the valleys of the Euphrates and Nile, those cradles of civilisation and the arts, trees of a resinous sort were first used for light, and long afterwards there was no other substitute in many parts of Europe. Of the introduction of tallow candles we are not sufficiently informed. In 1829 no fewer than 58,000 tons of tallow were imported from Russia; and in the same year double that quantity was manu-factured at home. The latter is found, observed Mr. A., to be a palatable and wholesome food for poultry; and ducks fattened on it are esteemed delicacies. A quantity of air and water are held in solution in all candles which have not been kept for some time: hence those made in March are better than others, evaporation having taken place before they are generally required for use, owing to the length of the day. Of spermaceti, 7,000 tons were brought to England last year. This substance is erroneously supposed to be found in the cranium of the physeter macrocephalus, or longheaded whale: it is the fat of the animal. Formerly, and, indeed, not long since, spermaceti was only used as a medicine, and annually many tons of it were thrown into the Thames as useless, the quantity brought to this country being so much more than was required for medical purposes. It has become very valuable since its application by the tallow-chandlers; by whom, in the manufacture of candles, it is mixed with tallow or wax, to render it fit for working; pure spermaceti being exceedingly pliable when in the solid state-a block of it, which lay on the table, was an aggregate of longitudinal crystals. Of wax there was imported last year 460 tons, chiefly from Mogadore, Russia, the Netherlands, France, and other countries.

MEDICO-BOTANICAL SOCIETY.

AT the last meeting a new antidote in cases of hydrophobia was announced, upon the authority of Sir Anthony Carlisle. It is the juice of a South American plant, belonging to the genus Cactus, a family of plants harm-less in their character, and to which belong the as food for cattle when grass is scarce. Sir distinctly saw three or four meteors shooting Anthony had received several bottlesful of the liquid, with assurances of its efficacy. He of a few minutes he counted no fewer than states that it is administered to the unfor- forty-eight, whose magnitudes varied from the tunate patient by pouring it down his throat, as he stands perpendicularly buried to the chin in the earth: this part of the process, however, is not indispensably necessary to a cure. Sir Anthony expressed his readiness to attend with any of the members of the Society who belonged to the medical profession, should a case of hydrophobia occur in their practice, in order to ascertain the properties of the liquid.

⁽⁵⁾ Pp. 148. Rivingtons, Hatchard. (6) Pp. 244. Smith, Elder, and Co. (7) Pp. 231. Rivingtons, Hatchard. (8) Pp. 150. Oxford, Vincent. (9) Pp. 324. Houlston and Son. (10) Pp. 348. Rivingtons.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

WEDNESDAY, Dec. 5 .- Mr. Murchison, president, in the chair. Several fellows were elected. A paper by Mr. Gideon Mantell was read on the Saurian remains, found by the DEC. 6 .- Mr. Hallam in the chair. Messieurs author, at various times, in the Tilgate Forest, Sussex; but more particularly on a new animal belonging to the same tribe, and lately discovered by him. The paper was illustrated by many specimens, including the recently found reptile, and numerous drawings.

METEOROLOGY.

On Thursday evening last, at five minutes after six, a beautiful and exceedingly brilliant meteor was observed proceeding from the zenith, in a southerly direction, taking its course through the square of Pegasus. It disappeared a few degrees east of Jupiter, in a dense bank of clouds that had rapidly accumulated above the southern horizon. The head or nucleus of the meteor was of a spindle form, about 5' in diameter, and of an intensely vivid violet colour: this was connected with, and followed by a long train, upwards of twenty degrees in length, scarcely inferior to the nucleus in brightness, and of the same phosphorescent colour; the train was wider near the middle than at the extremity, and the whole was well defined. It left behind it a track of light, like a coruscation of the Aurora Borealis, which continued visible in the square of Pegasus for two minutes after the meteor had disappeared. Its motion was accompanied with a faint rushing sound, like that produced by a stream of air. J. T. BARKER. Deptford.

LITERARY AND LEARNED. ROYAL SOCIETY.

J. W. LUBBOCK, Esq. in the chair. The following communications were read. First, a letter from Sir James South to H. R. H. the Duke of Sussex, on the extensive atmosphere of Mars, from recent observations satisfactorily made with the large equatorial telescope. Sir James South is led to conclude, that some physical change has occurred in the atmosphere of this primary planet, or that the opinions of certain writers on the subject, hitherto considered as authorities by astronomers, are errodered as authorities by astronomers, are erroneous. Second, a brief memoir by Dr. Ritchie, of the London University, on the beautiful discoveries of Dr. Faraday in magneto-electric induction, so frequently noticed during the last session in the Literary Gazette. Third,—an account of extraordinary meteors seen on the night of the 12th Nov. last, near the seat of Sir Robert Wigram, (the name of the place was unheard): the author of this paper observed in the heavens, on the night stated, a sudden builded from the presses of the Church Missionary Solon, W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. C. Strickland, University College; G. Garbett, E. Jones, Scholars, E. Sonoiler, Scholar of Balichors of Arts.—R. J. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. C. Strickland, University College; G. Garbett, E. Jones, Scholars, E. Sonoiler, Scholar of Balichors of Arts.—R. J. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. C. Strickland, University College; G. Garbett, E. Jones, Scholars, E. Sonoiler, Scholar of Balichors of Arts.—R. J. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. C. Strickland, University College; G. Garbett, E. Jones, Scholars, E. Sonoiler, Scholar of Lincoln College; S. H. Walker, Fellow, C. Marriott, Scholar of Balichollege; A. B. J. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. M. Akkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. S. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall: W. H. M. M neous. Second, a brief memoir by Dr. Ritchie, along the heavens at one time; in the course magnitudes of Mars or Jupiter, down to that of a Roman candle. The whole scene was described as one of great magnificence; the those vulgarly called shooting stars.

thanks to the King for continuing the gold medals of George IV.; it expressed an assurance that the Society, by its adjudication of stance of regal favour had not been bestowed in lists were ordered to be laid on the table.

vain by his Majesty.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

De Gerville, De Caumont, and Professor C. O. Müller, were elected honorary members. John Smith, Esq. communicated a paper, accompanying several impressions of ancient seals of the Bishops of Glasgow. R. W. Hamilton, Esq. V. P. exhibited several drawings of Roman antiquities lately found on Lancing Down, Sussex: under the head of a human skeleton were discovered the bones of a cock! A cock was the sacrifice, we believe, peculiar to Esculapius. W. B. Whetton, Esq. transmitted an impression of the inscription on a Roman votive altar lately found at Manchester. It is remarkable for mentioning the vexillation of cavalry, composed of the Norici, and some other auxiliary people, the termination only of whose name remained perfect, owing to the altar having been fractured. Mr. Whetton thinks they were the Rhæti; but we do not see how it is possible to read the inscription with reference to them. The impression gives the imperfect line distinctly thus : . . . METORVM ET NORI-CORVM; the termination metorum cannot be the genitive plural of the appellative above; mentioned.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

FIRST meeting of the session .- T. H. Baber, Esq. in the chair. A great number and variety of donations were announced as having been received since the last session from nearly fifty different individuals and institutions. Hon. East India Company presented an exceedingly valuable collection of standard oriental works, including F. Johnson's edition of Richardson's Arabic and Persian Dictionary; Roebuck's edition of the Burham i Kati; Lumsden's Arabic and Persian Grammars; Vans Kennedy's Mahratta Dictionary, &c. &c. The thanks of the meeting were specially voted to the court of directors for this liberal addition to the Society's library. Among the other donations were a series of the works published by the Société Asiatique of Paris, presented by the Society; a collection of philological works from the presses of the Church Missionary So-common fig and the melon-thistle, often used remarkable manner; after ascending a hill, he | Rev. Mr. Roberts, of Trincomalee, and comprised remarks on the coincidences to be found between some of the principal deities worshipped at the present day by the Hindus, and those adored in ancient times by the Assyrians, Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. Mr. Roberts drew many illustrations of his opinions on this subject from the records of Scripture, and meteors were considered very different from finally arrives at the conclusion, that in the instances which he has adduced, there exist so Mr. Lubbock read the draft of an address of many and such striking resemblances, as to manifest a clear identity of origin.

The attention of the meeting was directed to the arctic expedition for ascertaining, if the medals, would shew that this splendid in possible, the fate of Capt. Ross, and subscription

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE.

Oxyond, Oct. 11th.-The following degrees were con-

Bachelor in Divinity .- Rev. J. C. Stafford, Fellow of Bachelor in Divinity.—Rev. J. C. Stafford, Fellow of Magdalen.

Master of Arts.—Rev. K. E. Money, Oriel College, Prebendary of Hereford.

Oct. 12th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—Rev. W. Hunt, Wadham College; T. Halton, Brasennose College; F. Biscoe, Rev. H. Partington, Students of Christ Church.

Bachelor of Arts.—F. H. Talman, Magdalen Hall.
Oct. 25th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Masters of Arts.—C. W. Puller, Christ Church, Rev.
J. D. Shafto, Brasennose College, Grand Compounders;
J. B. Hall, Student, A. A. Holden, Rev. C. Baring, Christ Church; T. Twiss, Fellow of University College; E. Parker, Oriel College; Rev. R. Morgan, Scholar, Rev. W. Bowling, Jesus College;
Bachelors of Arts.—Hon. J. T. Pelham, Christ Church;
W. Reed, Queen's College; T. F. Barker, Brasennose College; W. F. White, A. Menzies, Scholar of Trinity College;

College.

In a convocation holden the same day, G. Bland, M.A. of Gonville and Calus College, Cambridge, was admitted ad eundem.

Oct. 31st.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Doctor in Divinity.—Rev. W. Jackson, late Fellow of Queen's College.

Masters of Arts.—D. Vawdrey, Fellow of Brasennose
College: Rev. F. F. Beadon, Oriel College.
Backelors of Arts.—J. Niblett, Exeter College; J. H.
Murray, Worcester College.
Nov. 7th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Backelors of Arts.—The Earl of Lincoln, Christ Church,
Grand Compounder; W. H. Howley, New College; H.
Blackall, Student of Christ Church; C. B. Brown, Trinity College.

Grand Compounder; W. H. Howley, New College; H. Blackall, Student of Christ Church; C. B. Brown, Trinity College.
Nov. 15th.—The following degrees were conferred:—Masters of Arts.—Rev. E. R. Berens, St. Mary Hall: Rev. J. Bell, University College; Rev. E. Ashe, Balliol College; Rev. E. M. Ashe, Trinity College; Rev. E. Meade, Wadham College; Rev. H. Flesher, Lincoln College, Rev. B. Mendel, Wadham College; Rev. H. Flesher, Lincoln College, T. Hughan, Balliol College, Grand Compounders; N. F. Chudleigh, W. de Pipe Belcher, G. W. S. Menteath, Magdalen Hall; E. Golding, W. R. Grove, Brasennose College; G. B. Twining, University College; the Marquess of Douglas, J. R. Hope, A. H. D. Acland, H. Glynne, T. A. Maberly, E. S. Lewis, J. d'Affleck, Christ Church; J. L. Popham, T. G. Bussell, J. Wills, Wadham College; J. Davies, J. G. Bussell, J. Wills, Wadham College; J. Davies, J. F. E. B. Pollock, W. B. Trower, T. Yard Exeter College; T. L. Trotter, Lincoln College; F. W. Martin, T. Simkinson, R. F. B. Richards, E. F. Smith, Balliol College; G. G. Waddington, H. Hill, Fellows of New College; G. B. Caffin, St. John's College; T. R. Barnes, T. Carter, Worcester College; F. P. Sockett, R. W. James, W. Hooker, W. Pridden, Pembroke College, Grand Compounder; Rev. H. Purrier, Worcester College; R. W. Goodenough, Student of Christ Church, Bachelors of Arts.—T. Shaw, Brasennose College; R. W. Goodenough, Student of Christ Church, Bachelors of Arts.—R. J. Uniacke, St. Alban Hall; W. H. M. Atkins, M. Mitchell, A. E. C. Strickland, University College; G. Garbett, E. Jones, Scholars, E. S. Ensor, Brasennose College; A. B. Orlebar, Scholars

King, Balliol College; Rev. A. D. Stacpoole, Fellow of New College.

Bachclors of Arta.—J. R. Harvey, St. Alban Hall; G. H. Somerset, St. Mary Hall; J. D. Giles, Exhibitioner; R. G. Macmullen, Scholar of Corpus Christi College; W. Pearson, Scholar of University College; J. W. Ma. Gerry, Brasemone College; J. W. Macdonald, Christ Church; A. J. P. Lutwyche, E. Wear, Queen's College; S. C. Denison, Scholar of Balliol College; W. H. Lushington, W. Spooner, Oriel College.

Cambridge, Oct. 10th.—The following degrees were conferred:—

CAMBRIDGE, Oct. 10th.—The following degrees were conferred:—

Baschelors of Arts.—R. J. St. Aubyn, J. G. Bellingham, C. J. Stock, Trinity College; T. N. Grigg, F. A. Glover, St. Peter's College; J. R. Bogue, Christ's College; J. Barry, Queen's College.
Oct. 14th.—The following degrees were conferred:—

Masters of Arts.—C. Lestourgeon, Trinity College; A. A. Barker, Compounder, St. Peter's College.
Bachelors of Arts.—J. Hibbert, R. H. Wilkinson, Fellows, King's College; G. W. Barron, St. John's College; G. P. Bennett, Catharine Hall.
Oct. 24th.—The Seatonian prise, for the best poem on the Plague stayed," was awarded to the Rev. T. E. Hankinson, M.A. Corpus Christi College.
Nov. 10th.—The subject of the Norrisian prize-essay for the ensuing year is, "The conduct and preaching of the Apostles an evidence of the truth of Christianity."
The following degrees were conferred:—

the Apostles an evidence of the truth of Christianity." The following degrees were conferred:— Homorary Master of Arta.—T. S. Rice, Trinity College.
Masters of Arta.—Rev. R. Bond, Corpus Christi College: Rev. W. Butler, Rev. W. Sidgwick, Trinity College: R. Buckley, St. Peter's College.
Bachelor in Civil Law.—Rev. H. J. Williams, St. John's

Bachelor in Physic.—G. Shann, Trinity College.
Bachelor of Arts.—W. Hodgson, J. C. Umpleby, Queen's ollege.

Nov. 14th.—The following degrees were conferred:—

Bachelor in Divinity.—Rev. C. Davies, St. John's Col

ge. Honorary Master of Arts.—Hon. R. Devereux, Downing

College.

Masters of Arts.—Rev. J. Wollen, Rev. W. J. Dampier,
St. John's College.

Bachelors of Arts.—A. Brooking, G. Bateman, Trinity College; W. Purdon, D. L. Hotchkin, St. John's College; R. T. Bolton, Clare Hall; E. Nettleship, Corpus Christi College; T. Alibut, W. Rogers, Catharine Hall.
Nov. 28th.—The following degrees were conferred:—
Doctor in Physic.—J. Johnstone, Trinity College.
Bachelor in Divinity.—Rev. G. Wilkinson, St. John's College.

College.

Honorary Master of Arts.—Hon. W. C. W. Fitzwilliam

College.

Henorary Master of Arts.—Hon. W. C. ...

Trinity College.

Masters of Arts.—J. W. Lubbock, L. Thompson,
Compounders, S. Marindin, Trinity College; P. W. Ray,
Clare Hall; W. P. Hulton, Downing College.

Bachelors in Civil Law.—W. Lowndes, Compounder, Rev. Care nan; W. P. Hutton, Downing Conege.

Bachelors in Crif Law.—W. Lowndes, Compounder, Rev.

R. M. Hope, Rev. H. B. Hall, Trinity Hall; T. Wirgman,
Trinity College.

Bachelor of Arts.—W. J. Havart, St. John's College.

FINE ARTS.

PANORAMA OF STIRLING.

By the painter's natural magic and sleight of hand, the visitor to this beautiful panorama finds himself suddenly transported from the flat and dull monotony of the streets of London to a scene as noble and picturesque as the island affords. The drawings of Glover, Robson, and other artists, may have given to those who have not been at the place, some notion of the magnificent and diversified prospect from Stirling Castle; but a representation of the entire circle was necessary to render that notion an adequate one. The sketches from which the panorama was painted, were made in the present year, and were taken from the outer court of the castle. "The view from this spot," it is justly observed in the description of the panorama, "is generally allowed to be one of the finest in Scotland : most extensive, rich, and striking; and commanding in every direction, which cannot fail of being in the highest degree pleasing to the lovers of the bold and picturesque, and of exciting the most intense interest in the minds of those acquainted with the stirring incidents of Scottish history, from the extraordinary events, and singular vicissitudes, of which it has been the scene, no less than twelve fields of battle, including three great ones fought by the two first Edwards, being distinctly visible.

the Carse of Stirling, luxuriant, and fertile in quiet and rich beauty: through which Forth meanders, forming a multitude of the most beautiful peninsulas, in parts approximating so closely as to leave an isthmus of only a few yards; in this direction are seen Alloa, Clackmannan. Falkirk, the Firth of Forth, and the country as far as Edinburgh, and the Pentland hills; towards the south appear St. Ninian's, Bannockburn, the Torwood, and the Carron. bounded by the green hills of Campsie; towards the west are the extensive and fertile plains of Menteith, distinguished for the beautiful and sublime scenes they present, bounded by the gloomy and majestic Grampians; Ben Lomond, Ben Ledi, and Ben Venu, being conspicuous from their great height and fantastic forms; and on the north are the famous ruins of Cambuskenneth, and the precipitous Abbey craig, beyond which are the richly cultivated and romantic vale of Devon; the moor on which the battle of Dunblain was fought; and the Ochill hills, rising in all the varied forms of blooming heath and lively verdure, overtopped by the summits of some of the loftier hills of Perthshire. It is impossible to imagine a landscape more interesting, grand, and picturesque. To use the words of Sir Walter Scott,

The scenery of a fairy dream."

The various beautiful and romantic features of this extensive and celebrated view are depicted with the greatest truth and effect; and are enlivened by the introduction of a number of figures, especially of an animated group, near the foreground, representing the annual meeting of the Highland Society, which "has been established some years, for the purpose of preserving the language, costume, music, gymnastic sports, and martial games of the ancient Caledonians." We understand that this fine work, which is in every respect a production of sterling merit, was executed in the comparatively short space of four months.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Portrait of the Rev. Dr. Crombie, L.L.D. F.R.S. M.R.S.L. A Miniature painted by W. Booth. Lithographed by R. J. Lane, A.R.A.

THE numerous friends of the esteemed and worthy individual here represented (and few men, we believe, have secured a wider circle by the consistent practice of the amiable qualities and higher virtues which adorn humanity. during a long life) will have a great treat in this most speaking likeness. The engraving is enlarged from the original, which reflects the highest credit on Mr. Booth's talent; and is executed with all the fidelity and taste which distinguishes Mr. Lane's productions. The ample brow, the large and intellectual eyes, and all the mild though striking features, are perfectly given; and we can truly say, that we never saw a superior work of the style of art to which it belongs.

Melrose Abbey by Moonlight. Drawn and engraved by T. M. Richardson. Newcastle. THIS print is "inscribed as a tribute, &c. to the memory of Sir Walter Scott," which, indeed, can have little to do with it as a publication of art.

If thou would'st view fair Melrose aright, Go visit it by the pale moonlight, no doubt consecrates this interesting ruin; but, by a similar rule, a thousand objects abbeys in this part of Scotland-Melrose, Dryburgh, Kelso, Jedburgh, &c .- were accurately and finely done some years since by W. Wilson; but still the present is a timely and pleasing production, even though the best feature, the celebrated Prentice window, is cut in two and thrown back, from the point of view chosen by the artist

Twenty-one Illustrations to Turner's Annual Tour for 1833. Moon, Boys, and Graves.

WE are sure that none of our readers will suppose, because we have occasionally indulged in a laugh at some of Mr. Turner's extraordinary vagaries as an artist, that we are insensible to his merits. There is no man living—are there many of the dead ?-entitled to rank with him in the highest qualities of that branch of the arts which is his peculiar vocation. When he is in his proper element, and when he chooses, no man has ever communicated more of the most refined poetic feeling to the productions of his pencil. Others are landscape-painters: Mr. Turner is much more. By his profound knowledge, and by his masterly management of effect, he frequently imparts to an ordinary view a character of beauty, or of grandeur, with which many in vain endeavour to invest the finest scenery in the world. What then must be the result, when the character of his subjects corresponds with that of his genius? We answer, by referring to the fascinating little collection of plates under our notice; on every one of which the eye and the mind may dwell long and often, without satiety. It is evident that the engravers, Messrs. J. B. Allen, R. Brandard, T. Higham, T. Jeavons, W. Miller, W. Radcliffe, W. R. Smith, R. Wallis, and J. T. Willmore, have exerted themselves to the utmost to do justice to Mr. Turner's conceptions; and while they have bestowed the most exquisite finish on the various details, have never forgotten that much more valuable and important consideration, the tout ensemble. Were we to select some of those which appear to us to be the brightest stars of the constellation, we should name—"Amboise," "Clairmont," "St. Julian's, Tours," ''s, Iou. '''Saumur," "Between Clairmont and Mauves," "Saumur,"
"Tours," "Nantes," "Blois," "Montjen,"
"Beaujency," "Orleans," "The Canal of the Loire and Cher," "Château Hamelin;"-but we must check ourselves, or we shall go through the whole portfolio.

Gurlt's Plates of the Anatomy of the Horse. Part I.

To the veterinary surgeon these folio plates must be inestimably serviceable. They are thirty-five in number, and contain the most elaborate representations of the various parts of the noble animal, the skilful treatment of which in disease they are so well calculated to promote. An explanatory octavo volume, in English and German, accompanies them.

Finden's Illustrations to the Works of Lord Byron. Part IX. Murray; Tilt.

As beautiful as its predecessors: more so it could not be. The plates are, " Cape Leucadia," from a drawing by Copley Fielding; "Venice," from a drawing by J. D. Harding, after a sketch by Lady Scott; "Cork Convent, near Cintra," from a drawing by C. Stanfield, A.R.A., after a sketch by Captain Elliot; "Castle of Ferrara," from a drawing by S. Prout; "Ianthe," from a drawing by R. Westall, R.A., after the original picture painted Looking over the town, towards the east, is a might be made sacred to the remembrance of at the request of Lord Byron; "Petrarch's vast plain, nearly forty miles in extent, called the bard who has immortalised them. The Tomb, Arqua," from a drawing by G. Cattermole; and "Seville," the name of the drafts- | All save the women in this boon rejoice: man of which does not appear. With the exception of "The Castle of Ferrara," which is engraved by T. Higham, and "Ianthe," which is engraved by W. Finden, they are all engraved by E. Finden. Among the views we have no particular favourite; they appear to us to be equally charming: but we were especially struck with the happy manner in which groups of figures are introduced into "Venice," "Petrarch's Tomb," and "The Castle of Ferrara."

The head of "Ianthe" is full of ethereal grace and loveliness.

The Popular Portrait Gallery of Illustrious and Eminent Persons. Engraved by Messrs. Branston and Wright; illustrated with Biographical Sketches. Part I.

ALTHOUGH we fear that wood will never fornish means for the production of perfectly satisfactory portrait, we confess our surprise at the exceedingly moderate price at which the publishers of this work are bringing it out. Of the six heads which this part contains, the best is that of young Napoleon, the worst that of his father. The others are heads of Sir Walter Scott, Earl Grey, Lord Byron, and Lord Brougham. They all possess a certain degree of resemblance.

The Courier. Painted by W. Kidd; engraved by W. Carlos. Ackermann and Co.
This ludicrous print represents two boys (the hindmost a chimney-sweeper) galloping on an ass from a prize-fight in the distance, and donkeyand riders alike displaying by their countenances the interest they take in the business. The execution is very fair, and the design likely to be popular in the sporting circles, chiefly addressed by it, as well as in amateur variorum collections.

ORIGINAL POETRY. EPILOGUE.

Prompter's bell - Prompter calling, " Mrs. Humby, Mrs. Humby." Enter Mrs. HUMBY, O.P. putting on an apron and adjusting her dress.

WELL, well! bless me! Why, what a clatter I'm half undress'd-pray, what's the matter? The curtain's down-the comedy is o'er-I'm sure I can't be wanted any more.

Going to Prompter. What is it? Eh? The epilogue to speak? Bless me! to learn it I shall take a week. There's Mrs. Nesbitt, Mrs. Jones, Miss Cawse Pray, send for them-they'll gain you more applause.

Gone home !--upon my word, in each mishap, Poor Mrs. Humby must fill up the gap. 'Tis always thus, I think :- Do this, do that, As though poor I, in every part, was pat. Play, farce, or interlude—nowhere, now there— 'Tis little Humby here, and there, and every where.

In short, they seem to think poor Mrs. Humby Can play you every single thing-but dumby Well, if I must-What subject shall I take, On which this stupid epilogue to make? I have it, sirs! and, if you've no objections, I'll say a word or two about elections ; And canvass all who warm and snugly sit In gallery, in boxes, and in pit. For, in these days, it is a thing of note, That every single he who wears a coat-And he without one __ can command a vote.

How strange that woman only wants a voice! For my part, though, I'll never be contented Until King, Lords, and Commons, have consented

To have each present Miss - Mis-represented Then, in the Commons, men would be the weaker.

For every woman would set up for Speaker. Gloves, fans, and lace, that tempt the female starers.

Should be as free from duty-as their wearers And we, by a majority of voices, then, Would soon, good dames, tax nothing but the men-

Tax them with folly-tax their folly, too; Tax lovers with their falsehood, when untrue. By means like these, the people of our nation Could ne'er complain of an unfair taxation; Since, did we tax the follies of the day, There's not a man that would not have to pay.

But hold—I had forgot—you represent To-night our great dramatic parliament. You are the fair dispensers of those laws Which still maintain the drama's sinking cause. A homely welcome for a foreign bard I seek; and pray, sirs, tax him not too hard For all the venial errors of his play-For if you rate him much, he'll never pay. Your votes then now are in his favour pray'd

Quite independent, though your seats are paid

DRAMA. DRURY LANE.

On Tuesday appeared the new comedy, Men of Pleasure, by Don Telesforo de Trueba. It certainly has some of the pleasures of memory, but is an agreeable rifacimento, and the scenes are carried along with both animation and interest. There is matrimony in all its branches; one couple to be re-united, another to be parted, and a third to be joined together by what is now-a-days confined to the stage, viz. an elopement, (we mean as far as single ladies are concerned - it is the mother, not the daughter, who runs away). The serious part is the best, and is taken from Mézéres' well-written play, Chacun de son Coté. Macready, as the husband, lessoned by bitter experience into repentance, gave the expression of equal truth and feeling; while Miss Phillips, who both looked and acted most sweetly, resented with much spirit, and forgave with much tenderness. We never heard Macready's voice in greater music; the melody and pathos of his tones were alone enough to obtain the pardon for which he pleaded. The plot of Lord and Lady Bellenden's separation and reparation somewhat reminds us of Mrs. Gore's Separate Maintenance, though we believe the original hint for both play and tale is to be found in a French comedy. There were some very amusing detached scenes: one, where a French cook, well acted by Balls, is mistaken by some rich parvenues for a French count destined as a lover for their daughter, was exceedingly amusing; the personal cari-cature of the dress, imitating the costume of a well-known foreign nobleman now in London, instantly told. Farren had a good character, which he made still better; a husband who " adores his wife in private, but must in public follow the fashion." The scene where he hands her into the chaise waiting for herself and lover, and his bribing the post-boy to drive fast, never the lady, was as new as it was comic. Sir Maurice O'Driscoll had nothing to do but to be entertaining, and in that Power effectually succeeded. The piece proceeded amid much laughter, and deep attention to the graver scenes; and it was not till after the curtain fell, that a noisy and partial opposition com-menced. The ayes, however, had it; and on the second night of its performance, curtailed and improved, it was completely successful. Some coarse expressions, which had called down marked and just disapprobation the first night. were omitted; and we take this opportunity of expressing our surprise that such should ever have been hazarded - but in this respect the stage is singularly behind the taste of the age. We conclude by observing, that the ladies were very badly dressed. Miss Phillips' ball-dress cannot be too soon discarded. We must also say, that the mazurka ought to be dancedit would be eminently successful.

A farce called the Election was revived, and d-d most justly, on Thursday.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Monday Virginius was performed at this house; and, with one or two exceptions, we can neither compliment the manager for the getting up, nor the actors on the manner in which it was performed. Mr. Sheridan Knowles played Virginius, and a most unequal performance it was—scarcely a scene without its beauties, but sadly overpowered by blemishes, and altogether very inferior to either his Hunchback or William Tell. Warde was perfect as Dentatus; and Ellen Tree portrayed Virginia to the life. Of the rest, bad was the best.

ADELPHI.

A NOVELTY, called the Owlet's Nest, has been added to the already rich stock of nightly entertainments at this theatre. Its main support is in Reeve, a sort of Caleb Quotem character, and he is highly amusing throughout.

OLYMPIC.

A NEW piece at this theatre, under the title of P. Q. affords Mrs. Orger a fine opportunity for displaying her versatile talents. She assumes a variety of disguises, and is very clever and very laughable in them all. We wanted something good to make amends for the absence of Liston-unfortunately, for the lovers of true comic humour, on the sick-list.

UNREHEARSED STAGE EFFECTS.

Drury Lane. Dec. 8 .- Mrs. Glover of late indulges much in gag. Til's bonnet in Second Thoughts is ever a prolific source. In the Clandestine Marriage, as Mrs. Heidelberg, having forced Miss Cawse (as the chambermaid) on her knees, she said, "Do you know nothing of Sir John's intended elopement with Fanny? No, I suppose you have enough to do to take care of those ringlets of yours! Here she pulled Miss C.'s ringlets, and shook her till she knocked the candle out of its holder; and on Miss C.'s endeavouring to replace it, went on with "Leave off fumbling that filthy candle, and answer me," &c. Cooper as the Brigand, which the actors respectively call Briggand, Brigande, and Brigong, was so confused, that he corrected and recorrected nearly every word he spoke. "He will return at sunset, rise, sunset." "The grasping steward of St. Arsaph, Arnsdorf, Arnolds, &c. What can be more absurd than the breaking of the hollow stick, out of which fall nine or ten round pieces of tin, to represent for a moment misdoubting his own interest in "from nine to ten thousand ducats?"

[•] We have been favoured with a copy of the epilogue written by Mr. Beazley, and intended for the new comedy. Though not spoken, we think it too good to be lost.— Bd. L. G.

Covent Garden. Dec. 10.—In Virginius the so much calculated to excite public sympathy, forum scene is twice exhibited; but as Virginius doth not, as Mungo says, "kill her two time," the shop with the knife in it is erected on the second exhibition of the scene only. It is very clever and considerate of the shop- that the Abbotsford Subscription is proceeding man to foresee and provide for the necessities with steady steps to the wished-for conclusion, of the Roman father. Mr. Knowles knows but little of stage business, and slew his daughter so completely beyond the scope of the committee have, we believe, adjourned for the curtain, that I feared she must inevitably holydays; but this does not impede the progress be shut out; Mrs. Vining, however, as Servia, of the good work. and a carpenter, as himself, came forward and literally dragged her several feet back along the narrative in our last, a medal has been the baize, barely rescuing her at last. When shewn to us, which was struck on the occa-Claudius and his abettors were trying to sion of the birth of the Duke of Bourdeaux. establish the point that Virginia was not the On one side is represented the mother, in daughter of Virginius, a man uprose in the a Greek costume and on a Greek couch, pit, and with the voice of a Stentor, bawled holding up an infant amid rays of light from out, "Why whose daughter is she then?" the upper circle: around, the legend, Dieu The effect was electric; the whole of the nous donné: below the couch, at the top of audience and the actors turned to the spot which is a bust of the murdered prince, is whence the query came; and amidst an up- inscribed "Nos caurs et nos bras sont à lui." roar which put the play, at the utmost pitch On the other side is an armed angel, trampof its interest, to a dead stand still for many ling on a monster, half human, half dragon, minutes, the interested but inconsiderate in-holding a torch in one hand and a dagger quirer was dragged neck and heels out of the in the other. Date, 29th Sept. 1820. It is of house. Appius and Virginius once more fixed copper, and cleverly executed. their angry eyes upon each other, and the fair object of the inquiry sank again into the faint-to notice the death of this intelligent and me-ing fit from which she had awoke to gaze ritorious officer, who died in the Emulous, on and listen at the audience part of the performance. The friends of Virginius wore their mourning over their togas, so that they looked like walking bundles of raiment, more especially Julius (Vining), whose mourning literally and truly consisted of a brown street cloak, with a velvet collar of the year 32. Why, when an actor is called forward, after playing a principal part, does he come on puffing and blowing, and looking as if he could scarcely move, stand, or breathe? If his part had been half an hour longer, if it had contained another energetic descent, and full of activity. It seems that he speech or two, with energetic action, before it was over, he would have gone through them pation, and died after a very short illness. with unabated force; but the mere circumstance of the curtain having come down, and a quarter of a minute having elapsed, almost incapacitates give a more detailed account in our next. A him from hobbling three or four steps, and gasping out "L-l-ladies -a-a and gen ——" All theatricals know what the puffing system is_this should be distinguished as the blowing system: it originated, I think, with Charles every sort of publication; and among the rest, Kemble.

niest little soldier in St. Patrick's Eve you one of these variously useful productions, with ever saw. It is made of pasteboard, and walks ten under the name of Marshall's, and an to and fro à la distance as a sentinel; but, addenda of six others; in all thirty-seven! being quite flat, whenever he turns round, he Those before us are, 1. Fulcher's Ladies' Mevanishes for a minute altogether, like Hood's morandum-Book (from Sudbury); a very neat spoilt child, which was mashed so flat that, and well-arranged pocket-book. Enigmas, pretty when picked up, the spectators did not see it original poetry (the first piece, on a dying at all, because the nurse held it edgeways child, by Mr. Fulcher himself we suspect from towards them!

that the subscription for this patriotic experimental with well-scrobed care, and dition proceeds auspiciously, though, perhaps, ture is of prose sketches, poems, songs, &c.; hardly sufficient means have been taken to and music, with some useful tables. 3. Le bring it fully into public notice. The City of London, the Duchess of Kent, the Princess scape, at the tops of the pages, have original Victoria, and, above all, the Hudson's Bay merit; the almanac is right, and the tables, Company, have come forward in the noblest lists of sovereigns, parliament, officers of state, manner to support it. Captain Back will pro- &c. as ample as any we have seen. 4. Ladies bably set out on his interesting mission next Polite Remembrancer. Quite a young lady's month, with the heartfelt good-wishes of his book-pretty poetry, soft and sweet engravings, country to cheer him on his difficult and peril- selections from recent works, and accounts of ous way. Certainly there never was a journey fares, monarchs, bankers, stamps, &c.

whether we consider the general object, or the individual devotedness to attain it.

The Abbotsford Subscription. - It will be seen by the advertisement in our paper to-day, even in the midst of the elections, so much engrossing public attention. The managing

Duchess of Berry. - As a commentary on

Capt. Lyon.-It is with great regret we have his voyage home to England.

Professor Rask. - Literature has lost one of its greatest ornaments by the death of Professor Rask, of which accounts have reached us from Copenhagen. He was not inferior to the first philologists of the age, and his entire life was devoted to the most useful inquiries connected with human knowledge.

Grimaldi, jun .- The newspapers contain a notice of the death of this Clown, clever by had impaired his health by continual dissi-

Buddhist Temple.-We can only notice this very interesting exhibition, of which we shall genuine Buddhist Temple, with all its accessories, is an object of great curiosity and in-

Pocket-Books ... we have now several pocket-books under our Drury Lane. Dec. 11.—There is the fun-jeve. Messrs. Suttaby's list contains twentythe initials, is very natural and pathetic), by B. Barton, Mary Howitt, &c.; and selections VARIETIES.

Arctic Expedition. — We rejoice to learn shall's Cabinet of Fashion is numerously em-

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Dr. Boott is preparing for publication, in two octavo volumes, to be published in January, a Memoir of the Life and Medical Opinions of Dr. Armstrong, late Physician of the Fever Institution of London, and Author of Practical Illustrations of Typhus and Scarlet Fever; to which will be added, an Inquiry into the Facts connected with those Forms of Fever attributed to Malaria and Marsh Effluvium.

Marsh Effluvium.

A French Translation of Miss Edgeworth's Frank, Rosamond, Harry and Lucy, &c., by Madame L. Belloe, of whom we had occasion to speak in our Gazette, as a lady of considerable literary reputation at Paris.

We hear with pleasure that Mr. Sotheby intends to illustrate the new edition of his Translation of the lilad, and forthcoming Translation of the Odyssey, with no fewer than seventy-five of Flaxman's admirable designs.

M. Wilhelm Klauer Klattowski is now in Paris, it is said, occupied in collecting materials for an Icelandic and Runic Manual.

Select Illustrations of Hampshire: with Historical and

and Runic Manual.

Select Illustrations of Hampshire; with Historical and Topographical Descriptions, by G. F. Prosser.

A Series of Portraits of the Principal Characters and Persons described in the Life and Poetical Works of Lord Byron, is announced for publication, from Drawings

by D. Lynch.
Maternal Advice, chiefly to Daughters on leaving

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Turner's Annual Tour, royal 8vo. 2l. 2r. mor. elegant: India proofs before letters, 4l. 4s.—Marcet's Tales for very Young Children, the Seasons, Winter, 18mo. 2s. hft.-bd.—Happy Week, or Holydays at Beechwood, 18mo. 4s. 6d. bd.—Dover's Frederick, 2d edition, 2 vols. 3vo. 4ss. bds.—Ashkinson on Marketable Titles, 8vo. 24s. bds.—Shelford on the Law of Lunatics, 8vo. 28s. bds.—Alkinson on Marketable Titles, 8vo. 24s. bds.—Shelford on the Law of Lunatics, 8vo. 28s. bds.—Alkinson on Marketable Titles, 8vo. 24s. bds.—Shelford on the Law of Lunatics, 8vo. 28s. bds.—Shelford on 1832, Vol. XII. 6s. bds.—Eds.—Shelford on 1832, Vol. XII. 6s. bds.—Eds.—Shelford on 1832, Vol. XII. 6s. bds.—Shelford on 1832, Vol. XII. 6s. bds.—Shelford on 1832, Vol. 3d. and 3l, 2 vols. 8vo. 1l. 1ls. 6d. bds.—Coventry on 1833, 1ls. sd.—Christmas Carols, ancient and modern, cr. 8vo. 12s. cloth.—Traits and Stories of Irish Peasantry, 2d series, 3 vols. post 8vo. 1l. 1ls. 6d. bds.—Coventry on the Stamp Laws, Vol. I. 8vo. 15s. bds.—Lodge's Genealogy, 8vo. 16s. cloth.—Investigator, Vol. I. 8vo. 10s. bds.—Vale of Light, and Vale of Death, 18mo. 1s. 6d. cloth.—Tales of the Manse, 1st series, St. Kentigern, edited by Hugh Hay, 12mo. 6s. bds.—Lights and Shadows of German Life, 2 vols. 8vo. 21s. bds.—Hall's Works, Vol. Vl. containing Memoirs by Dr. Gregory and Mr. Foster, 8vo. 16s. bds.—Cols. bds. Schoth.—A Harmony of the Four Gospels, on the Plan of Greswell's Harmonia Evangelica, 8vo. 12s. bds.—Hall's Works, Vol. Vl. containing Memoirs by Dr. Gregory and Mr. Foster, 8vo. 16s. bds.—Life, silk.—The Thempoor Original Fables, with eighty-five Designs by R. Crutkshank, 8vo. 12s. cloth; 18t. silk.—The Mother's Story Book, by Mrs. Child, 18mo. 3s. bds.; 3s. 6d. roan.—Dunlap's American Theatre, 2 vols. 8vo. 28s. bds.—The Transactions of the Royal Geological Society of Cornwall, Vol. 1V. 8vo. 16s.

-We are called upon to notice METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

December.		Thermometer.				Barometer.
	Thursday · · 6	From				29.98	to	30-06
	Friday · · · · 7	1	33.		43.	30-14	• •	30.24
	Saturday 8		32.		44.	30.24	• •	30.29
	Sunday 9		35.		47.	30.30	Stat	ionary
	Monday · · 10		34.		49.	30.29	• •	30.24
	Tuesday · · 11		30.		48.	30.27	• •	30.35
	Wadnesday 19	1	35.		47.	30.35		30.29

Prevailing wind, S.W. Except the 11th, cloudy; mizzling rain at times on the h and 8th. Rain fallen, 2 of an inch.

Edmonton.

CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Latitude ····· 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude ··· 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received the letter signed C. D. with the Sheffield post mark, and forwarded the enclosure, 20% to its destination.

its destination.

To L. R. H. we must reply, that whether we consider lines "altogether unworthy of a place" in our Gazette or not, there may be sufficient cause for declining their insertion; which, between the writers and us, is tantamount to the same end.

We have glanced over the Lauread, which is sufficiently bitter and personal; so much so, that we must take time to consider it.

Slades Travels in Turkey, Greece, &c. reached us too.

Slade's Travels in Turkey, Greece, &c. reached us too late for review this week: we like the parts we have dipped into much, as the narrative seems to be light and

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

THE ABBOTSFORD SUBSCRIPTION.

The support and assistance given by the late Sir Walter Scott, in 1826, to his booksellers, involved him in the ruin which fell upon their establishment, to an extent alike unexpected and unprepared for, but which ultimately proved not less than 120 1886. Rainous as this demand must have been, it is yet obvious, that after surrendering to its parment the whole of his property, he might have secured to himself and his family the fruit of his subsequent evertions, and realised from his later works not less than 70,000. The whole of this sum, with whatever more a lengthened life might have enabled him to obtain, he, with manly and concientious teeling, appropriated to the hencht of his creditors. In thus devoting his talents to the acquittal of obligations not originally, though legally his own, he laboured with a degree of assiduity, and an intensences of anxiety, which shortened his existence by over-trained intellectual exertion. He lived not indeed to the property and converging he had secured, when added to the property and converging his revisionally destined for the support of his family, enabled them, by incurring deep personal responsibility, to satisfy nearly the whole amount of these decits, for which their father had been property and comparing the his children. Such were the stainless and irreproachable principles of that mind, whose intellectual power was only equalled by its moral worth; and from this plain statement, those who have long and justing appreciated the writings of Scott, may learn to love and venerate his virtues. It is thought that no memorial can be to appropriate to his name as the permanent maintenance of the house which his residence has rendered classical, and the preservation of a library and collection of national antiquities, which his admirable tast selected, and which his genus made available to they and content to expect, from a nation so justly proud of his fame, that in requistal for so many hours of pleasure derived from his writings, they wi THE ABBOTSFORD SUBSCRIPTION.

The support and assistance given by the late Sir Walter H. R. H. the Duchess of [Frederick Pollock, Esq.

H. R. H. the Duchess of			١	Frederick Pollock, Esq.	23
	00 5	0 (M.P. Lord John Russell, M.P.		5
Lord Ashley	•		۷	Jesse Watts Russell, Esq.	95	ŏ.
Sir Thos. Dyke Acland, Bt. M.F.	50	0	6	William Stewart Rose,	.,	۰
Geo. Anderson, Esq.	ĩ		ö	Esq.	10	10
Rich. Atkinson, Esq.	i			G. Robinson, Esq.		10
Viscount Barrington,	•	•	٦	J. J. Richardson, Esq.	ĭ	ï
M.P.	10	0	o	The Duchess of St. Al-	•	•
Hon. Sir Chas. Bagot,	••				00	0
Hon. Sir Chas. Bagot, G.C.B.	25	0	o!	The Marchioness of	•	•
Bir F. Burdett, Bt. M.P.	10	0	ŏĺ	Stafford	25	0
D. Munro Binning, Esq.	5			Hugh Scott, Esq. of		-
Mrs. D. M. Binning	5	0			40	0
W. H. Balllie, E.q.	10			Mrs. H. Scott, of ditto	10	0
- Burgess, Esq.	0	5	o:	Sir James Shaw, Bart.	50	0
B. Beth II, Esq.	1	1	01	Rear-Admiral Sir Gco.
W. J. Blake	ī	1	ol	Scott	5	0
C. Bowyer	1	1	o!	Lady Scott	5	0
Rt. Hon. J. W. Croker,			Ų	Mr. Serceant Spankie	10	10
M.P.	10	0	0	The Earl of Stanhope	5	0
Mrs. Croker	2	0	o,	Counters Stanhope	3	0
Lord Bishop of Chi-			ŀ	Sir E. B. Sugden, Bart.
chester	10	0	0	M.P.	15	θ
Rt. Hon. Sir Stratford			- 1	H. Fk. Stephenson, Esq.
Canning, G.C.B.	5		01	M.P.	1	1
Lady Canning	1	0	01	Robert Scott, Esq.	15	0
J. H. Christie, Esq.	5	0	O:	Sir Coutte Trotter, Bart.	50	0
Allan Cunningham, Esc.	2	0	0,	Sir Jeffrey Wyatville,
J. Cunningham, Esq. Alex. Cunningham, Esq.	1	0	0		10	01
Alex Cunningham, Esq.	1	0	0	R. A. Dundas, M.P.	10	0
Lady Campbell	1	0	0	C. Demergue, Esq.	10	10
- Churchill, Esq.	0	5	0	W. B. Demergue, Esq.	5	5
At Messrs. Coutts and	Co.	٠			- 5	0
				Rev. H. Drury
Sir Edmend Antrobus,			1	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N.	. 5	5
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt.	25	0	0	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesers. Drummer	ď	. 5
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq.	25	0	0	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drummer Captain C. Bagot	g'	- ⁵
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick	25 10 20	0	0	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesars. Drummes Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles	30 30 30	5
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq.	25	0	0	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drummes Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn	90 90 90	5000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adelphus,	25 10 20 10	0 0	0	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drummer Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hv. Ellia	90 90 90 5	5 0005
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adelphus, Esq.	95 10 90 10	0 0	0	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drummer Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hv. Ellia	1d'1 20 20 20 5 25	5 0 0 0 5 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Bt. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adelphus, Esq. Jno. Barrow, Req.	25 10 20 10	0 0	0	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R. N. At Mesars. Drummer Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis karl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq.	ad'i 20 20 5 25 20	5 000500
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. Jno. Barrew, Esq. R. Vaughan Barnewall.	95 10 90 10 5	0000	000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesars. Drummer Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq.	90 90 90 5 90 10	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. Jno. Barrew, Esq. R. Vaughan Barnewall.	95 10 90 10 5 5	0000 00 00	00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesars. Drummes Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. Marquess of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury	90 90 5 95 95 95 95 95 95	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bi. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. Jno. Barrew, Req. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. Charles Bayfield, Esq.	95 10 90 10 5 5	0000 00 00	00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesars. Drummes Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. Marquess of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury	20 20 20 25 25 20 10 25 10	5 00050000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. Jno. Barrew, Req. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bodkin, Esq.	95 10 90 10 5 5	0000 00 00	00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesars. Drummes Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. Marquess of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury	20 20 20 5 25 20 10 25 10 5	5 000500000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adelphus, Esq. Jao. Barrew, Esq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Etq. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bodkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq.	95 10 90 10 5 5 10 8 90	0000 00 00	00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesars. Drummes Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. Marquess of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury Markhones of Salisbury	20 20 25 25 25 20 10 25 10 5 5	5 0005000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Addphus, Esq. Jno. Barrew, Rsq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq.	95 10 90 10 5 5 10 8 90 3	0000 00 00	00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowlee Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. Marquess of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury The Countess of Surrey R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel	20 5 20 10 25 10 5 5 5	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 5 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceurer Adaphus, Jno. Barrew, Baq. L. Laghan Barnewall, Esq. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Req. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, W. Matthew Coulthurst, W. Matthew Coulthurst,	25 10 20 10 5 5 5 10 0 8 20 30 30 30 30 30 30 30 30 30 30 30 30 30	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 3	000 00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesart. Drunname Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. M. Hay. Est, W. Hay. Est, M. Hay. Est, Marchiones of Saitabuty Marchioness of Saitabuty The Countess of Surrey R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconel Sir Franch Freeling, Bt.	1d's 20 20 5 25 20 10 25 5 5 20 20	5 0005000000000000000000000000000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Addphus, Esq. Jno. Barrew, Req. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq.	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 3 20 3 3	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowlee Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. Marquess of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury The Countess of Surger R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq.	1d's 20 20 5 25 20 10 10 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5 5	5 000500000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Req. J. Leyceuter Adolphus, Jao. Barrew, Req. L. Yaughan Barnewall, C. Eq. E. Say, S. Sayfield, Esq. W. El. Bedkin, Req. W. Clowes, Eq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam	25 10 20 10 5 5 5 10 0 3 20 3 3 20 3 20 3 20 3 20 3 20 3	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesar. Drunnane Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Eaq. G. Robertson, Esq. Marquess of Saluthury The Countres of Sarrey R. Simmon, Euq. The Earl of Tyrconel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Eng. Hugh Prayer, Eaq.	1d's 20 20 5 25 20 10 25 5 5 20 20	5 0005000000000000000000000000000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bt. Bt. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Req. J. Leyceuter Adolphus, Jao. Barrew, Req. L. Yaughan Barnewall, C. Eq. E. Say, S. Sayfield, Esq. W. El. Bedkin, Req. W. Clowes, Eq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam	25 10 20 10 5 5 5 10 0 3 20 3 3 20 3 20 3 20 3 20 3 20 3	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00000000000000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunmes Captain C. Bigot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Eq. G. Robertson, Eq. Marquess of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury The Countess of Surrey R. Simmons, Eq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Precling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Enq. Hugh Praser, Eq. The Duffer, Eq.	20 20 5 25 10 5 5 5 5 5 5 5	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 5
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leyceuter Adolphus, Jno. Barrew, Raq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. William Sander Sander Leq. W. Clowets Sander J. Conneil, Esq. W. Clowets Conneil, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Esq. The Conplexity Sander Leq. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. Matthew Coulthurst Leq. Matthew Coulthurs	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 8 20 30 30 20 20 5 5 5 5 5 5 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9 9	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 0000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunning Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. List Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Karl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. Marquess of Suirsbury Marchioness of Suirsbury Marchioness of Suirsbury The Barl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Preeding, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C.B.	20 5 5 20 10 5 5 5 10 5 5 10	5 0005000000000000000000000000000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Addphus, Esq. Jao. Barrew, Raq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M.I. Rev. W. Conjbeare Lord Dungle	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 8 20 20 20 20 5 5 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunmes Captain C. Bigot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Eq. G. Robertson, Eq. Marquess of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury The Countess of Surrey R. Simmons, Eq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Precling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Eol, Hugh Praser, Eq. The Dayle of Gordon, G.C.B. W. Grecson, Eq.	20 5 25 20 10 5 5 5 10 5	5 000500000000000000000000000000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. R. Vsughan Barnewall, Esq. WH. Bedtun, Esq. WH. Bedtun, Esq. W. Grand Couldness W. Grand Couldness W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. W. Complexe W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. Complexe Lord Dunglas J. B. Duruset, Esq. M. J	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 3 20 20 20 20 5 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. List Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Karl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. The Countes of Suirabury Marchioness of Suirabury Marchioness of Suirabury The Countess of Surrey R. Simmonn, Esq. The Countes of Surrey R. Simmonn, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C.B. W. Gregson, Esq. G. Gregson, Esq. George Gordon, Esq.	20 20 25 20 10 25 5 5 10 5 2	5 0005000000000000000000000000000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Addphus, Esq. Jno. Barrew, Raq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M. Rev. W. Conjbeare Lord Dunglas J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq.	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 8 20 3 20 20 20 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drunnme Captain C. Bigot Rev. W. Lisle Bowlee Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Eq. G. Robertson, Eq. Marquess of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury Marchioness of Salisbury The Countess of Surrey R. Simmons, Eq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Eq. Hugh Praser, Eq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C.B. W. Gregson, Eq. George Gordon, Eq. George Gordon, Eq.	20 20 25 20 10 25 5 10 5 2 1 5 . 1	5 0005000000000000000000000000000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. Leyeurer Adolphus, Esq. Jao. Barrew, Esq. R. Vsughan Barnewall, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Conneil, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, The Esq. Gollawilliam John Campbell, Esq. M. Rev. W. Copheare Lord Dunglas J. B. Durust, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. C. W. Englebach, Esq.	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 3 20 20 20 5 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 0000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liste Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Karl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. The Countes of Suirsbury Marchioness of Suirsbury Marchioness of Suirsbury The Countes of Surger The Countes of Surger The Ducke of Ground Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. U. Gregon, Esq. U. Gregon, Esq. U. Gregon, Esq. Thouchas, Geldart, Esq. At Messr. Cossing and S.	20 20 25 20 10 25 5 10 5 2 1 5 . 1	5 0005000000000000000000000000000000000
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Beq. J. Leyceuter Adolphus, Jacker C. Advick Jan Barrewall, Evangan Barnewall, Evangan Ba	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 3 20 20 20 5 5 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesar. Drunnane Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Liale Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Bills Earl Welley, Esq. (G. Robertson, Esq. Marquess of Salichury Marchioness of Salichury The Countess of Salichury The Countess of Sarrey R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. Hugh Fraesr, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, W. Gregon, Esq. George Gordon, Esq. George Gordon, Esq. Thos. Chas. Geldart, Esq. At Mesars. Goldart, Esq.	20 20 25 20 10 25 5 10 5 2 1 5 . 1	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Lag. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Lag. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Baq. W. H. Bodkin, Req. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M. J Rev. W. Conybeare Lord Dungias J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson Life Co. W. Englebach, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 8 20 3 20 20 10 10 5 5 10 0 8 20 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Karl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. The Countess of Surrey, Marchioness of Surrey, Marchioness of Surrey R. Simmons, Esq. The Sant of Tyrconnel Sty Francis Freeling, Bt. Hugh Pract, E. G.C.B. W. Gregson, Esq. G. Coregson, Esq. Grove, Gooling and J. Herman Merrivaic, Esq.	20 20 5 25 20 10 5 20 5 5 10 5 2 10 har	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Lag. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Lag. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceurer Adolphus, Baq. W. H. Bodkin, Req. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M. J Rev. W. Conybeare Lord Dungias J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson Life Co. W. Englebach, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 8 20 20 20 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. The Courtes of Surery, Marchioness of Surery R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. Hugh Fraver, Esq. W. G. Colon, Esq. Corore, Gordon, Esq. Corore, Gordon, Esq. Thos. Chas. Geldart, Esq. At Messrs. Gesing and S. J. Herman Merrivaic, Esq. Lord Henley Rt. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- Rev. M. Sir J. C. Hob-	20 20 5 25 20 10 5 20 5 5 10 5 2 10 har	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Conneil, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. D. Conneil, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. J. Conneil, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. Controlled Clanvilliam John Compbell, Esq. M. J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. C. W. Englebach, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson Lord P. Leveson Glower William Gray, Esq. Rev. E. C. Hawtrey	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 8 20 20 20 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunnam Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Est. G. W. Holler, G. Surrey R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. Hugh Fraser, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C. B. W. Gregson, Esq. Growth G. G. G. G. At Messrs, Gosting and S. J. Herman Merrivate, Jord Henley R. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- house, Bt. M. P.	20 20 5 25 20 10 5 20 5 5 10 5 2 10 har	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 10 10 10 10
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceure Adolphus, Lag. J. Leyceure Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceure Adolphus, Baq. J. Leyceure Adolphus, Baq. J. Son, Barrew, Baq. K. Haghan Barnewall, Esq. K. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Goulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M.J Rev. W. Conpbeare Lord Dungias J. B. Duruset, Esq. Antiree Dickle, Esq. Antiree Dickle, Esq. Phys. Roberts and Lord P. Leveson Gower William Gray, Esq. Rev. E. C. Hawtrey, Rev. E. C. Hawtrey Rev. Ber. Co. Hawtrey Rev. E. C. Hawtrey Rev. Bay David Halburton, Baq. Rev. E. C. Hawtrey Rev. E. C. Hawtrey Rev. E. C. Hawtrey Rev. Bay David Halburton, Bay Rev. Bay David Halburton, Bay Rev. E. C. Hawtrey Rev. E. C. Hawt	255 10 20 10 5 5 5 10 8 20 3 3 20 5 5 10 10 5 5 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunnam Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Est. G. W. Holler, G. Surrey R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. Hugh Fraser, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C. B. W. Gregson, Esq. Growth G. G. G. G. At Messrs, Gosting and S. J. Herman Merrivate, Jord Henley R. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- house, Bt. M. P.	20 20 5 20 10 25 5 5 10 5 5 10 10 10 10	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 1
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Req. II. J. Leycester Adolphus, Leg. J. Leycester Adolphus, Leg. J. Leycester Adolphus, Barewall, Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bodkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M. J Rev. W. Coppeare Lord Dunglas J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. C. W. Englebach, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson Lord F. Leverson Giower West, D. G. Haberton, D. G. Haberton, D. Sayles, Lord David Hallburton, David Hallburton, Esq. Jon. Nidney Herbert Mestrs. Longman and C.	95 10 20 10 5 5 5 10 8 90 3 3 90 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	000 00 00000 00000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesar. Drunname Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Bowless of Surrey The Countess of Surrey The Dunce of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C.B. W. Gregson, Esq. Ground Henge The Chas. Geldart, Esq. At Mesars, Gosting and J. Herman Merrivaic, Lord Henley R. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- house, Bt. M.P. Sir H. Halford, Bart. G.C.B.	20 20 5 20 10 25 5 5 10 5 5 10 10 10 10	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Req. II. J. Leycester Adolphus, Leg. J. Leycester Adolphus, Leg. J. Leycester Adolphus, Barewall, Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bodkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M. J Rev. W. Coppeare Lord Dunglas J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. C. W. Englebach, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson Lord F. Leverson Giower West, D. G. Haberton, D. G. Haberton, D. Sayles, Lord David Hallburton, David Hallburton, Esq. Jon. Nidney Herbert Mestrs. Longman and C.	95 10 20 10 5 5 5 10 8 90 3 3 90 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0	000 00 00000 00000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Mesar. Drunname Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Bowless of Surrey The Countess of Surrey The Dunce of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C.B. W. Gregson, Esq. Ground Henge The Chas. Geldart, Esq. At Mesars, Gosting and J. Herman Merrivaic, Lord Henley R. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- house, Bt. M.P. Sir H. Halford, Bart. G.C.B.	20 20 5 20 10 25 5 10 5 20 5 5 10 10 10 10	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alvick John Adolphus, Req. II. J. Leycester Adolphus, Leg. J. Leycester Adolphus, Leg. J. Leycester Adolphus, Barewall, Charles Bayfield, Esq. W. H. Bodkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Connell, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M. J Rev. W. Coppeare Lord Dunglas J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. C. W. Englebach, Esq. Dr. Robert Ferguson Lord F. Leverson Giower West, D. G. Haberton, D. G. Haberton, D. Sayles, Lord David Hallburton, David Hallburton, Esq. Jon. Nidney Herbert Mestrs. Longman and C.	$5 10 $0 10 5 5 5 10 0 8 $20 5 5 10 10 20 5 5 10 10 5 5 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 00000 00000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunnam Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Est. G. W. Holler, G. Surrey R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. Hugh Fraser, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C. B. W. Gregson, Esq. Growth G. G. G. G. At Messrs, Gosting and S. J. Herman Merrivate, Jord Henley R. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- house, Bt. M. P.	20 5 25 20 10 5 5 5 10 5 2 1 1 10 10 5	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. Jao. Barrew, Esq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Conneil, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M.J Rev. W. Conjbeare Lord Dungia J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. C.W. Englebach, Esq. D.W. Englebach, Esq. D.W. Englebach, Esq. C.W. Conjbeare William Gray, Esq. Rev. E. C. Hawtrey David Hallburton, Esq. Hon. Sidney Herbert Mestrs. Longman and Co George Loch, Esq. Thomas Lemon, Esq.	95 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 8 90 9 5 5 10 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 0000 000000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Elils Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. The Countes of Surey, Marchioness of Suisbury Marchioness of Surey R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Foliett, Esq. Hugh Fraser, Esq. The Dake of Gordon, G.C.H. W. Gregson, Esq. Ground Grown, Esq. Than Marrivaic, Esq. Lond Henley Rt. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- house, Bt. M.P. Sir H. Halford, Bart. G. C.H. Dr. Holland H. Hallam, Esq. John Hughes, Esq.	20 5 25 20 10 5 5 5 10 5 2 1 10 10 10 5 5	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Req. U. J. Leyceuter Adolphus, Esq. U. Leyceuter Adolphus, Esq. U. Leyceuter Adolphus, Esq. U. Leyceuter Bayfield, Esq. U. Closellibon, Esq. John I och, Esq. M. P. John Morre, Esa.	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 3 20 20 5 5 10 1 20 5 5 10 10 5 5 10 10 5 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 0000 000000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunname Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Eaq. G. Robertson, Esq. Marquess of Salusbury The Countens of Salusbury The Countens of Salusbury The Countens of Sarrey R. Simmons, Eq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C.B. W. Gregson, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Hallerman Mertivaic, Esq. Lord Henley Let Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- Sir H. Halford, Bart. G.C.B. Dr. Holland H. Hallam, Esq. John Hughes, Esq.	20 20 25 20 10 25 5 5 10 5 2 1 10 10 5 5 10 20 5	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Req. U. J. Leyceuter Adolphus, Esq. U. Leyceuter Adolphus, Esq. U. Leyceuter Adolphus, Esq. U. Leyceuter Bayfield, Esq. U. Closellibon, Esq. John I och, Esq. M. P. John Morre, Esa.	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 3 20 20 5 5 10 1 20 5 5 10 10 5 5 10 10 5 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 0000 000000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messrs. Drunnme Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisle Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Elils Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Esq. G. Robertson, Esq. The Countes of Surery, Marchioness of Suirery Marchioness of Surery R. Simmons, Esq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Foliett, Esq. Hugh Fraser, Esq. W. G. H. W. W. Foliett, Esq. Hugh Fraser, Esq. The Dake of Gordon, G.C.H. W. Gregon, Esq. W. Herman Merrivaic, Esq. Lord Henley Rt Hon. Sir J. C. Hobbouse, B. M.P. Sir H. Halford, Bart. G. C.H. Dr. Holland H. Hallam, Esq. John Hughes, Esq. Jor. Hughes Bernard Hebeler, Esq.	20 20 25 20 10 25 10 5 5 5 10 5 2 10 10 10 10 10 10 20 5 10 20	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0
Sir Edmend Antrobus, Bit. Wm. Geo. Adam, Esq. Rev. G. Alwick John Adolphus, Esq. J. Leycester Adolphus, Esq. Jao. Barrew, Esq. R. Vaughan Barnewall, Esq. W. H. Bedkin, Esq. W. Clowes, Esq. J. Conneil, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. W. Matthew Coulthurst, Esq. The Earl of Clanwilliam John Campbell, Esq. M.J Rev. W. Conjbeare Lord Dungia J. B. Duruset, Esq. Andrew Dickle, Esq. C.W. Englebach, Esq. D.W. Englebach, Esq. D.W. Englebach, Esq. C.W. Conjbeare William Gray, Esq. Rev. E. C. Hawtrey David Hallburton, Esq. Hon. Sidney Herbert Mestrs. Longman and Co George Loch, Esq. Thomas Lemon, Esq.	25 10 20 10 5 5 10 0 3 20 20 5 5 10 1 20 5 5 10 10 5 5 10 10 5 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	000000000000000000000000000000000000000	000 00 0000 000000000000000000000000000	Hon. Capt. Duncan, R.N. At Messr. Drunname Captain C. Bagot Rev. W. Lisie Bowles Sir G. Cockburn Right Hon. Hy. Ellis Earl Gower R. W. Hay, Eaq. G. Robertson, Esq. Marquess of Salusbury The Countens of Salusbury The Countens of Salusbury The Countens of Sarrey R. Simmons, Eq. The Earl of Tyrconnel Sir Francis Freeling, Bt. W. W. Follett, Esq. The Duke of Gordon, G.C.B. W. Gregson, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Grove, Gordon, Esq. Hallerman Mertivaic, Esq. Lord Henley Let Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- Sir H. Halford, Bart. G.C.B. Dr. Holland H. Hallam, Esq. John Hughes, Esq.	20 20 25 20 10 25 5 5 10 5 2 1 10 10 5 5 10 20 5	5 0 0 0 5 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0 0

Montagu Montagu Hon. Lucy, Mary, Jane, and Caroline

TH:	E LITERARY	GAZETTE,	Al
	Js. Knight, Esq. King's	Samuel Rogers, Esq. £10 William Rogers, Esq. 1	00
RTISEMENTS,	H Inhanahara F.o. M.P. & O.O.	Js. Russell, Esq. 5	50
Literature and the Arts.	C. R. Leslie, Esq. R.A. 1 00 Miss L. E. Landon 2 2 0 Lord Viscount Mahon,	Griffith Richards, Esq. 3 At Messra. Rogers, Towgo	ed,
SFORD SUBSCRIPTION.	M.P. G.C.B. 10 0 0	and Co.'s. James Hayfram, Esq. Marquess of Stafford,	50
d assistance given by the late Sir Walter ksellers, involved hun in the ruln which	(j.C.B. 5 0 0 Lady Malcolm 2 0 0	Lord Visc. Sidmouth 190	0 0
nent, to an extent alike unexpected and hich ultimately proved not less than is demand must have been, it is yet ob-	Miss Malcolm 1 0 0	W. H. Scott, Esq. 5 F. Scott, Esq. 5 Sir R. Smirke 5	0 0 lering to its payment the whole of his	Captain Malcoln: 1 0 0	W. Sotheby, Esq. 10 exertions, and realised from his later onl. The whole of this sum, with what- life might have enabled him to obtain,	James Morier, Esq. 10 0 0	Mrs. Sotheby 5	0 0 nscientious feeling, appropriated to the In thus devoting his talents to the ac-	J. H. Markland, Esq. 5 0 0	William Smythe, Esq. 1 J. A. Simpkinson, Esq.	1 0
t originally, though legally his own, he fassiduity, and an intenseness of anxiety.			5 0
istence by overstrained intellectual ex- deed to complete the task; but what he id to the property and copyrights pre-	J. S. Morritt, Esq. 100 0 0 Edgar Montague, Esq. 1 1 0	Rev. Professor Sedgwick 5 J. M. W. Turner, R.A. 10 Mrs. John Trotter 5	0 0 support of his family, enabled them, by responsibility, to satisfy nearly the whole	Joseph Neeld, Esq. M.P. 50 0 0 The Earl of Pembroke 50 0 0 T. Phillips, Esq. R.A. 3 0 0	R. Timmins, Esq. 1 Don Telesforo De Trueba v Cosio 8	20 or which their father had been rendered lone, and the sacrifice is complete, but	Mrs. Philips 9 0 0 S. F. Piggott, Esq. 1 1 0	y Coslo 2 G. J. Turner, Esq. 1 D. Wilkie, Esq. R.A. 10 Rev. W. Wheweli 5
er he the home of his children. Such irreproachable principles of that mind, r was only equalled by its moral worth;		Rev. W. Whewell 5	0 0
ement, those who have long and justly of Scott, may learn to love and venerate	The Very Rev. Dr. S.	Lady Davy 50 Rev. Dr. E. C. Dowdes-	00 that no inemorial can be so appro-	John Capel, Esq. 5 0 0	Well 10	0 0
rendered classical, and the preservation ion of national antiquities, which his ad- and which his genius made available to	The Earl of Carnaryon 25 0 0	Miss How 5 John Arthur Lloyd, Esq. 10	00
ry hand, and have carried the glory of agh every civilised region of the earth-	At Messrs. Coutts and Co.'s. Lord Chief Commis- sloner Adam 10 0 0	Miss M. P. Lloyd 5 Miss Jane E. Lloyd 5 Miss Blizabeth Lloyd 5	0 0 expect, from a nation so justly proud of tal for so many hours of pleasure derived will be eager to subscribe to a tribute of	W. Boyd Alexander, Esq. 5 0 0	LieutGen. Macauley 10 Sir James Scarlet 5	5 0 able to the giver and the receiver; to y like this, literature has also her tri- Blenheims, bestowed by a great and	Rev. William Antrobus 1 1 1	Hev. R. Sheepshanks 5 Miss Sheepshanks 5 Rev. Richard Ward 5	0 0
e children of him whose life was short-	W. W. Antrobus, Esq. 1 1 0 W. Hunter Baillie, Esq. 10 0 0 Sir Theodore Broadhead 10 0 0	Thomas Wood, Esq. 1 Wm. Fraser, Esq. 5	5 0
and whose name is immortalised by his	Mrs. Saillie 10 0 0	Lord Viscount Goderich 25	0 0
Frederick Pollock, Esq. 100 0 0 M.P. 25 5 0 5 0 0 Lord John Russell, M.P. 20 0 0	Mrs. Agnes Baillie 10 0 0 Mrs. Joanna Baillie 10 0 0 Lady Noel Byron 10 0 0	Lord Bp. of Gloucester 10 At Sir R. Carr Glyn, Bt. & C	30.'s. (
Jesse Watts Russell, Esq. 25 0 0	The Earl of Carlisle 20 0 0	J. Greenaway, Esq. 1	10
1 1 0 Esq. 10 10 0 1 1 0 G. Robinson, Esq. 0 10 0 J. J. Richardson, Esq. 1 1 0	Sir Alexander Chriches	Esq. 0 C. Mills, Esq. 10 At Messrs. Gosling and Sha	0 0
10 0 0 The Duchess of St. Al-	Wm. Chisholme, Esq. 5 5 0 General Geo. Constable 5 0 0 Francis Chantrey, Esq.	Earl Brownlow 16	10
25 0 0 The Marchioness of	1 RA	John Dawkins, Esq. 5 W. E. Gosling, Esq. 5	0 0
5 0 0 Hugh Scott, Esq. of 5 0 0 Draycot House 40 0 6 10 0 0 Mrs. H. Scott, of ditto 10 0 0	C. W. Dilke, Esq. 10 0 0 Adam Duff, Esq. 2 2 0 David Dundas, Esq. 2 2 0 Mrs. Anne Ellis 1 1 1	Mr. Baron Gurney E. S. Hardisty, Esq. J. R. Hoyes, Esq. Rev. C. Heathcote	0 0
0 5 0 Sir James Shaw, Bart. 50 0 0 1 1 0 Rear-Admiral Sir Gco.	Mrs. Anne Ellis 1 1 6 Wm. Empson, Esq. 2 0 6 Lady Emily Foley 5 0 6	Rev. C. Heathcote 1 Saml. Carter Hall, Esq. 9	10
1 1 0 Scott 5 0 0	- Forbes, Esq. of Sleaford! 0 (Mrs. S. C. Hall 1 At Messrs. Hammersley	1 0
Mr. Sergeant Spankie 10 10 0 10 0 0 The Earl of Stanhope 5 0 0 2 0 0 Countess Stanhope 2 0 0	The Earl of Haddington 25 0 0 — Hopkinson, Esq. of Stamford 1 0 0	Robert Maitiand, Esq. 1 — Rennell, Esq. 2 At Messrs. Herries and Co
Sir E. B. Sugden, Bart.	Sir Wm. Knighton 10 0 0	D Lord De Dunstanville 20	0 0
H. Fk. Stephenson, Esq. 5 0 0 M.P. 1 1 0 1 0 0 Robert Scott, Esq. 15 0 0	Hugh Lindsey, Esq. 5 0	O At Messrs. Hoare and Co. Capt. J. Colville 1 H. Merrik Hoare, Esq. 20	10
5 0 0:Sir Coutts Trotter, Bart. 56 0 0	Bsq. 10 0 0	O The Misses Elizabeth	0 0
. 1 0 0 R. A. Dundas, M.P. 10 0 0	Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Peel 50 0 Lady Pole 1 0	Ol The Marchioness Dow-	00
1 0 0 C. Demergue, Esq. 10 10 0 0 5 0 W. S. Demergue, Esq. 5 5 0 Co.'s, Rev. H. Drury 5 0 0	Thomas Serjeant 1 1 1 Lady Louisa Stuart 25 0 Lord Skelmersdale 20 0	0 ager of Lothian 5 0 Abel Mosey, Esq. 5 0 Mrs. Mosey 8 0 Duke of Northumber- land, K.G. 10
Hom. Capt. Duncan, R.N. 5 50	Lord Viscount Strang- ford, G.C.B. 10 10	land, K.G. 10 O At Mesers. Lloyd and Co.	0 0 0
10 0 0 Captain C. Bagot 2 0 0 20 0 0 Rev. W. Lisle Bowles 20 0 0 10 0 0 Sir G. Cockburn 20 0 0		O A. B. C. 1 Joseph Gawin, Esq. 5 O Thomas Moore, Res. 3
		Mrs. Moore 2
	Smythe 1 1 Seth S. Ward, Eeq. 0 10 Mrs. Ward 0 10	0 James Meyes, Esq. 8 0 Tyrone Power, Esq. 1 0 Sir Peter Parker, Bart. 1 0 Lord Visc. Porchester 20	00
10 0 0 Marquess of Salisbury 25 0 0 0 0 10 0 Marchioness of Salisbury 10 0 0 8 0 0 The Countess of Surrey 5 0 0		0 John Howard, Rag. 1
90 0 0 R. Simmons, Esq. 5 5 0	Miss Fauny Ward 0 5	O George Hibbert, Esq. 20	0.'2-
3 30 The Earl of Tyrconnel 5 0.0 (S) Francis Freeling, Bt. 20 0.0 (S) W. W. Follett, Esq. 20 0.0 (W. W. Follett, Esq. 5 0.0 (D) 0.0 (W. W. Follett, Esq. 5 0.0 (D) 0.0 (W. Gregson, Esq. 5 0.0 (G.C.B. 10 0.0 (W. Gregson, Esq. 5 0.0 (D) 0.0 (W. Gregson, Esq. 5 0.0 (D) 0.0 (W. Gregson, Esq. 5 0.0 (D) 0.0 (W. Gregson, Esq. 10 0.0 (D) 0.0 (W. Hon.) Str. J. C. Hob-	Francis Worship, Esq. 0 10 Thos. Watson, M.D. 5 0 Hon. J. Stuart Wortley 5 0 At Messrs. Child and Co.'s.	O E. Stanfield, Esq. A.R.A. 2 O By John Stuart, Esq.	00
P.5 5 0 The Duke of Gordon, 5 0 0 G.C.B. 10 0 0	Ralph Addison, Esq. 2 0 Chas. Bourchier, Esq. 5 0 T. P. Brown, Esq. 5 5	O Neal Buckland, Esq. 1	10
10 0 0 W. Gregson, Esq. 5 0 0 1 1 0 George Gordon, Esq. 2 2 0	T. P. Brown, Esq. 5 5 Right Hon. Sit S. Shep-	O Thomas Clarke, Esq. 3	10 30
0 10 0 At Messrs. Gosling and Sharpe's	herd 25 0 Wm. Scroope, Esq. 10 0 Rev. Dr. Woodcock 2 0	O S. Pepys Cockerell, Esq. 9 O S. Duckworth, Esq. 9	10
50 0 0 Esq. 10 0 0 1 1 0 Lord Henley 10 10 0	Mrs. Woodcock 2 0 Miss Woodcock 1 0	o Edward R Daniel Res 1	10
10 0 0 Rt. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- 25 0 0 house, Bt. M.P. 10 0 0	Miss Woodcock 1 0 Mrs. Wheable 1 0 John Wormad, Esq. 2 0	o W. C. Keene, Esq.	10
10 0 0 Rt. Hon. Sir J. C. Hob- 25 0 0 house, Bt. M.P. 10 0 0 29 0 0 Sir H. Halford, Bart. 0.53 10 0 G.C.H. 5 0 0 0 10 0 Dr. Holland 5 0 0	Mrs. Wood 1 0 At Mesers. Call and Co.'s.	0 Edward J. Lloyd, Esq. 1 Wm. Loftus Lowndes	1 10
0 10 0 H. Hallam, Esq. 10 0 0 5 0 0 John Hughes, Esq. 20 0	Thos. Lister Parker, Esq. 5 0 Joseph Douglas, Esq. 5 5	o K. J. Palk, Bsq.	10
5 0 0 Dr. Hughes 5 0 0 10 10 10 0 Bernard Hebeler, Esq. 1 1 0 Dr. Heaviland 5 0	Lady De Gray 30 0 Chs. Edward Dodd, Beq. 2 2	O T. Pemberton, Esq. K.C. 21	00
10 0 0 At Mesers. Hammersley 50 0 0and Co.'s.	Rev. Chs. F. Annesley 5 0 Rt. Hon. Sturges Bourne 10 0	0 Esq. 1 0 Richard Richards, Esc.	1 10
10 0 0 Rev. the Dean of West-	Miss Woodcock Miss Woodcock Miss Wheable John Wormad, Esq. 2 0 James Wood, Esq. 2 0 James Wood, Esq. 3 0 James Wood At Mearr. Call and Co.'s. At Mearr. Call and Co.'s. Lady De Girsy 3 0 0 Chs. Edward Dodd, Beq. 2 8 At Mears. Drummond's. Rev. Chs. F. Annesley 5 0 Rt. Hon. Sturger Bourne 10 Hon. Augustus Barring- teat Bathurst 5 0 Dowager Counters of Clarel 0 Dowager Counters of Clarel 0 Rt. Hon. Lord Dever 10 0	Henry Randell, Esq. 0 J. W. Spurrier, Esq.	i i ö
Sir R. H. Inglis, Bt. M. P. 20 0 W. Jerdan, Eaq. 5 5 T. Jervis, Etq. 1 1 20 0 o e E. Jacob, Eaq. 1 1	John Backhouse, Esq. 5 5 Downger Comptess of Clare 1	O C. T. Swanston, Esq. O Jas. Stewart. Rec.	1 10
so o n E. Jacob, Esq. I i	Ht. Hon. Lord Dever 10 0	0 Walter Stirrow, Esq.

```
G. J. Turner, Esq. 21 | 1 | 6 | John Capel, Esq. M.F. 45 | 0 |
J. G. Treed, Esq. 2 | 2 | 0 | Edmond Currier, Esq. 6 | 0 | 0 |
E. Willbraham, Esq. 3 | 2 | 0 | Mrs. Currier 6 | 0 | 0 |
Mrs. Currier 1 | 1 | 0 | Mrs. Grierson 1 | 1 | 0 |
At Messr. Twinings 5 | 0 | Christopher Hodson 6 | 1 | 0 |
At Messr. Twinings 5 | 0 | Christopher Hodson 7 | 0 |
At Messr. Twinings 5 | 0 | Christopher Hodson 7 | 0 |
At Messr. Twinings 6 | 0 | O | Samuel E. Maberley | 0 | 0 |
Mrs. Twining 6 | 0 | 0 | Samuel E. Maberley | 0 | 0 |
Mrs. Atwood 1 | 0 | 0 | Mrs. Neild | 0 | 10 |
Mrs. Hutteworth Hayley, 1 | 1 | 0 |
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 | Mrs. Whitaker, Treas-
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 | Mrs. Whitaker, Treas-
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 | O |
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 | O |
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 | O |
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 | O |
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 | O |
Mrs. Bayley | 1 | 0 |

                                            Subscriptions received at all the Bankers' in London, and the
```

Subscriptions received at all the Bankers' in London, and the principal Bankers' throughout the country.

N.B. The lists of subscriptions commenced by Lecal Committees, at Vort, Leeds, Cheltenham. Shrewsbury, Brighton, Oxford, and other places, will be published as they proceed.

R. A. DUNDAS, Sec. Royal Society of Literature,
St. Martin's Place, Dec. 7, 1822.

St. Martin's Place, Dec. 7, 1832.

Royal Institution of Great Britain, 3d December, 1832.

UVENILE LECTURES. — MICHAEL

FARADAY, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S., Corr. Mem. Royal
Acad. Science, Paris, will deliver, during the Christmas Vacation, a Course of Six Elementary Lectures on themistry, adapted to a Juvenile Auditory; to commence on Saturday, the 38th instant, at Three o'Clock.

Non-Subscribers to the Reval Institution are admitted to the above Course on payment of One Guinea each. Children, 10s. 6d. Gentlemen, as well as Ladies, are admitted as Subscribers to the Lectures, on payment of Two Guineas for the Season, or One Guinea ench Course.

The Sons and Daughters of the Members of the Reyal Institution under the age of Twenty-one, are admitted at all the Public Lectures and to the Museum, on the annual payment of One Guinea each.

A Syllabus may be obtained at the Royal Institution.

JOSEPH FINCHER, Assist. Sec.

THE REV. S. BENSON, M.A. late of St. John's College, Cambridge, having several hours in a day disengaged, would be glad to employ them in the Instruction of Tweire Pupils, of the age of Eight to Fifteen, in the Greek and Latin Languages, the Frinciples of the Mathematics and Philosophy. General Histograms a Quarter each Pupil.

Address, St. Saviour's Churchyard, Southwark.

TO ADVERTISERS.—Edinburgh Review. Advertisements for insertion in the Advertising Sheet of No. CXII., are requested to be sent to Longman and to., Paternoster Row, by December 19; and Prespectuses, Bills. &c. to be stitched in the Number, by December 22. Advertisers in perceive the advantage of sending their Advertisements and Bills early, as they are placed in the order in which the Publishers receive them.

Now ready, No. 11. price 64. 64. I LLUSTRATIONS of MODERN SCULPTURE. Edited by T. K. HERVEY, Esq.

Resignation	Containing,	hy Chantrey.
Maternal Love	a Group	by Bailey.
Hebe	a Statue	by Thorwaldsen.
Boys, an	d Graves, Pall M	ali.

On Tuesday, the 18th instant, will be published, in royal 8vo. price 2f. 2s. in morecco; with India Preefs before Letters (only 100 copies), 4f. 4s.

TURNER'S ANNUAL TOUR; containing Twenty-One beautifully-finished Plates - Views on the River Loire. From Drawings by J. M. W. TURNER, Eq. R.A.; with Descriptive Letterpress by LEITCH RITCHIE, Eq. Landon: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Gross, and Longman.

WRITING PAPER.—John Limbird,
143, Strand (the Mirror Office), a few Doors west of Somesset House, facing Catherine Street, solicits a trial of the Writing Papers, manufactured by the best Kentish and other Makers, sold by him at the following low Prices, for Cash.

	24 sheets.	20 perfect Quires.
Fine Bath Post	6d.	Ps.
Superfine ditto	8≰.	12s.
Ditto, ditto	94.	13s. 6d.
Ditto, ditto	104.	14
Best thick Bath Post	1s. 0d.	170.
Ditto, ditto, gilt	1e. 2d.	21) s.
Fine Laid Post, from 7d. to	1s. 0d.	11s. to 17s.
Best Bine Wove Thin Post	10d.	14s.
Glazed Draft Paper	10d.	14s.

Foolscap, from 9d. to 1s. 6d. per Quire, or 18s. 6d. to 26s. the Ream. Note paper, 3d. per Quire, and upwards. Sealing Wax, 1s. 6d. to 5s. the 1b.

All other Articles in Stationery at equally low Prices.

Cheap and elegant Presents for Christmas and the New Year.

CUTTABY and CO. have just published

Some as extensive variety of POCKET-BOOKS, adapted to the use of Ladles, Gentlemen, and Young Persons, which are made useful and attractive by literary excellence and superior embellishments. They include those formerly published by Mr.
Marshall, and consist of a variety, amounting to thirty different Books, to which they invite the attention of the Public, conident they will well bear a comparison with the best of those in competition. The price of those for Ladles, 2s. 6d. well bound and the edges git; Gentlemen's, 2s. 6d.; the larger, 4s.

N.B. The Cabluet of Pashion, Soverein, and New Polite Repository, contains a larger aumber of highly-finished Engravings, the price 2s. 6d. each.

London: Published by Suttaby and Co. Stationers' Court; and sold by Booksellers and Stationers generally.

Digitized by Google

Just published, Part II. printed on medium drawing paper, to be continued on the lat and 15th of each succeeding Month until completed, in Eleven Parts, price 4s. each Part plain, or 8s. 'correctly coloured, of a Song ENG LAND and WALES, consisting of a Set of large County Travelling Maps (size 17 bv 14 inches), divided into Hundreds, with the Citles, Towns, Villages, Moods, Rivers, Canals, &c. accurately laid down from the latest Surveys; and containing also the New District Divisions, Polling Places, Disfranchised and Enfranchised Boroughs, &c. &c. agreeable to the Provisions of the Reform Bill: thereby exhibiting on the Map of each County both its Present and Former State of Parliamentary Representation. Printed for James Duncan, 37, Paternoster Row.

MUSIC.

"THAT LOVELY GIRL!" the Companion THAT LOVELY GIRL!" the Companion to Barnett's popular Ballad, "I saw her at the Fancy Pair," can now be had, with the fourth edition of the latter. Also, the "Red Rover's Song," the last production of the Chevalier Sigismond Neukomm; and "Neet me 'heath the Linden Tree," written and composed by John Barnett. These Songs are strongly recommended by the public press; are illustrated with handsome Drawings by Messrs. Prior, Cunningham, and Gauci; and can now be had at every respectable Music Seller's in England, Ireland, and Scotland.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

Mr. Bentley (successor to Mr. Colburn) has just published the following valuable Works:—
In 2 vols. 8vo.

HISTORY of the AMERICAN STAGE.

By WILLIAM DUNLAP, Esq.

Author of "Memoirs of George Prederick Cooke."

Including Anecdotes of English Performers in the United States, from 1752 to the present Time.

Sir David Baird's Life and Correspondence. By Theodore Hook, Eq.

By Theodore Hook, Eq.

In 2 rols. 8rc. with Portrait.

"A work which must rank with the best biographics extant."

United Service Journal, Dec.

III.
The 4th Volume of the English Translation of the Memoirs of Madame Junot, Duchess of Abrantes. Written by Herself.

"No where do we get a nearer or more intelligible view of Napoleon as a man."—Spectator.

Sir A. B. Faulkner's Present State of Holmd, Belgium, and Germany. 2 vols.

Memoirs and Letters of Capt. Sir William Hoste, Bart. R.N. K.C.B. K.M.T. By Lady Harriet Hoste. In 2 vols. 8vo. with Portrait. (Just ready.)

History of the Coldstream Guards.

By Colonel Mackinnon.
2 vols. 8vo. with numerous Embellishments. (Just ready.) Interesting Works of Fiction just published.

I. In 3 vols. post 8vo.

The Buccaneer.

By the Author of "Sketches of Irish Chavacter," &c.

"A work of very high merit, and will take rank with some of the best fictions of its class in our language."—Allas.

H. Otterbourne; or, the Early Days of Hotspur. By the Author of " Derwentwater." III.

The Spanish Novelists. By Thomas Roscoe.

Complete in 8 vols. handsomely bound in cloth, 37s.

"The tales are all remarkable, many admirable. The work will prove a valuable addition to our literature."— New Monthly Magazine.

Also just ready, in 3 vels.

Recollections of a Chaperon. Edited by Lady Dacre.

The Life of a Sailor. By a Captain in the Royal Navy.

THE GIRL'S OWN BOOK.

Sth edition, with 110 beautiful Country of "The Mother's Book."

Sth edition, with 110 beautiful Cuts, price 4s. 6d. in boards, or 5s. 6d. bound in cloth, gilt edges.

Printed at the Chiswich Press.

lso, a new and beautiful edition of Also, a new and brautiful edition of
The Child's Own Book, with 300 Cuts, price 7s. 6d. in boards, or 8s. 6d. bound in cloth, gilt edges.
London: Frinted for T. T. and J. Tegg, Cheapside: N. Halles, Piccadily; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; Griffin and Co.
Giacgow; Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh; J. Cumming, and W. F.
Wakeman, Dublin.

Publishing by B. Steill, 20, Patermoater Row, price 1s.

XFORD ACADEMICAL ABUSES

By SOME of the INITIATED.

Uniform with Byron's Works, price 3s.

Corn-Law Rhymes, Splendid Village, and Uniform with Byron's Works, price St.

Corn-Law Rhymes, Splendid Village, and sther Poems.

A post in some respects superior to Burns."—Morning Chroside.

A post in some respects superior to Burns."—Morning Chroside.

Just published, price 18s. cloth lettered,
TAMPS on DEEDS and ASSURANCES.
By THOMAS COVENTRY, Esq.
Barrister-at-Law.
Also,

Conveyancer's Evidence, price 12s. boards.
J. and W. T. Clarke, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn.

SHORT ELEMENTARY TREATISE

SHORT EILEM ENTARY TREATISE on EXPERIMENTAL and MATHEMATICAL
OPTICS. Designed for the use of Students in the University.
By the Rev. BADEN POWELL, M.A. F.R.S.
Of Oriel College, Savilian Professor of Geometry in the University of Oxford.
Bro. 10t. boards.
Oxford, D. A. Talboys: Simpkin and Marshall, and Whittaker and Co. London.

Where may be had,
The Elements of the Theory of Mechanics.
By the Rev. R. Walker, M.A. of Wadham College, Oxford.
870. boards, 10s.

Mathematical Questions, proposed at the Public Examinations, and for the Mathematical Scholarships in the University of Oxford, from the year 1026 to the presen time. 8vo. sewed, 6s.

Tennemann's Manual of the History of Philosophy, translated from the German. By the Rev. Arthur Johnson, M.A. late Pellow of Wadham College, and Professor of Anglo-Saxon in the University of Oxford. In 1 closely printed vol. 8vo. boards, 18x 64.

Historical Researches into the Politics. In-Historical Researches into the Politics, Intercourse, and Commerce of the Carthaginians, Ethiopians, and Egyptians. Translated from the German of A. H. L. Heeren, Frotesson Planto 2 and Particles of the Carthaginian of the Car

Most beautifully intied, and embellished with 200 Engravings on Wood, price only 5. in cloth binding,

TALES about ANIMALS; comprising

Quadrupeds, Birds, Fishes, Reptiles, and Insects.
By PETER PARLEY,
Author of "Tales about Barops," &c.
Chiswick: Printed for T. T. Teg., Chapside; N. Hailes, Piccadilly; Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; R. Girifin and Co.
(Riasgow; Stillies, &c. Edinburgh; also J. Cumming, and W. F.
Wateman, Duulin.

The 4th edition, in 3 vols. 8vo. with 24 Characteristic Plates, 21s. in cloth,

THE DOMESTIC MANNERS of the AMERICANS.
By Mrs. FRANCES TROLLOPE.

By the same Author The Refugee in America; a Novel. 3 vols.

post 8vo.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

THE PRINCIPLES and PRACTICE of ARITHMETIC, designed for the Use of Students in ARITHMETIC, designed for the Use of Students 1 the Universities.

By JOHN HIND, M.A. F.R.A.S.

Late Follow and Tutor of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge.

By the same Author,
The Elements of Algebra. 2d edition, 8vo.

The Elements of Plane and Spherical Trigo-Metry. 2d edition, 8vo. 10s. 6d.

A Digested Series of Examples in the Diffemtial Calculus. Svo. 8s. Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

Reanser's Nerrestive: Second Battlon.
In 3 vois, small 8vo. 2d edition, 31s. in cloth,
SIR EDWARD SEAWARD'S NARRATIVE of his SHIPWRECK, and consequent Discovery of certain Islands in the Caribbean Sea. With a Detail of many extraordinary Events in his Life, from 1733 to 1749, as written in his own Diary.

Edited by Miss JANE PORTER.

"The most curious work that has appeared since the first dawn of discovery."—Spectator.

"A more attractive personal narrative never issued from the press."—New Monthly Maguzine.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

In 1 vol. 8vo. price 25s. boards,
HEBREW and ENGLISH LEXICON to the OLD TESTAMENT, including the Biblical

A HEBRE VY and to the OLD TESTAMENT, including to the OLD TESTAMENT, including to the OLD TESTAMENT, including to by JOSIAH W. GIBBS, A.M. of the Theological Seminary, Andover, U.S.

Printed for James Duncan, 37, Psternoster Row; Whittaker, Treacher, and Arnot, Ave-Maria Lane.

P.R.S.E., M.W.S., F.L.S., C., Wilson't

SIR WILLIAM JARDINE, Bart., F.R.S.E., M.W.S., F.L.:
Author of "Illustrations of Ornithology," Editor of "Wilso
American Ornithology," &c. &c., has in the press the fit Volume of a Series of Works on Natural History, to be entit! THE NATURALIST'S LIBRARY; with

In 3 vols. 8vo. price 1l. 1ls. 6d. boards,

MEMOIRS of Dr. BURNEY.

By his Daughter, MADAME D'ARBLAY.

"There have been no descriptions of Garrick, Doctor Johnson, Mrs. Thrais, Burks, of greater vivacity and strength than those contained in these volumes.—Spectator.

"Those who wish to see the brilliant parties of the days of hooped petticoats and three-story wigs, and bear the witry chicchat of the brightest men in art and literature, may do so cheaply now.—Athensum.

"Pages thickly strewn with interesting detail, and graphic steiches of those heroes of literature and art with which the Johnsonian age abounded.—Atlas.

Edward Mozon, 64, New Bond Street.

Just Imported from Germany.

VOL. III.—NIEBUHR'S ROEMISCHE GESCHICHTE. 11. 20. 6d. Vol. I.-F. v. Raumer's Geschichte Europa's.

Vol. I.—Rhetorici Græci, ex Codicibus Flo-rat. Mediolan. Monac. Neapol. Paris. Rom. Venet. Tawin. et Indobonensibus. Edidit Prof. WALZ. 11.7s. Bachanend Co. (tate Koller and Cahlmann), 21, Soho Square.

In foolscap 8vo. price 6s. boards,

THE RENEGADE, and other Poems.

By the Rev. B. T. H. COLE, A.M.

Rector of Warbleton, Sussex.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

A RAZOR for the WHIG; or, an Address to the Electors of Great Britain on the Dissolution of Parliament.

"Choose good men and true."

By a PRIEND to CHURCH and KING.

Printed for T. Cadell, Strand; and W. Blackwood, Edinburgh.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

On the lst of January (to be continued on the lst of every Month),
Price Sixpence, with Wood Engravings,

THE ZOOLOGICAL MAGAZINE; or,
Journal of Natural History. Intended as a cheap, amusing, and instructive companion to the study of Zoology and Natural History.
Published by Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.
To be had of all Booksellers.

On January 1st will be published, in 1 vol. 8vo. THE CAUSES of the FRENCH REVO-LUTION.
n: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Next week will be published, in 1 vol. 8vo

AMERICA and the AMERICANS.
By a CITIZEN of the WORLD.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

On January 1st will be published, in 8vo. Vol. XVII. of On January let will be published, in 8 vo. Vol. XVII. of

A N N U A L B I O G R A P H Y and

OBITUARY: containing Memoirs of Sir R. H. Bickerton; Rev. G. Crabbe; Sir W. Grant; Bishop Huntingford;
Lord H. Paulet; H. Liverseege, Eq.; Dr. A. Clarke; Sir W.
Bolton; M. Clementi; Sir J. Mackintosh; J. S. Manden, Eq.;
Admiral P. W. Freeman; Dr. Walsh; Sir A. Cockrane; C.
Butler, Eq.; Sir W. Scott; Bishop Turner; Miss A. M. Pevter;
Earl Donoughmore; Sir A. Pell; D. Sykes, Esq.; Sir I. Pellew;
J. Bentham, Esq.; J. Syme, Esq.; Lord Tenterden; Sir J.
Leslie, &c. &c.
London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Library of Original Romance.
On New-Year's Day will be published, uniform with the Waverley
Novels, and handsomely bound in cloth, price Go.

Novels, and handsomely bound in cloth, price G.

THE GHOST-HUNTER and his FAMILY.

By the Author of the "O'Hars Tales."
Forming the first Mosthly Volume of the Library of Romance.
Edited by LEITCH RITCHIE.

A succession of highly-interesting weeks, written by the most popular authors in romantic literature, will appear monthly; each volume will be complete in itself, and will equal in quantity two volumes of a common novel.
Published by Smith, Edder, and Co. Cornhill, London; and sold by every Bookseller in the kingdom.

On the 21st of January will be published, in a handsome thick 8vo. vol. with a Portrait, to be completed in 2 vols.

Sto. vol. with a Portrait, to be completed in 2 vols.

MEMOIR of the LIFE and MEDICAL OPINIONS of JOHN ARMSTRONG, M.D. formerly Physician to the Fever Institution of London, Author of the Practical Illustrations of Typhus and Scaster Fever, &c. &c.
To which is added, an Inquiry into the Facts connected with those Forms of Fever attributes to Mainria and Marsh Effluvium.

Secretary to the Limman Society, Honorary Member of the Medical Society of Massachusetts.

London: Baldwin and Cradock, Paternoster Row.

In a few days will be published, in 2 vols. 8vo, with Plates, MEMORIALS of the PROFESSIONAL LIFE and TIMES of SIR WILLIAM PENN, Knt. Admiral and General of the Fleet during the Interreguant; Admiral, and Commissioner of the Admiralty and Navy after the Restoration. From 1644 to 167.

Also, edited by the same Author,
The Character of a Trimmer. His opinion of, 1. the Laws and Government; 2. Protestant Religion; 3. the Papists; 4. Foreign Affairs. By the Honourable Sir William Coventry, Knt.

Why, Christmas 'tis the very time for gifts— Heart and hearth commerce—where each kindly pledge Brings gentle memories of love and home!

In Quarto, handsomely bound, price 21s. containing Thirty-six highly finished Engravings,

DRAWING-ROOM SCRAP-BOOK FOR 1833. FISHER'S

With Poetical Illustrations to each Subject, by L. E. L.

"This particular annual has so attractive an appearance, and its contents so well reply to the pretensions of its external form. This beautiful annual has so attractive an appearance, and its a triple accomplished authorise." "This beautiful annual has so attractive an appearance, and its active an appearance, and its form is an elegant quarto, and it is richly and or name the property is pulse worthy of the pretensions of the extractive an appearance, and its form is an elegant quarto, and it is richly and or name the post."—It is disactle.

"We entread over leader to take a look at this splendid work: "We entread our readers to take a look at this splendid work: "We are lead our readers to take a look at this splendid work: "We are

Vols. I. and II. price 2l. 2s, each; Vol. III. price 2l. 8s. imperial 8vo. of

NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY. THE

Containing ONE HUNDRED and EIGHT PORTRAITS and MEMOIRS, engraved in the highest style, from Paintings by the most celebrated Masters.

(Thirty are from Paintings by SIR THOMAS LAWRENCE.)

(Thirty are from Paintings by SIR THOMAS LAWRENCE.)

"Woever desires to possess one of the most interesting Illustrating public patronage than this. As an attendant upon the claim to public patronage than this. As an attendant upon the claim to public patronage than this. As an attendant upon the claim to public patronage than this. It gives to the perusal of our rational history, it is insensitivable. It gives to the perusal of our rational history, it is insensitivable. It gives to the perusal of our rational history, it is insensitivable. It gives to the perusal of our rational history, it is insensitivable. It gives to the perusal of our rational history, it is insensitivable. It gives to the perusal of our rational history, it is insensitivable. It gives to the perusal of our rational history, it is insensitive to the other? Finally, the work is an extraordinary in regard to its chapters of the heading. To a man of taste and intellect, scarcely any thing can be more grateful than to have presented to hom faithful and speaking of the nation, and interest a hundred-fold greater than norder it forthemen. "We are so overrun by the sudden rush into the world of an overright of the nation, and interest a hundred-fold greater than order it forthemen." "We are so overrun by the sudden rush into the world of an overright of the nation, and the public and the public and the sudden rush into the world of an overright of the nation, and the public and the pub

Fisher's Picturesque Kllustrations of Great Britain and Freland.

In Demy Quarto: comprising

ILLUSTRATED. IRELAND

8] original Views. Cloth, 21s.; bound, 27s.

"We know not what its sale may be, but if at all equal to its merits, it has a place upon the table of every house in Ireland."-Saunders' News Letter.

ILLUSTRATED. LANCASHIRE

110 Views. Cloth, 30s.; bound, 35s.

"The Drawings and Engravings are executed in the first style."-Liverpool Courier.

DEVON CORNWALL ILLUSTRATED. AND

140 Views. Elegantly bound, 2l. 2s.

"One of the most splendid topographical volumes we have ever seen. Nor is it one of the least recommendations of this volume, that it will prove in the highest degree amusing and gratifying, not only to those who may be under the influence of local associations and attachments, but to all who have any taste for the beauties of nature and art."—Literary Gazette.

WESTMORELAND. CUMBERLAND. DURHAM, AND NORTHUMBERLAND ILLUSTRATED.

Part I. containing 17 Engravings, 4s.; Parts II. and III. 8 Engravings each, 2s. each.

"The first Part of this new volume has just made its appearance, and it impresses us with the notion that we have never before seen any thing so truly cheap—cheap, we mean, in the inviting sense of the ierm, and without reference to mere price, except as compared with intrinsic value—for nothing is cheap that is not good. Nothing can be more beautifully executed; and we recommend the work to the attention of our readers, as one which it is almost a duty to patronise."—Compared to the attention of our readers, as one which it is almost a duty to patronise."—Compared to the attention of our readers, as one which it is almost a duty to patronise."—Compared to the attention of our readers, as one which it is almost a duty to patronise."—Compared to the attention of our readers.

INTERESTING AND USEFUL PRESENTS FOR YOUTH.

Scripture History for Pouth.

By Mrs. HEWLETT.

136 Engravings, 18s.

Scripture Patural History for Pouth. By Mrs. HEWLETT.

82 Engravings, 12s.; with coloured Plates, 18s.

"As far as we have been able to examine the plan and execution of this work, they are both highly creditable to the piety, talents, research, and taste of the esteemed author: the Engravings are very pleasing illustrations; they are taken from the best existing models. The Maps appear to be very accurate. We think that such a book as this is greatly fitted to endear the Scrietures to the plan generation, and to render the perusal of them at once delightful and profitable."

"Quite a treasure for any deserving child, from six years of age to the time of teems. All the highly creditable to the piety, talents, research, and taste of the esteemed author: the Engravings are very pleasing illustrations; they are taken from the best existing models. The Maps appear to the profit allow London: Published by Fisher, Son, and Co. Newgate Street.

Sold by Simpkin and Marshall; Whittaker and Co.; C. Tilt; Ackermann and Co.; and Colnaghi and Co.: Wakeman, Dublin; and Hamilton, Edinburgh.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulton Street, Oxfore Street; sold also by J. Chappell, 98, Royal Exchange; S. Mariborough, Ave Maria Lane, Ludgate Hill; A. Black, Edinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinson and Co. Glasgow: and J. Cumming, Dublin. — Agent for America, O. Rich, 13, Red, Lion Equates, London.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom: but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 831.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1832.

Price 8d.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry. Second Series. 3 vols. 12mo. Dublin, 1833. Wakeman: London, Simpkin and Marshall: Groombridge.

Illustrations of Political Economy, Nos. X. and XI.: Homes Abroad; For Each and for Fox.

The Splendid Village, Corn-Law Rhymes, and lington :other Poems. By Ebenezer Elliott. 12mo. pp. 284. London, 1833, Steill; Sheffield, Pearce.

ADDISON'S graceful allegory of Truth calling in the aid of Fiction against Falsehood, winning thereby the ear that would otherwise have remained uncharmed, and the eye that would otherwise have turned away,—has never been carried into such universal practice as in the present day. The efforts, too, of Fiction are now most sedulously directed to the cultivation of a field once wholly neglected-we allude to the condition of the poorer classes. Formerly, poverty appeared in print in a purely poetical shape; content and innocence were portrayed as the especial privilege of humble life; we had vacue ideas of hospitable cottagers, always ready with new milk and brown bread-of shepherds and shepherdesses only less picturesque than those of Arcadia; and the country was the abode of all the virtue and happiness which was not to be found in the town. But our present age is one of realities-we want no poetry, save that of feeling, from facts: correct likeness is what we now ask from the picture; the writer may blend the colours and arrange the groups-but our sympathies must be awakened by real suffering, and our attention arrested by actual circumstances. "The short and simple annals of the poor," is a phrase the absurdity of which is now acknowledged; theirs is a long, a complicated, and a fearful history, and one, too, whose neglect must bring its own punishment. The writers whose works are enumerated above belong to a new school; they have taken their materials from lower life, and to alleviate its sufferings have they exerted their talents. The narrative may be fictitious; but the scenes, the characters, and the events, are true to the very letter, - and terrible are they in their truth. What Miss Martineau has done for England, the author of Traits and Stories has done for Ireland - given the most attractive form to the most important details respecting those countries. From the first Number we saw of Miss Martineau's work, to those now before us, we have felt more and more convinced of the necessity there was for such information being communicated in the most popular form, for it must be united and universal exertion that brings about regeneration, and also that the form which she had chosen for her productions was the best calculated for such a purpose. Many may dissent from the inferences drawn, and the hopes held forth; but all must admit the industry and the talent displayed by this extraordinary woman. The two present Numbers are equal to their pre-

Mr. Elliott has chosen in poetry the same subjects which the before-mentioned writers selected for prose; we doubt, however, if with the same good result: with him it is, indeed, "the poet's eye in a fierce frenzy rolling; and he writes with a virulent anger, which All. By Harriet Martineau. London, 1832. leads to equal injustice and exaggeration. Take the following lines on the Duke of Wel-

> " Arthur Bread-tax-winner Who is praised by dolt and sinner?
> Who serves masters more than one?
> Blucherloo, the bread-tax-winner,
> Bread-tax-winning Famineton. Blucherloo, the bread-tax-winner!
> Whom enriched thy battles won?
> Whom does Dirt-grub ask to dinner?—
> Bread-tax-winning Famineton. Whom feeds Arthur Bread-tax-winner? All our rivals, sire and son, Foreign cutler, foreign spinner, Bless their patron, Famineton. Prussia fattens—we get thinner!
> Bread-tax barters all for none:
> Bravo! Arthur Bread-tax-winner!
> Shallow, half-brained Famineton!

Empty thinks the devil's in her— Take will grin when Make is gone! Bread-tax teaches saint and sinner, Grinning, flint-faced Famineton!"

We own that we are not among the duke's political admirers; but really we can remember nothing in his conduct to justify the above philippic. In a like spirit is the absurdity of calling Napoleon Bonaparte " England's noblest, best, and most magnanimous enemy." "The power of party can no further go." Now, the great harm of this violence is, that it detracts from the severe truth which marks other portions; the generality of readers deal too little in distinctions, and will take for granted that if political rancour be allowed to colour part, it will colour all. This is not the case; for in "the Splendid Village," "the Ranter," &c. the pathos of many passages is the direct con-sequence of their accuracy. The fact is, Mr. Elliott too often mistakes abuse for satire, and abounds in angry invective, often false, and still oftener misplaced. His gentler vein is exquisite-it is like a fountain of pure and silvery water gushing amid granite rocks; his touches of description come from a heart that has deeply felt the beauty it delineates; nature ever seems to charm away his harsher mood, "as erst the demon fled from soul." the following passage as an instance:

Flowers, ye remind me of rock, vale, and wood,
Haunts of my early days, and still loved well:
Bloom not your sisters fair in Locksley's dell?
And where the sun, o'er purpled moorlands wide,
Gilds Wharnchiffe's oaks, while Don is dark below?
And where the blackbird sings on Rother's side?
And where Time sparse the age of Conisbro'?
Sweet flowers, remembered well! your hues, your breath.

Sweet flowers, remembered well! your hues, your breath,
Call up the dead, to combat still with death:
The spirits of my buried years arise!
Again a child, where childhood roved I run;
While groups of speedwell, with their bright blue eyes,
Like happy children, cluster in the sun.
Still the wan primrose hath a golden core;
The millfoit thousand-leafed as heretofore,
Displays a little world of flowerets gray;
And tiny maids might hither come to cull
The wo-marked cowalip of the dewy May;

And still the fragrant thorn is beautiful.

I do not dream! Is it indeed a rose
That, youder in the deepening sunset, glows?
Methinks the orchis of the fountained world
Hath, in its well-known beauty, something new.
Do I not know thy lofty disk of gold,
Thou, that still wooest the sun, with passion true?
No, splendid stranger! haply, I have seen
One not unlike thee, but with humbler mlen,
Watching her lord. Oh, illly, fair as aught
Beneath the sky, thy pallid petals glow
In evening's blush; but evening borrows nought
Of thee, thou rival of the stainless snow—
For thou art scentless. Lo! this fingered flower,
That round the cottage-window weaves a bower,
Is not the woodbine; but that lowlier one.
With thick green leaves, and spike of dusky fire,
Enamoured of the thatch it grows upon,
Might be the houseleek of rude Hallamshire,
And would swake, beyond divorcing seas,
Thoughts of green England's peaceful cottages.
Yes, and this blue-eyed child of earth, that bends
Its head, on leaves with liquid diamonds set,
A heavenly fragrance in its sighing sends;
And though 'tis not our downcast violet,
Yet might it, haply, to the zephyr tell,
That 'tis beloved by village malds as well.
Thou little, dusky, crimson-bosomed bird,
Starting, but not in fear, from tree to tree,
I never erst thy plaintive love-notes heard,
Nor hast thou been a suppliant erst to me
For table-crumbs, when winds bowed branch and stem,
And leafless twigs formed winter's diadem:—
No, thou art not the bird that haunts the grange, Storm-pinched, with bright black eyes and breast of flame.
I look on things familiar, and yet strange—
Known, and yet new—most like, yet not the same.

Storm-pinched, with bright black eyes and breast of flame.

I look on things familiar, and yet strange—
Known, and yet new—most like, yet not the same.
I hear a volce, ne'er heard before, repeat
Songs of the past. But Nature's voice is sweet,
Wherever heard; her works, wherever seen,
Are might and beauty to the mind and eye;
To the lone heart, though occans roll between,
She speaks of things that but with life can die;
And while, above the thundering Gihon's foam,
That cottage smokes, my heart seems still at home,
In England still—though there no mighty flood
Sweeps, like a foaming earthquake, from the clouds;
But still in England, where rock-shading wood
Shelters the peasant's home, remote from crowds,
And sheltered once as noble hearts as e'er Dwelt in th' Almighty's form, and knew nor guilt nor fear.

fear.

How like an eagle, from his mile-high rock,
Down swoops the Gihon, smitten into mist
On groaning crags, that, thunder-stunned, resist
The headlong thunder, and eternal shock,
Where, far below, like ages with their deeds,
The watery anarchy doth foam and sweep!
Now winged with light, which winged gloom succeeds;
Now beautiful as hope, or wild and deep
As fate's last mystery; now swift and bright
As human joy, then black as horror's night!"

We do not, however, like the plan of 'Spirits and Men;" the day for either alle-corical or supernatural personification is past. No, Mr. Elliott is strongest on his own soilhe is English, intensely English; we would not abate one iota of his indignation against oppression, or of his sympathy with distress; we would only enter a protest against the wrongful violence into which his political opinions (with him, passions) often heat his language. We have gone into no verbal criticism, though many similes border on the ludicrous— witness the "tiers of currants, thick as both my thumbs:" but these are minor fault, forgotten in the very lines that follow :-

When round their grandsire met, his numerous race Beheld their children's children in his face; Saw in his eye the light of suns gone down, And hoped they saw in his white locks their own."

Believing as we do, that too much attention cannot be attracted towards the present situation of the lower classes, believing also that exaggeration, it is because we know exaggeration to be an injury.

We now turn to Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry; which is not only one of the most amusing and interesting, but one of the most valuable works that have appeared. Banim, the first cultivator of this fertile soil, was an Irish Elliott, and painted things as he saw them, through but one medium-that of party. The present author is more impartial; he admits faults on both sides, and merits on both sides; he points out evils as one who has observed and reflected, and, that best test of the necessity for pointing them out, places the hope and the remedy alongside. The Irish character is Amin. An' now that I've blessed the place, a singular mixture of antithesis, humour and in the name of the nine patriarchs, how are pathos, cruelty and tender-heartedness, shrewdness, superstition, and indolence, yet capable of being roused into extraordinary exertion. We do not hesitate to say that these pages give a clearer and juster view both of that character and its consequences than any work or works amid the many that have come under our notice. "The Red Well," tracing the progress of ruin overtaking an industrious man. from the pressure of circumstances, unalleviated by the abated rent that might have enabled him to meet them,—is worth a whole army of pamphlets on the state of the Irish nation. Merely in a literary point of view, these stories tumbler of whisky-punch shall not cross my lips, are strikingly clever and original: "the Poor during the twenty-four hours of the day, barring Scholar" is as full of touching interest as that of "the Courtship of Phelim O'Toole" is of light amusement. We must observe, that in the following extracts we have in a degree been guided by what was most easily detachable, and suited to our limits.

Preparations for Christmas " Those who were inclined to devotion-and there is no lack of it in Ireland-took to carols and hymns, which they sang, for want of better airs, to tunes highly comic. We have ourselves often heard the Doxology sung in Irish verse, to the facetious air of 'Paudeen O'Rafferty;' and other hymns to the tune of 'Peas upon a Trencher,' and 'Cruskeen Lawn.' Sometimes, on the contrary, many of them, from the very fulness of jollity, would become pathetic, and indulge in those touching old airs of their country, which may be truly called songs of sorrow, from the exquisite and simple pathos with which they abound. This, though it may seem anomalous, is but natural; for there is nothing so apt to recall to the heart those friends, whether absent or dead, with whom it has been connected, as a stated festival. Af-fection is then awakened, and calls to the hearth where it presides those on whose faces it loves to look; if they be living, it places them in the circle of happiness which surrounds it; and if they be removed for ever from such scenes, their memory, which, amidst the din of ordinary life, has almost passed away, is now restored, and their loss felt as if it had been only just then sustained."

The Fiddler's Compliments .- "Augh, augh! faith you're the model of a woman. Are you there, M'Kenna?-here's a sudden disholution to your family! May they be scatthered wid all speed_manin' the girls_to all corners o' the parish!—ha, ha, ha! Well, that won't vex them, any how; an' next, here's a merry Chris'mas to us, an' many o' them! Whooh! blur-an'age!_whooh! oh, by gorra!_that's_that's_Frank, run afther my breath_I've lost Benediction of an Irish Beggar.—" God save the house! exclaimed Darby, on entering—' God save the house, an' all that's in it! God save it to the north!' and he formed the sign of the cross in that direction; 'God save it to the south ! + to the aiste! + and to the waiste! + Save it upwards! + and save it downwards! + Save it backwards! + and save it forwards! + Save it right! + and save it left! + Save it by night! + save it by day !+ Save it here !+ save it there !+ Save it this way! + an' save it that way! + Save it atin! + + + an' save it drinkin'! + + + + + + + + Oxis Doxis Glorioxis yees all, man, woman, and child? An' a merry Christmas to yees, says Darby More!" An Irish Oath against Liquor.—We must just observe, that the swearer believes his drunken habits prolong his wife's stay in pur-

"Oath against liquor, made by me, Cornelius O'Flaherty, Philomath, on behalf of Misther Pether O'Connell, of the Cross-roads, merchant, on one part, and of the soul of Mrs. Ellish O'Connell, now in purgatory, merchantess, on the other. I solemnly, and meritoriously, and soberly swear, that a single twelve, the locality of which is as followeth :-

" N.B. I except in case any docthor of physic might think it right and medical to ordher me more for my health; or in case I could get Father Mulcahy to take the oath off me for a start, at a wedding, or a christening, or at any other meeting of friends where there's

" PETHER X O'CONNELL.

"Witness present,
Cornellus O'Flaberty, Philomath,
June the 4th, 18—.
"LT I certify that I have made and calculated this oath for Misther Pether O'Connell, merchant, and that it is strictly and arithmetically proper and correct.
"Cornelius O'Flaherty, Philomath.

"Dated this 4th day of June, 18-.
"'I think, Misther O'Flaherty, it's a dacent oath, as it stands. Plase God I'll swear to it some time to-morrow evenin'.' 'Dacent! Why I don't wish to become eulogistically addicted; but I'd back the same oath, for both grammar and arithmetic, aginst any that ever was drawn up by a lawyer — ay, by Counsellor O'Connell himself! — but faith, I'd not face him at a vow, for all that; he's the greatest man at a vow in the three kingdoms. 'I'll tell you what I'm thinkin', masther; as my hand's in, mightn't I as well take another wid an ould frind o' mine, Andy Cavanagh, of Lisbuy? He's a dacent outd residential, and likes it. It'll make the baker's, or the long dozen.' 'Why, it's not a bad thought; but not wour head?' 'No, much may be effected in amelioration, we are well do you dhraw that from, then? for, faith, knows I've a regard for Andy Cavanagh this glad to see talents like those of Mr. Elliott 'twould be mighty convanient to live near it in employed in the cause; and if we object to a hard frost." part of the oath.

Now I must make the total amount thirteen, an' all will be right.' 'Masther, have you a prayer-book widin? bekase if you have, I may as well swear it here, an' you can witness it.' book aquil to the Bible itself for piety an' devotion.' 'Sure they say, masther, any book that the name o' God's in, is good for an oath. Now, wid the help o' goodness, repate the words afore me, an' I'll sware thim.'

Unfortunately Peter's memory becomes confused, and he visits the schoolmaster to see if they can devise no sort of sober system of mne-

" 'Masther,' said he, 'we must thry an' make this oath somethin' plainer. You see, whin I get confused, I'm not able to remimber things as I ought. Sometimes, instid o' one tumbler, I take two at the wrong place; an' sarra bit o' me but called in an' had three wid ould Jack Rogers, that isn't in it at all. On another day I had a couple wid honest Barny Casy, an my way acrass to Bartle Gorman's I'm not what I was, masther, ahagur; so I'd thank you to dhraw it out more clearer, if you can, nor it was.'- 'I see, Mr. Connell; I comprehend wid the greatest are in life the very plan for it. We must reduce the oath to geography, for I'm at home there, bein' a surveyor myself. I'll lay down a map o' the parish, an' draw the houses of your friends at their proper places, so that you'll never be out o' your latitude at all.' Faix, I doubt that, masther! ha, ha, ha!' replied Peter; 'I'm afeard I will, of an odd time, for I'm not ably to carry what I used to do; but no matther: thry what you can do for me this time, ane how. I think I could bear the long dozen still, if I didn't make mistakes.' O'Flaherty accordingly set himself to work; and as his knowledge, not only of the parish, but of every person and house in it, was accurate, he soon had a tolerably correct skeleton map of it drawn for Peter's use. 'Now,' said he, 'lend me your ears.' 'Faix, I'll do no sich thing,' replied Peter; 'I know a thrick worth two of it. Lend you my ears, inagh !--catch me at it! You have a bigger pair of your own nor I have—ha, ha, ha!! 'Well, in other words, pay attention. Now, see this dot—that's your own house.' 'Pat a crass there,' said Peter, an' thin I'll know it's the Crass - roads. 'Upon my reputation, you're right; an' that's what I call a good specimen of ingenuity. I'll take the hint from that, an' we'll make it a hieroglyphical as well as a geographical oath. Well, there's a crass, wid two tumblers. Is that clear?' 'It is, it is! Go an.' 'Now here we draw a line to your son Dan's. Let me see; he keeps a mill, an' sells cloth. Very good. I'll dhraw a mill-wheel an' a yardwand. There's two tumblers. Will you know that?' 'I see it: go an, nothing can be clearer. So far I can't go asthray.' 'Well, what next? Two behind your own garden. What metaphor for the garden? Let me see! let me cogitate! A dragon—the Hesperides! That's beyont vou. A bit of a hedge will do, an' a gate.' 'Don't put a gate in, it's not lucky. You know when a man takes to dhrink, they say he's goin' a gray gate, or a black gate, nor three more to the back o' that. I only or a bad gate. Put that out, an' make the it_run, you Tory: oh, by gor, that's stuff as begin to get hearty about seventeen; so that hedge longer, an' it'll do—wid the two tunsthrong as Sampson, so it is. Arrah, what the long dozen, afther all, is best; for God he blers, though.' 'They're down. One at the Reverend Father Mulcahy's. How will we thranslate the priest?' 'Faix, I doubt that will be a difficult business.' 'Upon my re-How will we putation, I agree wid you in that, espicially whin he repates Latin. However, we'll see. He writes P. P. afther his name; -pee-pee is what we call the turkeys wid. What 'ud you think o' two turkeys?' 'The priest would like them roasted, but I couldn't undherstand that. No; put down the sign o' the horsewhip, or the cudgel; for he's handy, an' argues well wid both?' 'Good! I'll put down the horsewhip first, an' the cudgel alongside of it; then the tumbler, an' there 'ill be the sign o' the priest.' 'Ay, do, masther, an' faix the priest 'ill be complete; there can be no mistakin' him thin. Divil a one, but that's a good thought!' 'There it is, in black an' Who comes next? Frank Carroll. white. white. Who comes next? Frank Carron.

He's a farmer. I'll put down a spade an' a harrow. Well, that's done—two tumblers.'

'I won't mistake that aither. It's clear enough.' Bartle Gorman's of Nurchasy. Bartle's a little lame, an' uses a staff wid a cross on the end that he houlds in his hand. I'll put down a staff wid a cross on it.' 'Would there be no danger of me mistakin' that for the priest's cudgel?' 'Not the that for the priest's cudgel?' Not the slightest. I'll pledge my knowledge of geography, they're two very different weapons.' Well, put it down; I'll know it.' 'Michael Morris of Cargah. What for him? Michael's a pig-driver. I'll put down a pig. You'll comprehend that?' 'I ought; for many a pig I sould him in my day. Put down the pig; an' if you could put two black spots upon his back, I'd know it to be one I sould him about our years agone-the fattest ever was in the country-it had to be brought home on a car, for it wasn't able to walk wid fat." 'Very good; the spots are on it. The last is Andy Cavanagh of Lisbuy. Now, do you see that I've drawn a line from place to place, so that you have nothing to do only to keep to it as you go. What for Andy? 'Andy! Let me see; Andy! Pooh! What's come over me that I have nothing for Andy? Ay! I have it. He's a horse-jockey; put down a gray mare I sould him about five years agone.''I'll put down a horse; but I can't make a "I'll put down a horse; but I can't make a gray mare wid black ink." 'Well, make a mare of her, any way." 'Faith, an' that same puzzles me. Stop, I have it; I'll put a foal along wid her.' 'As good as the bank. God bless you, Misther O'Flaherty. I think this'll keep me from mistakes. An' now, if you'll slip up to me afther dusk, I'll send you down a couple of bottles and a flitch. Sure you desarve more for the throuble you tuck.' "

. 3

. - 15

Since the above notice was written, we have received the last two volumes, which well deserve the warmest commendations. To say nothing of the interest of the tales themselves, the humour of the varied scenes and characters, we believe it is not often so much truth is told about Ireland. We know no pages where so accurate an idea may be formed of Irish reality as in these entertaining, clever, and original "Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry."

We have classed these works together—for they belong to the same school, and labour in the same vineyard; we must also add, that they are foremost among the most original and valuable productions of our time.

Miserrimus. 12mo. pp. 115. London, 1882. Not published.

This wild and striking story has the following prophesied should be the bed of my enemy. convulsively into the air, and with a dull foundation:—"On a grave-stone in Worcester In spite of the great effusion of blood, which, heavy sound fell on the earth a corpse. I Cathedral is this inscription, 'Miserrimus,' conjoined to what I had previously lost, inwith neither name, date, nor comment." These pages contain the autobiography of the sleeper in that nameless grave, and are the history of uncurbed passions, terrible to those around them, but still more terrible to the possessor. None in this world can punish us as we punish ourselves. The secret of the hero's character is contained in the file.

is contained in two of his own remarks:-"Perhaps of all passions, cruelty is that which is most strengthened by indulgence; the more it attains, the more it desires. The man who has once tasted it, is inspired with an insatiate thirst; and the last cup of blood he has drained to the dregs but renders its successor more enticing. Unlike other vices that decay with the strength of the body which engendered them, this flourishes in an inverse ratio, and only departs with the breath of its possessor, unless some rare shock intervene to recall him to a consciousness of his guilt. Instigated by the natural bent of their dispositions, the Mariuses, the Syllas, the Domitians, the Maximins, began their career of slaughter; but they continued it long after the original impulse must have ceased, in the mere love of the stimulus to which they had been accustomed. I believe that all our race are more or less ferocious. Many may live and die ignorant that this vice is latent in their breasts: but. because circumstances have not arisen to develope it, let them not therefore believe that they do not possess it. The minds of most of us are capable of a mood in which we should derive a demoniac pleasure from the sight of the tears which we ourselves have caused to trickle down the cheek of beauty. They tell an unquestionable tale of feminine softness, affection, and submission; and man, the savage, revels in the callous complacency of gratified vanity, and in the conviction of his power. There they stand in her bright eyes, visible, tangible, indisputable proofs of her weakness and of his strength, of her homage and of his supremacy; and he gazes on her exultingly, unpityingly, and glories in the pride of the conquest he has gained. There are few, I think, who, if they will avow the truth, will not admit that at some portion of their lives they have entertained emotions akin to these."

In a duel he kills the brother of his mistress, long the object of school-boy animosity. Singular, yet well-wrought up, incidents bring together again the murderer and the betrothed—who, it need scarce be said, had rejected him in horror—under circumstances which justify marriage. The bridal, with its funeral pageantry, is such as Hoffman might have imagined in his darkest mood; we had intended quoting it, but it is too long for our limits, and, moreover, requires the preceding scenes; we therefore prefer the duel:—

"It was agreed that we should commence the combat with our pistols, and, if they failed, we were to determine it by our swords. The ground was measured, and, at the distance of eight paces, my antagonist and I stood face to face. Our seconds had arranged that the challenged party should fire first. We were asked if we were prepared, and, having replied in the affirmative, the signal was given. I saw the flash, and trembled to and fro for a few seconds, then fell backward on the earth: the ball of my foe had passed through my body. Dreadful, excruciating were the sensations which I endured during the few succeeding minutes, while I lay on the grass—the crimson grass, which I had prophesied should be the bed of my enemy. In spite of the great effusion of blood, which, conjoined to what I had previously lost, induced a mortal weakness, I yet retained a vivid consciousness of all that passed around me. My antagonist had thrown the discharged pistol on the earth, and stood with his arms folded across his breast, regarding with a stern and fixed countenance the wound from which my life-blood was fast issuing. Motionless and impenetrable as a statue, it was impossible to infer from his impassive countenance the nature of his feelings; but he appeared to be awaiting the result with-out anxiety, and without exultation. My second advanced to assist me; but I snatched the handkerchief from his grasp, and applied it myself to the wound. An increased feebleness then subdued me, and I fell back on the grass, still keeping my eyes fixed on the countenance of my adversary, who retorted with an equally immovable gaze. I had thus lain during what appeared to me an eternity, but, in reality, perhaps, did not exceed a couple of minutes, when his second approached him, and advised him to depart. 'No, no!' I shrieked in the agony of my dread lest my anticipated victim should escape me: 'stay, stay, I command you! — I am prepared, and capable of firing; and I presented my pistol. But the second of my adversary interfered, and stated that so long as I remained pro-strate on the ground, the laws of duelling required that I should be considered hors de combat; and that unless I arose, he could not consent that my foe should sustain my fire. My friend then approached, in the intention of aiding me to rise; but the opposing second again intervened, and declared that unless I could stand, and fire without assistance, he should remove his principal from the ground. I groaned with anguish; and nothing, I fear, prevented me from sending my bullet through the head of this zealous adviser, but the dread of thereby suffering my far more hated antagonist to I instigated my second to protest against the injustice of this proceeding; but his remonstrances were vain; for, as we both too well knew, the other was acting in accordance with the common rules and pre-cedents on these occasions. During this discussion I was momentarily growing weaker. Hastily, therefore, in the fear of becoming utterly incapacitated, I struggled to rise, and partially succeeded, but immediately fell again. A second time I made a still more violent effort, and contrived, with the assistance of the pistol, to raise myself on one knee. But the pain I then suffered was excruciating, and the great difficulty was yet to be sur-mounted. How vividly intense, even at this moment, is my recollection of the scene! My foe was still intently regarding me with the same impassive, inscrutable gaze. Not an emotion was apparent in the stony rigidity of his fixed and pale features. He neither quailed beneath my wrathful glances, nor retorted with a similar expression. His dark, deep-set eyes seemed to penetrate the inmost recesses of my soul, but offered no clue to the secrets of his own. At length I succeeded in attaining my feet. For a moment I reeled as though in a state of utter ebriety; then, with one final, and I may also say, superhuman exertion of my remaining strength, I stood for a single moment as firm and motionless as a rock, deliberately levelled my pistol at his throat, and fired. With the fierce shriek of the death-agony he sprang convulsively into the air, and with a dull heavy sound fell on the earth a corpse. I fulfilled, that the green grass was red beneath | of mental recreation, of which they were in him, uttered a faint cry of exultation, and sank into the arms of my second."

Some epithets, we think, had been better omitted; but, as a whole, the history of Miserrimus is strikingly original, forcible, and interesting. We expect much from the powers of the writer.

Christmas Carols, Ancient and Modern; including the most Popular in the West of England, and the Airs to which they are sung: also Specimens of French Provincial Carols. With an Introduction and Notes, by William Sandys, F.S.A. 12mo. pp. 331. London, 1833. Beckley.

An Introduction, occupying nearly a half of this volume, gives a very fair epitome of the histories of Christmas games, revels, &c. &c., as handed down to us by classical authors and curious antiquaries. It is pleasant to read; but to a professed critic offers little new, wherewith to indicate to his readers the quality of the article. But we will essay an extract, relative to dancing-an abomination, we trust, likely to be much practised by young men and maidens (not to restrain children and good-humoured elders of both sexes) during the ensuing four or five months.

"In these (i. e. the times immediately be-fore the Conquest)," says Henry, in his veri-table History of England, "as in more polished ages, the love of dancing appears to have been extended to a fault; for William of Malmsbury relates a story of fifteen young women and eighteen young men dancing and singing (A.D. 1012) in the churchyard of a church dedicated to St. Magnus, on the day before Christmas, and thereby disturbing one Robert, a priest, who was performing mass in the church. In consequence of his prayers to that effect, they continued to dance and sing for a whole year without intermission, feeling neither heat, cold, hunger, thirst, weariness, or wear of apparel, and wore away the earth till they were sunk up to the middle."

We have heard folks say, they loved dancing so much, that they would never tire of it; let them try, without a miracle, to dance, even on soft ground, till they are up to their middles! If it does not cure them, we will be sworn it pale with envy. will cure their partners.

The tracing of Christmas festivities to the Roman Saturnalia, and through their own changes, as the manners of different ages modified the forms of enjoyment, is always entertaining; and it is not the least of the philoso-phical pleasure to note how, seen in the distance, all the customs of the past appear to be so beautiful-how the inconveniences and irregularities of the present are felt. It might almost console us to think, that two or three lished times. Ecce signum. hundred years hence, we shall be the past!

"In many parts of the kingdom (says Mr. Sandys), especially in the northern and western parts, this festival is still kept up with spirit among the middling and lower classes, though its influence is on the wane even with them: the genius of the present age requires work. and not play; and since the commencement of this century a great change may be traced. The modern instructors of mankind do not think it necessary to provide for popular amusements, considering mental improvement the one thing needful: and to a great extent they may be right; the exercise of the mind among the working classes serving as a relaxation to bodily labour; as bodily exercise or athletic games serve to relieve from great mental exertion. Conferring on the labouring classes the power general incapable but a few years since, is like bestowing on them an additional sense,-and of the highest value, if properly directed. Still, a cheerful observance of the great festivals of the year may well combine with this popular rage for reading, and the 'schoolmaster' might allow his Christmas holidays to be something more than a mere cessation from labour for a day or two."

"All work, and no play," we agree with
Mr. Sandys and the old proverb, "makes Jack a dull boy;" it will be well if, as we have hinted elsewhere in this sheet, it does not make him a restless, discontented, and wicked one. We have said in that Review what we might do were we a senator, which, Heaven be thanked! we are not; and we may here go a step farther, and declare, that were we a king, which we are equally grateful not to be, we should certainly devise holidays and sports for our subjects, in despite of all Utilitarians in politics, and Puritans in religion. Yea, if they could enjoy nothing else, they should be obliged, upon pain of treason, to play at "Tinkeler's (i. e. Tinker's) shop," as they still do in far west and merry Cornwall. The fascinating game is thus described :-

"A large iron pot, with a mixture of soot and water, is placed in the middle of the room: one of the party acts as master of the shop, having a small mop in his left hand and a short stick in his right, as his comrades have also; each of these assumes a name, as Old Vulcan, Mend-all, Tear'em, All-my-men, &c. They all kneel down round the vessel: the master cries out, 'Every one and I;' they then all hammer away as fast as they can, some with ridiculous grimaces: the master suddenly cries out, 'All-my-men and I,' 'Mend-all and I,' or any other name he chooses, upon which all are to cease working, except the individual named. If any of them fail in attending to this, they are treated with a salute from the mop, well soaked in the sable liquid; and as the master contrives to puzzle them by frequently changing the names, and sometimes calling two or three together, the faces of most of the party are soon reduced to a state that would make even Warren's jet blacking look

"The Corn Market" is another good game; but we must refer to the book for its particulars; only remarking, that, with all its afflictions, it seems to be better for people than the Corn Laws, and quite equal, in point of hardship, to the poetical imagining of the Corn-Law Rhymes. Vide page cxiii.

With regard to the Carols here collected, they are curious, rude, and profane. The fa-miliarity of earlier ages is grating to more po-

"To-morrow shall be my dancing day,
I would my true love did so chance
To see the legend of my play,
To call my true love to my dance.
Sing, oh! my love, oh! my love, my love, my love,
This have I done for my true love.

is have 1 done for my true above.

Then was I born of a Virgin pure,
Of her I took fleshly substance;
Thus was I knit to man's nature,
To call my true love to my dance.
Sing, oh! &c.

In a manger laid and wrapped I was, So very poor, this was my chance, Betwixt an ox and a silly poor ass, To call my true love to my dance. Then afterwards baptized I was,
The Holy Ghost on me did glance,
My Father's voice heard from above,
To call my true love to my dance.

Into the desert I was led, Where I fasted without substance: The Devil bade me make stones my bread, To have me break my true love's dance. Then down to Hell I took my way,
For my true love's deliverance,
And rose again on the third day,
Up to my true love and the dance. Then up to Heaven I did ascend,
Where now I dwell in sure substance,
On the right hand of God, that man
May come unto the general dance.
Sing, oh! &c."

The following-of the time of Henry VII., VIII., with music in MS. British Museum-is in a more touching and becoming strain, and we do not remember having seen it before.

"A, my dere Son.
A, my dere son, sayd mary, a, my dere, kys thi moder Jhesu wt a lawghyng chere. Thys endnes nyght I sawe a syght This endnes night I sawe a sight all in my slepe, Mary this may she sung lullay,
& sore did wepe.
To kepe she sawight full fast a bowte her son fro colde;
Joseph seyd, wiff, my joy, my leff, say what ye wolde;
no thyng my spouse is In the howse unto my pay;
my son, a kyng the made all thyng, lyth in hay.

A, my dere son. A. my dere son.

my moder dere, a mend yor chere, my moder dere, a mend yor ch & now be styll; thus for to ly it is sothely my fadirs will. derision gret passion Infynytely, as it is fownde many a wownd suffir shall I suffyr shall I, on caluery that is so hye, ther shall I be; man to restore, naylid full sore uppon a tre.

A, my dere son." Some examples of French carols are literary curiosities; and a Cornish Christmas play is a good variety of the northern guizart representations by strolling children, about Christmas The notes contain some, if not new, little-known matter; as, for instance, of the Crucifixion :-- "The names of the two thieves were said to have been Titus and Dumachus 1 Infancy, chap. viii. v. 3), of whom the former prevented the latter from robbing Joseph and Mary on their journey to Egypt with Jesus, who then foretold to his mother that they should thirty years afterwards be crucified with him, and that Titus should go to Paradise."

Specimens of the old carol music are added, and no part of the volume has interested us more. Upon the whole, the work will be a favourite where such studies are loved and cherished; and at this season must be read with peculiar gratification.

A Journey from London to Odessa; with Notices of New Russia, &c. By John Moore. Paris, 1833. Galignani.

This is a very unassuming volume, and one of the best got-up English publications we have seen from the Parisian press. The writer, who has apparently been accustomed to foreign travel, and to have seen much, illustrates a very useful and correct itinerary by a pleasing journal of the principal incidents which befell him on his way in the year 1824, an account of the accommodation, or often want of accommodation, which awaited him, and a brief notice of the objects which particularly attracted his attention. The most novel portion of his route was, of course, through New Russia, of which Odessa may be esteemed the capital; and we shall copy out a few extracts as samples of his general information, and method of communicating it.

"The road from Gorlitz to Breslau is very sandy. A singular effect is produced by the form of the windows in the roofs of the houses in this part of the country. These windows are made in the shape of an eye, and a small projection of the tiles immediately above them imparts the character of a brow. As you drive along, these eyes seem to be watching you, and the traveller is constantly under a sort of architectural surveillance. The wheels of the carts used on these sandy roads are very high and narrow; many of the waggons are made of basket-work. Breslau, the capital of Silesia, is an interesting city. I followed my usual plan of mounting a tower, and was repaid for the trouble of ascending that of the Protestant church, St. Elizabeth, by a magnificent prospect. I found my way to a convent of Ursaline nuns, and had an opportunity of conversing with the lady-abbess, who is very old, and of noble family. After her departure, I had the pleasure of seeing a young and beautiful lady, of whom I purchased two specimens of flowers curiously worked on paper. This young lady is not a nun, but had been educated in the convent. She is related to one of the community: she spoke French very well, and took an opportunity of telling me, that the young persons who are placed in this convent to be educated, are treated with the utmost severity by the religieuse who has the charge of them.'

Further on we are told:

"The weather was very fine, and we travelled till midnight, when we stopped at a small dwelling at the entrance of a village called Katerimbourg. This, I found, was to be our resting-place for the remainder of the night: the spot was as silent as the grave. After knocking and calling for some time, a voice answered from within. A short colloquy having passed between the fuhrmann and the inmate, the door was opened, and I was shewn into a most miserable room, totally destitute of furniture. On looking over my journal, I find the following memorandum: 'Katerimbourg — first litter, Jew, or devil, fleas, &c. &c. I thought I had seen misery enough, but, alas! it was my doom to witness a good deal more. The being who inhabited this den was a Jew of the most forbidding aspect: he was of middle stature, and clothed in a black cassock fitting close to his lean carcass --- so lean, that (as a friend of mine was wont to say of a slim gentleman of our acquaintance) he would require stuffing to be a correct representative of the apothecary in Romeo and Juliet. His complexion was deadly pale; his eyes black as jet, and constantly in motion; his hair and beard matted and neglected. He spoke but seldom, and moved about with noiseless step, occasionally leaning against the wall, and eyeing me from top to toe. I felt fatigued, and ordered my bed : the creature vanished, but soon reappeared, carrying a quantity of hay. which he threw down in a corner of the room, shaking it up afterwards as though a litter were preparing for a horse. I had the cushions of my carriage arranged for a pillow; and having primed my pistols, and obtained a candle to burn until morning, I wrapped my cloak around me, and was left 'alone with my glory.

Alone! did I say? This is a mistake, for l had company of the most piquant description: myriads of fleas hopped about my devoted frame, punctured my skin, sucked my blood, tickled my nose, and banished sleep from my eyes. I hailed the dawn joyfully, and, rushing into the open air, ran to a distance from the hovel, with my enemies on my back, shook them off with disdain, and then hastened out of their reach. Nothing could tempt me to re-enter my bed-room. After some difficulty I obtained a little milk; for which slight refection, and my night's lodging, my impassable host charged me exorbitantly."

In thirty-seven days, through these comforts, our countryman reached Odessa, of the ancient and modern history of which he gives an epitome, from the period of its answering to the Axenos of the Greeks, to its revival some forty years ago by Prince Potemkin, its great improvement under the Duke of Richelieu, and its present condition as a mercantile town of considerable importance, and a great corn and wine depôt. We select two or three passages descriptive of some of its peculiar features.

"The public carriages of Odessa are called droshkis; they are built low, and are usually made to convey one person only, though I have seen two, and even three, passengers stowed in them. The general way for a gentleman to sit is as though he were on horseback. The morning after my arrival, I had occasion to mount one of these (to me) novel vehicles; and, to tell you the truth, i did not know exactly where to arrange my legs; for I had no notion of riding on cushionback. However, I watched others, bestrode my rocking-horse (for the springs are so elastic that the carriages yield to the slightest impulse), and was soon regularly installed à la Russe. The public droshkis are, for the most part, drawn by two horses. One of the animals has his head tied up to a kind of hoop, which rises from the ends of the shafts to about a foot above his ears, which makes him look grand; the other is so harnessed as to have his head drawn down almost to the ground, and on one side: this, and the management of the reins, causes him to curvet. It is painful to see the poor creatures thus fet-tered for mere show. The driver sits on a very small dickey-box; his dress is picturesque, consisting of a very low hat, widening at the top, ornamented with a broad silken band and bright buckle; he wears a kind of frock-coat, fitting close to the waist, round which it is strapped: this coat has not any collar, and as the men have their hair cut extremely short all round, the lower part of the back of the head is bare, as is also the neck. Many of these drivers have long beards. I have heard them singing wild but not unpleasing airs: they appear to me to have a natural good taste for music."

The account of the administration of justice is most unfavourable to Russia.

" Unfortunately (says Mr. Moore) I am able to speak positively as to the total absence of all justice in this country. It has fallen to my lot to have to manage a very unpleasant and complicated business; and, although I have contrived to keep out of a law-suit, I have thought it my duty to make inquiries as to what remedy I should have, in case matters should be pushed to extremity. Alas! I find that 'the glorious uncertainty of the law' is doubly uncertain here. The Russian tribunals are all corrupt. The judges generally receive fees from both plaintiff and defendant, and the highest bidder usually gains the cause!!!
'But,' said I to my informant, 'the laws are there; the judge must surely decide according to the statutes.' 'Ah! my dear sir,' replied my friend, 'you speak as an Englishman; but the jurisprudence of this country is all founded upon imperial ukases—your lawyer may find an ukase perfectly applicable to your view, and to the justice of the affair in question: -you may feel quite satisfied, in your own mind, that the decision must be in your favour ;-but your antagonist's solicitor will, in all probability, find another ukase of a diametrically opposite tendency, or (which is the same thing to you) it known in Great Britain by the appellation of the Old Lady in Threadneedle Street, and who issues her firmans here in the shape of Russian bank-notes. It is true that a third ukase might possibly be discovered, which, accompanied by a rouleau of ducats, would make the scales of justice incline to your side; but this would be a costly proceeding, and even a just decree might be evaded by an adept, who would be more than a match for you, with your oldfashioned, straightforward English ideas.'—

'Enough,' rejoined I; 'it has always been my opinion that one had better make a great sacrifice than go to law; but here nothing short of total ruin could ensue to an honest man who might be tempted to meddle with imperial ukases.' Upon expressing my astonishment at the existence of such disgusting abuses, observing that I had imagined that the emperor was high-minded and just, and that I presumed he must be ignorant of these vile proceedings, I was told that the Czar knew all about it that he deplored the evil-but that the government being too poor to pay the public offi-cers adequately, these peccadilloes were winked at! To this was attached another piece of information, viz. that after a man has been at his post long enough to have lined his pockets well by his mal-practices, he is put on the shelf to make room for some half-starved aspirant :so that the system is carried on from one generation to another. The contracts for the government supplies are secured and acted upon in the most nefarious manner. I know, from a good source, that the contractors bribe the authorities whose duty it is to superintend the due performance of their engagement, and that the most wholesale peculation is carried on unblushingly.

We shall now conclude with two brief anecdotes. The following odd prophecy had its origin at Paris:

Quand Louis mourts Charles Dix paraitra—

now read

Charles Disparaitra.

On leaving Vienna, by which city and Brody, Munich, and Paris, our traveller returned after a three months' residence at Odessa, he tells us an amusing story of his bargain respecting a conveyance.

"A person, named Solomon Pintner, has agreed to convey me to Strasbourg, with the same horses, in twelve days: when our bargain was completed, the man presented me with a piece of gold coin, of the value of about twenty shillings, by way of binding the said bargain. On all former occasions of this kind I have been called upon to make a deposit. Another peculiarity was, that, in the course of the negotiation with the coachmaster, I happened to mention that a friend of mine, who was about to leave Vienna, had been so fortunate as to be offered a seat in the carriage of a baroness :- 'Well,' said old Solomon Pintner, 'I will engage to get a baroness to accompany you, if you wish it.' This was really very kind : - but I modestly declined the obliging offer, considering whence it came."

We have not stopped at the author's remarks on the Duke of Reichstadt, whom he saw in his fourteenth year at Vienna, nor at his retrospections relating to Napoleon; and shall only venture to state a very curious report which we lately heard about the former, namely, that he passed several weeks in London incognito, his secret being little known beyond the immediate circle of his Majesty, of the Austrian ambassawill be coaxed into the signification desired, by dor, Prince Esterhazy, and of the proprietors the attractive influence of a personage well- of the hotel in Berkeley Square, where he rumour: but we had it with such circumstantial corroborations as that he visited Windsor. was most amiable and engaging in his manners, and almost devoted to music, insomuch that he absolutely played on the pianoforte at a public concert ?!?!

The Invisible Gentleman. By the Author of "Chartley the Fatalist," "The Robber," &c. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1833. Bull. THERE is a species of composition peculiarly suited to the present season of the year. Of all lights, fire-light is the most fanciful: the shadows so deep and so flickering; the tongues of flame now dancing up like wild thoughts, now dying away amid the bright clear red, whose settled cheerfulness is such a contrast to their uncertainty; the many shapes to be seen or to be believed amid the burning coals; the ghosts, murders, and omens, which are natural subjects of discourse at such time of din obscurity; -all make the fire-light Fancy's own peculiar atmosphere, and such element is at the height of its dominion in November and December. We marvel not that Christmas tales have passed into a proverb—the Fire-king then reigns in all his glory. We are persuaded that all supernatural legends, all stories of apparitions, all fairy legends, have been conceived during that peculiar and fire-lighted period of the year. "The Invisible Gentleman" makes his appearance, to express our meaning by a contradiction, at the very time he ought: matter-offact as we are now-a-days, if we ever do believe in the wonderful, it must be during the winter evenings. The present narrative is one of the most entertaining fictions we have met with for a long time; the idea is very original, and brought into play with a lively air of truth, which gives a dramatic reality even to the su-pernatural. At first we thought it was a translation from the German, till we saw in the title-page the announcement of an author on whose former productions this is an immense improvement. The material of the fiction is the variety of difficulties in which a young gentleman is involved in consequence of his having accepted the power of being invisible; and most amusingly are they brought about. To explain the ensuing scene, it is necessary to mention that he disappears when he pulls his left ear, and becomes again visible by pulling the right. Now for a tête-à-tête with his mistress.

" The drawing-room in which this never-tobe-forgotten evening was passed contained a more than usual portion of those encumbrances which fashion orders to be admitted under the name of furniture. There were Chinese china mandarins, that, like courtly sycophants on our side of the globe, always began bowing and smirking whenever they were rudely struck or kicked. A six-feet pagoda occupied one corner, and the model of an eastern dwelling, with its bamboo, net-like outworks, filled a corresponding recess. On the two mantlepieces, pierslabs, tables, and 'what nots,' were scattered and grouped-little fat, squat, ugly, face-making rice Josses, Bonzes, and nondescript monsters—and beneath and in the windows stood huge porcelain jars. Then there were cabinets inlaid with gold and pearl, and furnished with labyrinths of recesses and secret drawers, in which little else was to be seen save the ingenuity of the workman. The remainder, or more useful part of the furniture of the room, need not be described farther than by stating, that it was such as may be seen every day in the dwellings of the wealthy, or of those who would fain make the world believe

We know not if there is truth in this | them to be the peculiar favourites of fortune and fashion. In this museum-like drawing-room Bernard and Alicia sat, and lounged, and walked and talked, and laughed, and whispered, and so forth, till the watchman (for these things happened in the days of the Charlies) bawled 'Past eleven o'clock! When the aforesaid nocturnal guardian was bellowing his unintelligible announcement of the hour, Alicia was absolutely sitting on the right knee of our hero! It may be supposed that she had not often occupied such a position, as, in order to save herself from falling, her left arm passed round his neck, and thus afforded the same degree of security as an unskilful rider finds in grasping the pommel of the saddle. It is not to be imagined that the seat was of her own choosing. Bernard had thrown himself upon the sofa, and pulled her towards him. fear which she expressed of getting her hair still more out of order, was, perhaps, the cause why she did not struggle violently: but still there was a show of resistance; and even after she was seated, she made one or two ineffectual attempts to rise. Bernard threatened her playfully if she would not sit still, but whatever his threats were, they seem not to have been sufficiently alarming to produce the desired effect, for, instead of submitting quietly to her fate, she forthwith commenced a series of fresh struggles, the termination of which was of a most appalling nature. Once or twice she appeared nearly to have accomplished her release. and then anon it was evident that he was the stronger. At length, scarcely knowing what she did, and her left arm being in the position before mentioned, her hand came in contact with his ear. She pulled it, and instantly her lover disappeared! The poor girl opened hereyes as wide as possible—still felt that her seat was firm under her, and that her arm was as before. A sickly feeling came over her; it seemed as though she had been struck with sudden blindness. Then she pressed her hands to her eyes and forehead, as if to ascertain whether she was not dreaming or in a swoon. The dress of his mistress prevented Bernard from missing his legs, as in his first invisible essay, and his arms were (for the truth must now all be told) round her waist; and moreover, he had never before imagined that any other hand than his own could possess the power of pulling him out of sight. For these reasons he was utterly unconscious of his present condition; and alarmed at the extraordinary change in the young lady's countenance. he exclaimed, in an anxiously tender manner, You are unwell, dear Alicia? Tell me, my dearest girl. Surely I have not hurt you unintentionally? I shall never forgive myself if I have.' She heard the words-looked wildly, as it seemed to him, in his face; then a cold shuddering came over her, and she cried convulsively, 'Oh, this is too-too horrible!' The next moment she had fainted, and lay perfectly insensible on his shoulder. Such was his extreme agitation, that he did not perceive what had happened till after he had placed her upon the sofa. Then, crossing the room to pull the bell for assistance, the real state of the case was revealed, and he hastily made himself again conspicuous, when it was too late."

By the by, what a general custom it is now to date books 1833: really 1832 is a very illused epoch, thus to be shorn of its fair proportions. The Annuals first set the fashion: perhaps they thought it necessary to cut a month or two short, as they might not feel strong enough to last out the twelve.

Records of Travels in Turkey, Greece, &c.; and of a Cruise in the Black Sea, with the Capitan Pasha, in the Years 1829, 1830, and 1831. By Adolphus Slade, Esq. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1832. Saunders and Otley.

Upon a closer examination of this work, though we still find its tone "light and amusing," we mentioned in our last, as the opinion we had formed on dipping into it, that tone sometimes offends the taste, and does not bear to be continued so long where we read steadily for the sake of information. Naturally united with this, the author is a very free speaker about men and things: he never puts any position doubtingly, but pronounces ex cathedra—as if there could be but one right opinion, and that opinion his own, upon any subject. As we do not mean to investigate these matters critically, we will not take upon ourselves to say that he may not be very correct in his judgment; but as a general rule, we confess our dislike to the appearance of dogmatism, and always feel more apt to question a dictator than a moderate reasoner, who allows a little to others, instead of claiming all to himself.

Mr. Slade, passing through France and parts of Italy and Greece, got to Constantinople in May 1829; a period of the greatest interest, when the second Russian campaign was beginning. He had the good luck to become acquainted with the capitan pasha; and the still better luck to be allowed to take a short cruise on board his ship with him, in the Euxine. Remaining afterwards a short while at the Turkish capital, he visited Varna, Bourgas, and other notable places, in H. M.S. Blonde; and then crossed the theatre of the war, the Balkan, Schumla, - returned to Constantinople, and examined it more leisurely; and finally, in the summer of 1830, returned to Smyrna, viá Adrianople, Demotica, Enos, Samothraki, and Salonica. Such a tour, it will be seen at once, must have furnished much food for remark to an observant traveller; and Mr. Slade did not fail to avail himself of the opportunities afforded him.

Of the author's proneness to censure, without its being possible that he should have examined and been aware of all the things done, or the facts on which such proceedings were grounded, we quote the following sketches:-

At Genoa, "the aspirants for naval commissions are educated at a college during four or five years, during which, at intervals, they are embarked. Annually a frigate or corvette makes a tour in the Levant, and occasionally a squadron displays the flag to the bey of Tunis, or the pasha of Tripoli. In 1825, a squadron imposed terms on the latter, having first burnt a schooner in his port. This brilliant affair, in which one man was wounded, was an era for an Italian navy, and placed it, in its opinion, on a par with the British navy. battle of Algiers was scarcely considered a greater exploit. The admiral, who was in his frigate, anchored five miles off, was created a baron, and on all the actors crosses were bestowed, to the discontent of several, as no distinction was made between the meritorious, who pulled in under the ill-directed fire of the pasha's batteries, and one who winded his boat and rowed in the opposite direction.

" Easter Monday I witnessed the ceremony of administering the oath of fidelity to the troops. A theatre was erected on one side of the Aqua Verde (a square), amid piles of shot, and an altar raised in it. High mass was performed; and then the governor, the Marquis D'Yenne, a gallant old Savoyard, much loved by the Genoese, read the formula. The soldiers answered Giuro-at least, those who chose; those who did not, held their tongues, and considered themselves exempt, as a young radical officer told me an hour afterwards, when I rallied him on his inconsistency in swearing fidelity to the government in public-against it in private. As the ceremony is repeated every year, it follows that the value of the oath does not exceed that period." [This is poor authority.]

Of the Greeks-

"This organised and tolerated system of piracy, generally accompanied by revolting barbarity, was the most prominent feature of the Greek revolution, as well as a solecism (from its impunity) in history. The extent to which it was carried appears incredible to those who did not witness it. Boats launched for the traffic from every part of the Archipelago. The deep inlets formed by the long promontories of Macedonia conveniently enabled the Armatolis to change the scene of their operations from land to sea. None so distinguished himself as a certain Thamantis, chief of a band which had been for years the terror of the Turkish and Christian villages indiscriminately. At the commencement of the revolution he excited the peaceable inhabitants of Nevousta to revolt; but, on being attacked by Aboul-loubout Pasha, from Salonica, basely fled, and left them to be decimated; then with the versatility of genius he turned pirate, and made himself equally renowned on the water as he had been on land. No flag was respected by him_scarcely the Grecian; and he wound up a series of exploits, in 1827, by murdering the crew of an Austrian vessel, who had dared to resist him. Finding, after this action, which marked him to the cruisers of all nations, that his aquatic career was too hazardous to continue, he prudently obtained an amnesty from the Porte for his former deeds as a klepht, and retired to his native village at the foot of Mount Olympus. Thus far his history possessed nothing uncommon-counterpart of a hundred similar and contemporary, checkered by blood and rapine; but the following year it was en-nobled by Mr. S. Canning deputing the English consul of Salonica to negotiate with him in person, in order to make him promise that he would renounce piratical habits. The unexpected proposal was too advantageous to be rejected; eagerly closing with it, the corsair drew out a declaration to the desired effectthat is, signed a treaty of peace, and sent it by the consul to the ambassador, then at Poros; since when, free from all apprehension of justice from any quarter, he enjoys his ill-gotten wealth in quiet. Now this was an unnecessary concession to expediency: Thamantis, having been guilty of the most atrocious acts, should have been made an example of; the Turkish government would have had him taken, on being applied to officially by the English ambassador. The number of brigands who obtain free pardon in Turkey is no proof of a want of power to take them up: the Porte calculates loss and profit. The expense of apprehending a powerful brigand is certain; the sum that he offers for his pardon is also certain; and he will do no more harm-at least, for some time. When, however, the Porte wishes to catch a brigand—a determination which is always taken when a brigand, once pardoned, resumes his old trade—it never fails. Precise orders are sent to the pashas, who always obey when their own interest is not involved; he is hunted from province to prothe authorities are up against him; and he generally ends by being betrayed by his own followers. Such has been the fate of many daring klepthes, after having followed their will for years; and such would have been the fate of Thamantis, had the necessary means been resorted to. He would then have justly suffered as a criminal, instead of capitulating as an honourable foe, with the representative of majesty."

Now, we daresay our ambassador had as good information as Mr. Slade, and that neither of them were likely to know precisely what the Porte would have done in certain future contingencies. The following appears to be an accurate as well as vivid description of the exterior habits and manners of a Turkish noble, the third man in the empire. " I have hitherto said little on the habits of the capitan pasha—those of most Ottoman grandees. He led a life of absolute ennui. He could neither read nor write, nor was there any body to read to him, had he wished it. He did not play at chess, therefore had an enjoyment less than the sailors : neither had he any person to converse with, an advantage possessed by every body else on board. Between a master and his slaves there can be no conversation, since the latter must assent and smile en règle. His legs seemed made for no other purpose than to bend under him: his hands to run over his comboloyo (rosary). A narghiler was never from his lips, except while he ate, or prayed, or slept: how he performed the first of these offices I have described; suffice for his meals, that they took place twice a day at unsettled hours. Officers continually stood before him, arms crossed, eyes cast down-a painful apprentissage which every Osmanley goes through before arriving at power - and anticipated every desire with surprising dexterity.

If he wished to rise, he was lifted on his legs; if he drank, the glass was held to his lips; if he walked, he was supported by the arms; if an ignorant fly alighted on his brow, officious fans warned the intruder not to return; even when he spat, which was not rare, he being asthmatic, there was never wanting one to hold his handkerchief for the precious token. Such servility—though perfectly natural from the effect of early education, therefore not abstractedly servile-was disgusting to witness. performed, too, by men who in their own homes exacted the same from their inferiors, and thus made themselves amends for their own humiliation. From the top to the bottom of the ladder is a gradation of similar servitude. The grand vizir kisses the sultan's foot; he bows to Mohammed. The pasha kisses the grand vizir's foot; the bey, the pasha's; the aga, the bey's; and so on. No mussulman subject is so high but what he has a master, and none so low as not to have a slave; the son is slave to the father. I often saw the capitan pasha's son, a royal page, with him; but the youth never sat or tasted food in his presence. With all his deficiencies, Achmet Papuchgi was a good-natured man, a complete contrast to his predecessors during the last twenty years, who were all remarkable for cruelty. The quality seemed inherent to the office. In the middle of the day he crept into the kennel abaft the mizen-mast, and reposed for some hours, his example being duly followed by the officers, stretched out on the quarter-deck, and covered by flags to keep off the sun. On awaking, coffee and chibouques were served. Water was then brought, with a complete change of gar-refuse him an asylum when it is known that by three, by two high, he washed and dressed ; then came out and enjoyed the cool of the evening on his quarter-deck couch, always doing me the honour to place me beside him with a chibouque; and no doubt it was a droll sight to the crew, who all gathered round the pasha and me thus cheek by jowl. His band, consisting of as many drums and cymbals as could be collected, with two clarionets and one fife, usually made a noise for our benefit. It played the hunter's chorus in Freischutz, Zitti zitti, and Malbrook, over and over till I fairly wished it at the bottom of the sea. I not only could not stop my ears, but was obliged to applaud liberally. Thinking, one evening, that its style was more adapted to Turkish music, at the same time intending a compliment, I asked the pasha whether it could perform any Turkish airs. 'Turkish air!' he repeated with astonishment; 'Mashallah! have you not been listening to them these two hours?' I bowed, and took refuge in ignorance. He asked me one evening if I would like to see his regular soldiers; I had never heard of any being on board. Presently six scare-crows marched aft, preceded by a drum and fife, each carrying a musket, and wearing a shabby tactico uniform. A first-rate's marines! I could scarce refrain from laughing out at the idea, although a thousand eyes were fixed on me to observe my admiration. The pasha told them seriously to do their best, for a judge of military performances was by. Accordingly they went through the manual exercise, and the same was rendered exceeding amusing by the drollery of the jester, who, shouldering a long chibouque, acted as fugelman, to the roars of both spectators and soldiers. I warmly applauded, and the pashs in delight gave the corporal a piece of gold, which was contested by the jester, who swore that without him the troop would have been disgraced. The chief entertainment of every evening was provided by the crew, who, when our orchestra closed, commenced acting gross buffoonery, such as ducking in tubs of water for money, when many a poor fellow half-drowned himself in vain attempts to take with his lips the thin bit of silver, shining at the bottom; or playing at bear and monkey, when both the bear and monkey well deserved the piastres their beating gained them; or blind man's buff. This last game was capital. The blind man, provided with a stick, was at liberty to hit every body within reach, only subject to the inconvenience of tripping over the bodies of his prostrate fellows, or over the comings down a hatchway. The pasha's attendants received sundry blows in keeping him off the presence, and as he readily found his way amongst them, I supposed that he was purposely allowed a peep-hole, especially as his excellency enjoyed it much. A game also of men hanging in pairs to the spanker-boom, till one turned senseless or cried quarter, afforded infinite amusement. Each exhibition the deck was convulsed at the writhings of the actors; the pasha, forgetting his hanteur, would join in the laugh, and rapidly combing his beard with his fingers, throw pieces of gold at the victor. 'Well,' he said to me one evening that I was more than usually tired of this foolery,—' does your capitan pasha amuse himself in this way?' I could not for the life of me flatter him; I simply answered that the English capitan pasha had always else to do. A dead silence, and mutual looks of surprise, ensued. Such were the occupations of the third man of the empire; of one of the chiefs on whom depended the fate of Turkey."

vince; the villages, scenes of his extortions, ments, and in the same narrow box, six feet One of his crew would be equally queer in a

British vessel; viz. a professional jester—thus | remony, and informed him that the grand duke introduced and described.

" In the morning we were close off the Bos phorus, nearly becalmed. Not a strange sail was in sight, a void marvellously consoling to the crew, among whom I perceived a sad spirit of apprehension. I am not vain enough to say I did not share it, (the mere circumstance of there being no surgeon on board was discouraging,) but at any rate I did not shew it, and being fairly in for the worst, determined to make the best of it. I considered the trial of our strength only deferred. My principal aim was to encourage the chief, and, therefore, having first breakfasted on coffee thick as chocolate, without sugar, bread, and honey, I repaired to him. He was undergoing the operation of having his head shaved, and looked very dismal: that done, he performed his minor ablutions, and said his prayers, I all the while smoking his narghiler on the divan. 'What can I do?' the pasha despondingly said, ' with such men, such means? they know nothing. 'Nor do you,' I thought; and replied, 'Let us do our best; allow me to exercise the guns, it will give the men confidence: if we do meet the enemy, let us not die like dogs!' scarcely heeded me at the moment, for his attention was suddenly attracted by the appearance of a boat coming off. He hoped it contained his jester and his pilot, who had missed their passage the day before, and whose absence considerably annoyed him. He was disappointed; it brought an order from the seraskier pasha to steer out to sea again. His countenance fell; and we were about to fill the maintop-sail, when a merchantman's boat was seen emerging from the shade of the canal's high banks. We distinguished in it a Frank and an Osmanley, the objects of the pasha's solicitude. The jester skipped on deck with the confidence of one who knew that his presence would excuse his absence. He was gaily attired in scarlet and gold, and his fez was bound by a silver band. He was dumpy in stature, but active in limb; and his countenance displayed more archness than folly. He saw the suppressed smile of the officers, and at once ran up to the pasha, who affected to look stern, and, making a somerset, took hold of the hem of his robe, saying, 'Thus will the Russian admiral reel before your potent thunder, and thus will I salute him,' making a sign with his foot. 'Pezaveng,' said the old man, taking him good-humouredly by the ear, 'I will nail this to my cabin-door.' 'The fool will then hear the wise man's secrets,' replied the other, ' and you will have to sew his mouth up. What would you do without his tongue? Talk to him,' he added, pointing to the pilot, who stood at the gangway, doubting what to do; 'without his boat your highness's Tom Fool must have come off on a porpoise's back, for the Pezaveng caikgis will not take jests for piastres.' This acknowledgement, which included a sarcasm on his slender emoluments, secured his companion's grace; and with this invaluable addition we made sail. He had originally been a dervish, (a jester's profession, after all,) and was much liked by all the crew, for whom he was always ready to exert his influence."

A good story:—
"When the first news of the capture of Varna reached Warsaw, a German trader ventured to doubt its truth, in a large coffee-house, where the company were discussing on the subject, like the first best. How happily is the feeling and said that it wanted confirmation. He was scarcely out of his bed the next morning when a police-officer came into his room without ce-wanted to see him. 'Why-what-'exclaimed the terrified German, 'what have I done?'

You will soon know,' replied the satellite. With unpleasant forebodings the poor man arrayed himself in his best, and obeyed the summons. 'So,' says Constantine to him, 'you do not believe that the emperor's army has taken Varna—what do you know about Varna that makes you doubt of its fall?' 'Please your highness, I am a poor ignorant man ;-I merely thought—' 'You thought; then, sir, you must learn to think right.' 'Pardon, your highness—I meant no harm.' There is no harm done: do not be afraid. Hold!' continued Constantine, seeing the German about to prostrate himself-' a courier is this moment going to Varna, you will go in his kibitka and clear up your doubts.' Away they go, click clack, day and night-the poor German in a mortal fright, under the idea that he is on the road to Siberia. They arrive at Varna, and the courier addresses his companion for the first time since they left Warsaw. 'Sir, this town is Varna; you will have the goodness to put the question to any body you like, and convince yourself. Now, sir, you see these troops—look at them well—examine the uniforms. Are you satisfied that they are Russian troops?' 'I am perfectly satisfied,' answered the German. 'Then, sir,' replied his companion, ' you have no further business here. In a quarter of an hour another courier will start for Warsaw; you will return in his kibitka, and report yourself to the grand duke.' Away he goes again, jolt, jolt, in fear of dislocating half his bones, for being free, this journey, from mental anxiety about Siberia, he had leisure to observe that he was made of flesh and nerves. Constantine welcomed him with a horse-laugh. 'Now,' he Varna.'' [To be continued.]

The Lauread, a Satire of the Day. In Four Books, with Notes. Book the First. 12mo. pp. 120. London, 1832. Cochrane and Co. THE writer, the author of "Cavendish," points out the difference between satire and slander: "The Slanderer is he who maligns the good for the amusement of the vicious; the Satirist, he who exposes the vicious for the protection of the good. The first class form a set of cowardly, craven-hearted wretches, who are equally ready to fasten on the weak and harmless as to shrink from vice exulting in its strength. The second class are those who assist the former, and, regardless of all consequences, attack the

This is true; but how are we to judge to which character an author belongs who takes upon himself to lash not only the public but the private lives of other men? We cannot decide; and therefore shall merely observe, that we see an individual for whom we entertain well-founded esteem severely vilified in this volume, which displays considerable ability, and no disposition to spare any one who may differ from, or have offended the writer.

Illustrations of Modern Sculpture; No. 11. By T. K. Hervey. London, 1832. Relfe and Unwin; Moon and Co.

of a cathedral expressed!

"Where men speak low, as if they feared To wake the silent dead."

"Lady" is a bad epithet as applied to Hebe; but generally Mr. Hervey seems inspired by his subjects; we must say of him in his own words:

"As nightingales, where echo dwells, Breathe out their sweetest song."

His great charm is the grace and originality of his similes; his great fault is their profusion. We conclude with a well-merited tribute to Mr. Baily. "It is not to be doubted, that had Baily been found by his countrymen in the metropolis of the arts, his genius must, amid the strong lights of the 'everlasting city,' have secured for him, in spite of his English name, those triumphs which, it is to be little doubted, yet await him. How soon he may be able to break through the cloud of prejudice which still hovers over English art, that doubt 'whether any good thing can come out of Nazareth,' we will not venture to anticipate; but we will confidently predict, that when he shall have succeeded in doing so, his countrymen will make him amends for their past apathy. In the mean time, such one of the patrous of art as shall be the means of bringing his talents into the open light, which alone is wanting for their full appreciation, and of administering to them that encouragement which (apart from the reward it brings) is the very fuel that feeds the fire of genius, will secure for himself no small share in the honours which, we will doubt not, the sculptor is one day destined to achieve."

Lays and Legends of the Rhine. By J. R. Planché, F.S.A. With Lithographic Illustrations by G. Jones, from Drawings by Haghe; sketched on the spot. London, 1832. Tilt.

WE have more than once had occasion to speak said, 'you will go to that café where you were the last evening you were in Warsaw, and acquaint the company that the Russians are in collected in a very pretty and portable volume, making a most attractive tome even at this season of literary luxury.

> Burns's Complete Works. Diamond edition. 18mo. pp. 323. London, 1832, Orr; Simpkin and Marshall; Edinburgh, Chambers; Dublin, Curry and Co.; Glasgow, M'Leod and Co.; Manchester, Bancks and Co.

DR. CURRIE's four volumes are comprehended within this very small tome; and to those readers whose eyes can dwell intelligibly on clear diamond type, it must be a precious literary gem. Of Burns, by the by, the Ettrick Shepherd is writing a new life, which, we daresay, will be a very curious and interesting one, notwithstanding Lockhart's admirable memoir. latter,—relying solely on their moral courage and innate rectitude of purpose."

But of such a man we never can know too much; and were he not already universally prized, the present publication would contri-bute much (as, indeed, it will do among the rising generation) to the convenient diffusion of his immortal productions.

The Magdalen, and other Tales. By James Sheridan Knowles, author of "Virginius," "The Hunchback," &c. &c. Pp. 199. London, 1832. J. Moxon.

A PLEASANT collection of improbabilities; told, however, with that air of earnestness which is Sheridan Knowles's peculiar merit. Most of them have appeared before in the pages of the Monthly Magazine, where we have noticed some clever and original tales. The little volume is inscribed to Mr. Forster, a fact which would give infinite delight to the author of "Traits of Irish Character," who ascribes all our improvement in imaginative fictions to having disconnected dedication and patronage. We may be allowed to say, that we consider a kindly exchange of courtesy, the feeling above all others to be cultivated by literary men: appreciation of others' excellence is the best security that it will be extended to Our own.

Tales and Conversations. By Emily Cooper. Pp. 186. London, 1832. Fox.

A VERY well-meaning little volume, but somewhat deficient in interest. Of all stories, those for children require to be told with animation: the incident instructs more than the precept.

Peter Parley's Tales about Natural History. With 280 Cuts. Second edition. 12mo. pp. 334. London, 1833, Tegg; Glasgow, Griffin; Edinburgh, Stillies; Dublin, Cumming, and Wakeman

This very pretty volume gives concise descriptions, with excellent cuts, of the appearance and habits of the animal world, from the elephant to the mouse, the eagle to the wren, the whale to the minnow, the boa to the ant. It can hardly be called "Tales" of animals, though it contains some anecdotes from Darwin, Wilson, White, Jesse, and other interesting writers on natural history. We miss cuts of American and other distant novelties; and we observe a few blunders, such as (p. 228) putting a story of a thrush into the account of the wren, with which it has nothing to do: but these are only trivial objections; and the work, both for the beauty and accuracy of its numerous engravings, and the entertaining and instructive character of its letter-press, is admirably adapted for the perusal of youth. We may state that it is a reprint from an American publication of most extensive and merited popularity. The anecdote of a canary that used to faint when its cage was cleaned is a curious one: we had forgotten it.

An Introduction to Botany. By John Lindley, F.R.S. &c. &c. With six copper-plates and numerous wood engravings. 8vo. pp. 557. London, 1832. Longman and Co.

This is by far the best elementary work on botany that we know of. The wood-cuts and illustrations are in the first style. Mr. Lindley, who, as a scientific botanist, stands in the very first rank, has in the present work condensed and arranged, in a most agreeable form, all the newest discoveries and latest information in this fascinating science. The second book, on the physiology of plants, is highly interesting and instructive. We recommend the work to students and amateurs.

Goethe's Versuch über die Metamorphose der Pflantzen. Essai sur la Métamorphose des Plantes. Traduit par Fréderic Soret. 8vo. pp. 239. Stuttgart, 1831.—Goethe's Essay on the Metamorphosis of Plants.

This is an excellent essay, by the celebrated Goethe, on a very interesting and curious subject, till of late years but little cultivated, although it had early excited the attention of the great Linnæus. Its object is to investigate the laws which regulate the transformation of the parts of a plant into each other, as, for example, the stamina into petals in the double rose, &c. The present essay treats fully of every branch of this inquiry; and its style alone, leaving the greatness of the author's name out of the question, would recommend it to universal attention.

A Treatise on Epidemic Cholera, as it has pre- | times as clever as it would be, this alone is sufvailed in India; together with the Reports of the Medical Officers made to the Medical Boards of the Presidencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, &c. By Frederick Corbyn, Esq. M.R.C.S.L., &c. 8vo. pp. 389. Calcutta, 1832.

A clever work on this hackneyed subject; although we cannot say that the author has added any thing to our previous knowledge. Mr. Corbyn is a decided non-contagionist.

Elements of Materia Medica and Therapeutics. &c. By A. T. Thomson, M.D. Professor of Materia Medica in the University of London. Vol. I. London, 1832. 8vo. pp. 747. Longman and Co.; Taylor.

An excellent manual for the student, and no less useful to the practitioner. We think the doctor's classification of medicines the best we have seen - every way superior to those of Drs. Young and Murray.

Poema Canino, Analico, Latinum super Adventu recenti Serenissimarum Principum, non Cancellarii præmio donatum aut donandum, nec in Theatro Sheldoniano recitatum aut recitandum.

This jeu-d'esprit is the production, we are told, of a young and rising Oxonian, to whose humour and talent it does credit. We quote a short passage as a specimen :--

"Tum subito præses, all things jam rite peractis,
'Nos hunc concursum extemplo dissolvimus,' inquit—
Exoritur clamorque virûm, clangorque tubarum.
Effudit vacuis turbam domus alta cathedris,
Unå eddemque viå Princessam effudit et ipsam.
Curritur ad Christchurch, de Christchurch curritur All

Alfredi tandem fessas domus alta recepit Altreut tandem reseas domus atta recepti. Hospitio of the best, sed quod magis hearty voluntas Commendat domini cum sedulitate felolum, Plurima quam nitidà que stant opsonia mensâ, Scrublatumve platum, kidglovative ministri. Quis cladem ilius luncheon, quis dishla fando Explicet? haud equidem quanquam sint volces a hunder.

dred.

Cast iron all, omnes dapium comprendere formas, Magnificæque queam fastus evolvere cœnæ. Magninceque queam rastus evolvere corne.
Egressis, leque enim possunt eatare for ever)
Gens efframa ruens, nondum graduatia pubes,
Ingeminant loudos plausus, hip hip hurra cœlum
Percutit, high wavère capi, quadrangulus huzzas
Audiit, atque imis tremefactus sedibus High Street."

The Doctrine of the Church of Geneva, second Series; comprising Discourses by the following modern Divines of that city — Bastard, Bouvier, Celérier jun., Chenevière, Chey-sièrre, Munier, Naville. Edited by the Rev. J. S. Pons and the Rev. R. Cattermole, B.D. 8vo. pp. 319. London, 1832: Treuttel and Co., Rivingtons, Hatchards, Seeleys.

A VERY excellent collection of sermons, and fully illustrative of the intent announced in the title-to exhibit the doctrines of the Church of Geneva. To clerical readers, in particular, the volume must be deeply interesting.

Romance of Irish History. 2 vols. 12mo. London, 1832. Ridgway.

A NOVEL belonging rather to the former than to the present school of historic fiction. It embodies a romantic and interesting storythe fate of the Desmonds; and gives a pleasing and correct sketch of a period abounding in material for the poet and the novelist.

The East Indian Sketch-Book. By a Lady. 2 vols. London, 1832. Bentley. WERE we to judge by internal evidence, we should say the "Lady" in the title-page was an apocryphal person; and we have an intense dislike to being humbugged, according to the definition of Dr. O'Liffey. Were the book ten ficient to condemn it. What will readers say, for instance, to "a lady" who leads military detachments, marches and countermarches, eats and drinks very freely, and in short acts so like a man, that it is impossible to know what to make of her as a woman? For example, at p. 140, this strange sort of "a lady" tells us, "I am always a better man when I can lose the Indian in the Englishman:" which confession has puzzled us sorely, though not more than the following, in the same page, when some thieves had tried their art in the tent where she was asleep..." Rose in alarm and called my wife, who, naturally enough, went into hysterics," &c. &c. Better had it been, in such a work, to have dropped this silly and unsupported character, and appeared in the true light of a discontented subaltern. The pages are filled with grumbling about the slow promo-tion, the bad climate, the want of a free press, and a thousand and one other grievances. Dull, yet flippant; utterly deficient in talent to paint either the picturesque of the country or the humours of real life; repeating one or two native histories, which have already been infinitely better told,—witness that of Kishen Kower in Colonel Tod. The readers of the East Indian Sketch-Book will be greatly disappointed if they seek for either interest or amusement.

CLEARING OFF ARREARS.

(Continued.)

(Continued.)

(1.) A Sketch of the History of the Church of England, to the Revolution of 1688, by T. V. Short, B.D. &c. &c. This is a good and a useful general history of our national church, and one which the student of divinity will find it very advantageous to consult. Nor will its intelligence be thrown away on the more advanced clergyman, who can no where else find so well-digested a view of all that is interesting to his sacred profession. Though the rector of a parish in Hants, the author is not particularly favourable to the establishment of which he is a member.

(2.) Church History through all Ages, &c., by Thomas Timpson. Compiled from many sources, this volume also contains much information. It is more a work for youth than for the learned in ecclesiastical writers; and warmly supports the cause of Sunday schools, and other institutions for the diffusion of religious instruction.

(3.) Memoirs of Felix Neff, by the Rev. W. S. Gilly, M.A. &c. This interesting volume gives us the biography of a Protestant pastor of the High Alps, and of his labours in Dauphiné, whose church the author traces in a remarkable manner to the primitive Christians in Gaul. It is clear, from the evidence adduced, that a pure church custed here throughout dark and corrupt ages. Neff himself is a beautiful character. The whole is worthy of the author, who has done so much for the Vaudois.

(4.) Truth of Revelation Demonstrated. This volume is a curiodity; Its object being to demonstrate the truth the author, who has done so much for the Vaudois.

(4.) Truth of Revelation Demonstrated. This volume is a curiosity; its object being to demonstrate the truth of revelation from existing monuments, sculptures, gems, coins, and medals. It rather elucidates facts of Jewish and other early history from these data, and argues others on points of geology, tradition, and ancient remains of every kind.

on points or geology, tradition, and ancient remains or every kind.

(5.) The Life of Christ. This little book, by the late Isaac Taylor, of Ongar, is interspersed with poetry, and embellished with many cuts. The name of the author is a sufficient guarantee for its fitness to be put into the hands of youth.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

LINNEAN SOCIETY.

A. B. LAMBERT, Esq. in the chair.—Read observations on the Tropæolum pentaphyllum of Lamarck, by Mr. Don. This plant is a native of regions bordering on the river Plate, and has been recently introduced to the British garden; a circumstance which has enabled Mr. Don to supply several defects in the descriptions by preceding authors of this species. The conclusion of Dr. Nees von Esenbeck's account of East India Solaneæ was likewise read.

(1.) 2 vols. 8vo. Oxford, Parker; London Cambridge, Deightons. (2.) Pp. 527. London, Westley and Davis. (3.) 8vo. pp. 342. Rivingtons. (4.) 12mo. pp. 276. Longman and Co. (5.) Pp. 115. London, Walling. Oxford, Parker; London, Fellowes;

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

ROYAL SOCIETY.

F. BAILY, Esq. in the chair.—A paper by Dr. Phillips, on the secretion and uses of bile, was read: the details of this paper were strictly medical, and many of them, from their character, must necessarily be passed over in the Literary Gazette. The learned author went on to shew that good chyle might be formed where there was a total absence of bile, and that it was secreted from arterial as well as venous blood. A paper entitled "on certain properties of vapour," by Dr. Lardner, was likewise read: in this memoir, which is elaborate though brief, the author appeared anxious to establish a point which, since the mighty discovery of Watt, it is believed has rarely or never been disputed, viz. that steam raised from water does not return to a liquid state, whatever be the compression to which it is subjected. David presented a colossal bronze cast of the head of Cuvier: from its artist-like and judicious position on the Society's table, full for several miles—too minute to allow of any effect of light and shade was obtained. In analysis here. One ingenious suggestion of the this cast the noble and intellectual features of Cuvier are faithfully expressed: perhaps there has been an unnecessary disposition to heighten the classical beauties which so strongly marked the countenance in his lifetime.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.

DEC. 19th. W. R. Hamilton, Esq. in the chair.—The following papers were read:—
1. Several documents relating to the sequestration of the property, &c. of Col. George Gunter, of Rackton, Sussex, who bore arms for the king in the civil wars; and whose narrative of the escape of Charles II. after the battle of Worcester, in which he assisted, was lately read before the Society. The originals are in the State Paper Office, and were copied for the Society by Mr. Lemon. 2. A memoir introductory to a MS. work, by Sir W. Gell, on Roman topography—a most valuable paper, in which the futility of Niebuhr's system in regard to the early history of Rome is demonstrated. 3. A letter from H. Holland, Esq. with a copy of a Greek monumental inscription recently discovered in the Savoy. The inscription purports to have been placed upon a monument erected by Hermophilus Strato for himself and for Arctoria Onesime and her husband and son.

The donations of books announced included seventy-eight folio volumes published by the Record Commission, and presented to the Society by L. H. Petit, Esq.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.

DEC. 13th. - Mr. Hamilton in the chair. The Rev. J. B. Deane exhibited a plan, upon a very large scale, of the Dracontium at Carnac, in Brittany, with extended drawings of the principal Druidical remains; which was accompanied by a very learned and deeply interesting dissertation, part of which was read. Mr. Deane commenced with a general history of their forms, of a serpent passing through a globe or large circle of stones, or of two serpents issuing from a globe. He observed that their deities in the forms of their temples: thus the worshippers of the sun had a circle united the worship of both, united also the two just published.

forms; and they have been followed, in some degree, by the Christians, in building their churches in the form of a cross, the symbol of their religion. He differs from those antiquaries who consider several Druidical temples to possess astronomical allusions, as no two are exactly alike in their forms, or the number of the stones; and he considers any reference to astronomy as inconsistent with the early simplicity of the people and their religion. He then proceeded to describe shortly Abury, and other serpent-temples in England, as introductory to a description of that at Carnac, which was reserved for a future reading. Mr. Hamilton announced from the chair the intelligence received from Sir William Gell of the late important discoveries at Pompeii, noticed in a former Gazette. Dec. 20th. Mr. Hamilton again in the chair. The secretary read a further portion of the Rev. J. B. Deane's paper on the Dracontium, or serpent-temple at Carnac. Mr. D. here entered into a very particular description of the serpentine course of Druidical stones extending author we must, however, notice. The ancient legends ascribe to most of the saints miraculous combats with, and victories over, dragons and serpents, which he considers may be traditionary allusions to the conquest of the early preachers over the Druidical or serpent-worship. There is at Carnac a mound, on the top of which is a chapel dedicated to St. Michael; and Mr. Deane suggests that the dedication of this, and many other chapels in similar situations, to that saint, is in the same manner allusive to St. Michael's battle with the dragon, mentioned in the Apocalypse.—On account of the Christmas holydays, the Society adjourned to the 10th of

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

January.

AT the last meeting the paper read was an explanation of the Hindu formulæ for the quadrature of the circle, by C. M. Whish, Esq. of extracts several rules from various works, exhibiting the proportion of the diameter to the circumference of the circle, with a degree of accuracy which must cause Europeans to admire have been able to extend the proportion to so great a length. In one of these works, entitled the Tantra Sangraha, composed in Malabar in A.D. 1608, it is stated, that if the diameter of a circle be 1, the circumference will be be so just, that we subjoin an extract from it. 3.141592653921, &c. which is an excellent approximation, being correct to the ninth place of decimals. He then goes on to shew, that a system of fluxions, peculiar to the authors from whom he quotes among Hindus, has been followed by them in establishing their quadratures of the circle; and that by the same method the sines, cosines, &c. are found with the greatest accuracy. Several different infinite series, extracted from various Brahminical works, are the dates of these works, Mr. Whish concludes commentary on the Tantra Sangraha, above

THE first term of the academical session, as regards the senior or collegiate department of this Institution, terminated on the 15th, and the second term begins the middle of January in the ensuing year; while, from the lists appended in the College-hall, it would appear that the examinations recently undergone by the students in the various branches of study, have reflected as much credit on themselves as they have given satisfaction to their able professors. The junior department, or school, closes for the Christmas vacation this day; and we are gratified to learn that the pupils already amount to upwards of two hundred and forty.

PINE ARTS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Illuminated Ornaments, selected from Missals and Manuscripts of the Middle Ages. By Henry Shaw. Part IX. Pickering.

In variety, richness, and beauty, these ornaments seem to be inexhaustible. The examples which Mr. Shaw has selected for the present No. are, "from the Sforziada, printed at Milan by Zarotto, in 1490," in the collection of Philip Augustus Hanrott, Esq.; "from a copy of Virgil," also in the possession of Mr. Hanrott; "from Illuminated Drawings of the eleventh century," in the possession of W. Young Ottley, Esq.; and "from a Psalter of the time of Edward the First," in the collection of F. Douce, Esq.

Illustrations of Modern Sculpture. No. II. Relfe and Unwin; Tilt; and Moon, Boys, and Graves.

THE second number of this beautiful work is at least equal to the first. The subjects are, "Resignation," forming the principal part of a monument by Chantrey, erected in Worcester Cathedral (in the year 1825) to the memory of Mrs. Digby; "Maternal Love," a model by Baily, exhibited at Somerset House in 1823; and "Hebe," by Thorwaldsen, in the possesthe Madras civil service. Mr. Whish first sion of Mr. Samuel Boddington, who purchased it out of the sculptor's studio, at Rome, in 1815. Our favourite is the "Resignation." If, as it is stated, the face and figure present in the arrangement and expression " a most remarkthe means by which Hindu mathematicians able representation of the mind" of the deceased lady, she must have been an admirable woman. The character of Mr. Chantrey as a sculptor, which Mr. Hervey has introduced into his description of this fine figure, appears to us to

"He is peculiarly, and above all others, an English sculptor, the sculptor xar' $\mathbb{E}_{\nu}\pi_{ his own nation, and his own day. Abandoning (as unsuited to the land of his birth, and in no way representing its sentiments, or appealing to its feelings) all those models which have acquired a sort of prescriptive connexion with his art; and passing by even the mythology of his own country, as not adapted to the graver and more enlightened character of his age; he given in illustration; and after some notes on has sought to apply his powers to the illustration of the times, and scenes, and feelings, amid by submitting a proof of the 47th proposition which he had lived, and moved, and had his Dracontia, (ophite, or serpent-temples,) and of Euclid, extracted from the Yukiibháshá, a being. His inspiration has in it nothing of a foreign air, and his genius has been content to clothe itself in the costume of the country which pents issuing from a globe. He observed that The following donations were presented:— has produced it. The cathedrals, the churches, the ancient idolaters followed the symbols of from Dr. Scott, the sculls of the hippopotamus the libraries, and the sculpture-galleries of Briand wild buffalo, from the Cape of Good Hope; tain, furnish a noble and imperishable record at from Dr. Rosen, Dobell's Travels in Siberia, once of the sculptor's 'life and times;' and, only; those of the serpent adopted the long and Lebid's Moallaka, edited by Peiper; from while they secure for himself a distinguished serpentine avenues of stones; while those who M. Adrien Balbi, his Abrégé de Géographie, place in that striking assemblage of great men whose memories they perpetuate, they identify history of art as applied to our own island."

We do not know of any publication which, with reference to its conception or its execution, is more deserving of encouragement than the Illustrations of Modern Sculpture. As far as it has hitherto proceeded, the selection of subjects has been highly judicious and tasteful, the drawings have been made with great fidelity and ease, and the plates have been engraved with the utmost delicacy and beauty.

Portraits of the principal Female Characters in the Waverley Novels. Part III. Chapman and Hall.

" LUCY BERTRAM," from a picture by H. P. Briggs, R.A., is exceedingly interesting. There is great expression in "Jennie Deans," from a picture by C. R. Leelie, R.A.; "Miss Wardour," from a picture by J. Wright, we have already noticed. We cannot say that Mr. Chisholm has been successful in the character of "The Lily of St. Leonard's:" we look in vain for "the laughing Hebe countenance, which seemed the picture of health, pleasure, and contentment."

engraved by J. C. Armytage.

IT is long since we saw this magnificent mansion, but the exquisite little print before us forcibly reminds us of it. We understand that it is to be published in the Court Magazine for January.

Architectural Beauties of Continental Europe. Engraved by J. Coney, from his own Drawings taken on the spot. With descriptive and historical Illustrations by H. E. Lloyd. Part II. Harding.

WE believe we have said nearly the same thing before, but a truth creditable to an individual before, but a truth creditable to an individual the most extensive and varied prospects in cannot be repeated too frequently,—Mr. Coney the world, that a sudden and violent continuously in project in the world, that a sudden and violent continuously in the subject well of the world. is unrivalled in his architectural outlines; he vulsion of the earth has reared the singular communicates to them a power and a richness which render the absence of shadow scarcely felt. His figures, too, he introduces with admirable spirit. Of both these facts, "The Town-Hall at Bruges," "The Cathedral of Notre Dame at Paris," "The Church of St. Ouen at Rouen," and "The Jesuits' College has worked, at St. Omer," afford striking proofs. The on the spot, all such impressions are forgotseveral vignettes are highly picturesque.

The New Friendship's Offering; Compositions of Birds and Flowers. Designed and drawn on stone by L. Stoll. London, A. Schloss.

"Pride and vanity give gold, Friendship and love give flowers," truly says the motto; and it might have added, by way of moral, that though pride and vanity are infinitely more abundant than love and friendship, there is a much larger disposition to give flowers than gold abroad amidst the liberality of mankind. No matter, this third print of Mr. Stoll's is eminently brilliant and three hundred feet in height. The rock in beautiful—the paroquet is alive, the butterflies flying, and the flowers in perfect bloom. In hundred feet in height above the spot from this winter season it might be substituted for a which the view was taken; and the most lover's or friend's gift.

Mrs. Honey, as Psyche. Drawn by E. Novello; on stone by R. J. Lane, A.R.A. London; J. Dickenson.

"UBI flores, ibi mel," we said, as we placed this print, with the foregoing, in our portfolio. It is a pretty picture of a pretty and clever seems as if set up by the giant hands of some be justly conceive actress, who is making great progress in her primeval race in mockery of the puny efforts felicity and taste:

him prominently, and for all time, with the profession. The face appears to us a little too of their degenerate descendants. This singular history of art as applied to our own island." broad; but the features and expression are mass of rock, exclusive of the mountain on delineated in a lively manner.

> Colonel Murray's National Work, in which the Literature and History of the Country are connected with its finest Scenery. Northern Division. Parts IV. V. and VI. London, 1832. Simpkin and Marshall; Perth, Morison, jun. and Co.

THE lesson contained in the anecdote of an English amateur of architecture, who, on visiting Rome, and being asked some questions respecting Sir Christopher Wren's exquisite little church of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, was obliged to confess that he had never seen it, is equally applicable to many pretended admirers of natural scenery. They hurry to Switzerland and Italy, utterly regardless of the inexhaustible variety of grand, beautiful, and romantic landscape, of which the northern portion of their native island can boast. The work under our notice may assist in convincing them of their error. Of the highly picturesque views which these three Parts contain, the most extraordinary are those of " The Storr, in the Isle of Skey. Chatsworth, the Scat of his Grace the Duke of In speaking of one of the representations of Devonahire. Drawn by W. Daniell, R.A., this stupendous, and absolutely terrific object, from a Sketch by Sir J. Wyatville, R.A.; alluding to the remarkable basaltic formations at the bases of the mountains near the coast.

says,—
"But as if the wonders of this rocky region had not there been sufficiently developed, many of the hills have been broken and dismembered near their summits, in the most varied and singular manner. This is most varied and singular manner. particularly the case at the two extremities of the range, on the north at Quirang, and on the south at the Storr. It is at the summit of this latter mountain, rising 2000 feet above the sea, and commanding one of structure which forms the subject of sketch No. 21. In the sketch, viewed without reference to the magnitude of the rocks, the forms seem merely singular and grotesque; but if the reader could only imagine while viewing it, something of the scale on which nature on the spot, all such impressions are forgotten in the wonder and awe with which the scene must be beheld. In the distance on the right, the rocks, which are in general partially hid, and their apparent magnitude increased by the clouds and mist which hover around them, rise to a great height in bold and picturesque promontories. From them the more advanced pinnacles seem to have been torn, and thrown forward by a convulsion which has left powerful evidences of its violence all around. These masses, which are of all varieties of form and magnitude, are seldom less than one hundred, often two or the sketch nearest the spectator, is about four distant of these masses, of which only the top is seen, is considerably higher. But the most remarkable of these natural towers, and one that in more remote ages, and among a less civilised people, would have been made an object of adoration as well as wonder, is the spiral mass on the left of the sketch, which which it rests, is one hundred and sixty-five feet in height, and two hundred and forty in circumference at the base! From certain situations its form is exceedingly graceful, and so much is the eye deceived with regard to its size, that it is only by bringing some figures near it, that the spectator becomes convinced of its altitude. The walls and towers of the Storr are about a mile in extent; so varied in their disposition, so pleasingly diversified by the rich sward which clothes the surface of the debris, and which strikingly contrasts with the dark colour of the rocks, so singular in their details, so magnificent in their forms, and so endless in the objects of interest they present at every step to the geologist and to the admirer of nature in her wildest mood, that days may be spent in exploring their solitary ruins, and new objects arise to gratify and astonish the visiter."

The establishment of steam-packets on the western coast has brought this extraordinary scenery within a day's voyage of Glasgow.

Views in the East. From original Sketches by Captain Robert Elliot, R.N. Part XIX. Fisher and Co.

THE copy of this Part of Captain Elliot's beautiful work which lies before us, contains only " The Entrance to the Cave of Elephanta, one of the most beautiful specimens of the cave temples of the Hindoos that is to be found in any of the different sets of excavations, which form so peculiar and so interesting a feature in the antiquities of the western side of Hindoostan;" and "Dowlutab, one of the most remarkable of all the hill fortifications that are spread over the face of the empire of Hindoostan." The "Tomb of Ibrahim Padshah, Bejapore," is wanting; an accident which we regret the more, as Captain Elliot observes,-"Amongst the many monarchs of Hindoostan, who lie in rich and splendid sepulchres, there is scarcely one whose ashes are contained within a shrine of such magnificence and beauty as those of Ibrahim Adil Shah, the fifth king of Bejapore." The two plates which we have mentioned are engraved from drawings by Mr. Purser, in the excellent style which has distinguished this publication from its commencement; the one by H. Kerrot, the other by R. Sands. The next part will complete the series.

Major's Cabinet Gallery of Pictures. With historical and critical Descriptions and Dissertations by Allan Cunningham. No. IV. In the present No. of Mr. Major's work, Italy, Holland, and England, are represented (we cannot entirely divest ourselves of the electioneering jargon of the day) by those distinguished members of the parliament of art, Annibale Caracci, Ferdinand Bol, and Gainsborough. From the first we have the well-known "St. John in the Wilderness," in the National Gallery; from the second, a pleasing "Dutch Lady," in the keeping (it is our friend Allan's own word) of Robert Ludgate, Esq.; and from the third, the admirable "Market-waggon," belonging to Robert Vernon, Esq., but at present in the Winter Exhibition at the Suffolk Street Gallery. They are all, especially the last, very respectably engraved. The critical dissertations (in every one of which, by-the-by, there is a hit at poor Fuseli) contain much judicious remark. As a specimen, we select the following passage, which appears to us to be justly conceived, and expressed with great

" The landscapes of Gainsborough obtained merited fame in the days of the artist, and in this he was happier than his great contemporary Wilson. For this, reasons may readily be given. His pictures unite the lower with the higher qualities of landscape, and speak to common as well as uncommon minds. They have great natural force and truth, and are doubly interesting by the human life with which he has inspired them. In this union of man with the land which belonged to him, lay the strong charm of Gainsborough. By these means he endowed the still and barren landscape with a spirit, and gave it a tongue with which it addressed the spectator, and moved his heart while it pleased his eye.

Tacet, sed loquitur!

Finden's Gallery of the Graces. C. Tilt. WE have just glanced at this graceful work, with three exquisite female portraits—by Boxall two, and by W. Wright one: the illustrations by T. K. Hervey. We should imagine it was suggested by Heath's admirable Book of Beauty, which it seems worthy to follow. More of it next week.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

THE BARD TO WINTER.

A Fragment.

A Fragment !- in that name how much of lifeof joy, which ne'er is perfect—may we see!—
Of Truth with Hope for evermore at strife—
Of Time, dread fragment of Eternity! of Love—how brief a share remaind for thee,
Whose humble lines may scarce thy memory save;
For Fame hat left the haunts of Poesy—
Apollo's strine but hides a nameless grave—
And, save in dreams, dead Bard! no more proud laurels wave!

wave!

No sorrows of mine own do I record,
Nor yet o'er fancied evils muse and weep;
If truth be eloquence, the simplest word
May stir the heart, and from the tomb's dull sleep—
From the dead tongue of genius—wake that deep Mysterious intercourse with living minds—
That fame, which Misery's sons may rarely reap!
Death, like a friend, our harsher judgment blinds,
And praise withheld in life the bard in death oft finds!

WILD rider of the tempest! on whose brow Dead centuries are graven—Sire of storm! Old ere the Deluge was! I view thee now, And love thy white, thy cold majestic form, Better than summer breathings, mild and warm;

For I was nursed beneath thy snowy wing, And owe a son's allegiance, till the worm Preys on this heart, whose filial love I bring, To hail thee, Winter! - Hail, thou tempestloving thing!

Thou bring'st us social intercourse of mind-A thousand sweet affections round our hearth.

Pleasures of intellect, by love refined-Thoughts graceful, gay, and sparkling in their mirth,

Like sudden stars that light eve's lonely birth!

Thou com'st with mistletoe and holly crown'd, And friendship hails thee and approves thy worth.

Old hearts grow young again where thou art found,

Whilst music, wine, and song, and Christmas tale go round !

Yet hast thou held towards me no friendly hand __

Stern wert thou ever, and relentless too, Whose blight consumed whate'er my young hopes plann'd.

No summer harvest my frail fortunes knew, My morn of years drank never of the dew, The light, life, perfume, colour of the rose; true:

I am indeed thy son, and nothing grows For me that leaf, or bud, or generous fruit bestows.

Murmur I not, nor sink, nor do I fear The stormy marks of thy paternal dower Though my adventurous bark would onward steer,

And win distinction, and a name—a power To wrestle with adversity's bleak hour,

And woo life's golden waters to my gate, And cull life's roses while they're yet in flower, [fate,

To bless the gentle hearts link'd with my And fold my little flock, ere yet it prove too late!

But, ah! the blight of years hath reach'd the root, And with the branch the lovely leaves must Well, 'tis but once; and Death's appalling suit Veils the bright wings of Immortality! The grave—it is the temple of the free; The grave—it is the palace of the poor;

The grave-it is the friend of misery, Of thousand hearts that suffer and endure, Till vein and pulse grow cold - till Death strikes deep and sure.

C. SWAIN.

DRAMA.

DRURY LANE.

On Monday the state of Kean's health sadly impaired the effect of Othello; and it was very painful to witness the efforts of mind struggling to contend against bodily infirmity.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Centlivre's comedy of A Bold Stroke for a Wife, converted into an opera by Mr. Beazley, with music by Mr. John Barnett, called Win her and wear her, was The experiment was of a novel produced. nature, both as regards the drama and the altered cast which it imposed upon the characters. Colonel Feignwell, for instance-a part never yet acted by any but the most eminent genteel comedians upon the stage-fell to the share of our first singer, Mr. Braham. Need we repeat, how seldom musical and histrionic talents of even a secondary order have been found combined; and how exceedingly rare the genius of a great vocalist and a great actor? The test, therefore, upon the present occasion was a hard one; and while we confessed the uncontested mastery of song, the remembrance of C. Kemble, of Elliston, and other popular Feignwells, was involuntarily applied to the comic portion of Mr. Braham's acting; and nearly all, if not all, the original text was left. When we say that he went through the ordeal with great credit, we only do him justice. His various disguises were cleverly sustained-his walk as the Dutchman, his crocodile tears as the old steward, and his quakerism as Simon Pure, were far superior to our expectation, notwithstanding the laudable exertions with which Mr. Braham has continued to animate and improve his acting within the last few years, and after a long familiarity with the stage in a line where such exertions have hardly ever been looked for. As if to exhibit a contrast, Mr. Farren, admirable in Perriwinkle, not only played as he always does, but actually sang in several concerted pieces, as if he intended to resent the invasion of comedy by invading Wintry my prospects are _ my birthright must be with Mrs. Centlivre; and we do heartly wish every performer to be assured that it is wiser and better to soften than to add point to aught in the least equivocal. Miss Betts, as Anne Lovely, sang in a very finished style; and Templeton, Bedford, and Seguin (Freeman, Tradelove, and Sackbut), contributed their full share to the harmony of the entertainment. Ayliffe as the real Simon Pure, Balls as Sir Philip Modelove, and Miss Cawse (who had only too little to do, seeing she does most things so well), filled up the rest of the dramatis personæ with good effect. The difficulty we have in speaking critically of this piece is owing to its mixed feature, being neither what it was, a comedy, nor sufficiently musical, with the usual thread of story, to be what we have been taught to expect as an opera. There is not, for example, a single song in it; except we may so denominate airs which grow out of quartet, or trios. What music there is, however, and we are told it has been hastily composed, is very honourable to Mr. Barnet. There is none of it which is not sweet and pleasing; and some of it replete with taste and beauty. The quartet at the close of the second act is our especial favourite; but we think the whole will be more and more liked, the more it is heard; for, though delightful, there is nothing obtrusive and striking to carry the ear by a coup. At the close, Braham was called for, and the opera given out for repetition with much applause, mingled with some dissent; which dissent we the rather impute to half-a-dozen of silly persons calling encores when there was nothing to deserve them-a course which invariably puts the independent portion of an audience into bad humour.

> Covent Garden.—On Saturday Fra Diavolo attracted a full and brilliant audience, and went off so well as to demand its repetitionto the great contentment of the public and of the theatre.

> The Adelphi. - We called the Howlet's Haunt, the Owlet's Nest, by mistake, in our last; and have been haunted with an erratum ever since. The thing, however, has done no harm; for the theatre has been so full a haunt nightly, that the managers only have discovered it to be a nice nest-

VARIETIES.

Curious South American Painting of the Last Supper .-- " Here the cherubims and seraphims have undergone a terrible degradation, for instead of being represented, as is usual, in heaven, they are figuring as cooks and scullions. They are drawn as all head and wings, lions. but busily employed:—one is scouring a dish in a kind of modern European kitchen; another is blowing the fire in the Spanish manner; a third is frying eggs; in the background some are officiating as waiters, handling the plates, and making all necessary preparations."-Life of a Sailor.

Cambridge Philosophical Society .- At a late meeting, among the presents to the Society was a goat-sucker, presented by the Rev. G. A. Browne; and two bottles of water from the poisonous fountains of Wirosari in Chius, presented by the Rev. L. Jenyns; also an account of the effects of this water. A memoir opera. Dowton and Mrs. Jones, as Obadiah was read by the Rev. R. Murphy, Fellow of and Mrs. Prim, were perfect as the characters Caius College, on "Elimination between an are drawn; and if any fault could be found, it indefinite number of unknown quantities;" and some memoranda on the architecture of Nor-ble volunteered Petruchio and Katherine; and Charles the mandy, by the Rev. W. Whewell.

On Monday week, Professor Sedgwick in the chair. Among the presents were several species of fish collected by Prof. Henslow in the neighbourhood of Weymouth. Mr. Whewell read a continuation of his notes on the architecture of Picardy and Normandy. After the business of the meeting, Mr. Simms gave an account of the method of graduation of astronomical instruments, by which he has divided the mural circle of eight feet diameter, recently placed in the observatory of Cambridge, and divided in its actual place. This account was prefaced by a notice of the methods of engine dividing, or derivative gradation; and of the modes of original dividing employed by Bird, Graham, and Ramsden, previous to the one which has now superseded them, and which is the invention of Mr. Troughton. The splendid mural circle constructed for the observatory is now very nearly completed. It was taken thither in the beginning of October, and Mr. Simms has since been employed in cutting the gradations after it was mounted on its pier; an advantage which, we believe, no other instrument has ever possessed. This observatory may now be considered as at least equal in instrumental power to any similar establishment in the world.

German Proverb. - To see the future, we must look at the past-the prophet's mirror hangs behind him.

Mrs. Abingdon. - In an old and now forgot ten work, "a Picture of England," by W. de Archenholtz, formerly captain in the Prussian service, published some forty years since, there is the following anecdote: - the German is dilating on the many methods of " raising the in London. — " Mrs. Abingdon, celebrated actress, has invented for herself an occupation quite particular. As she possesses the most exquisite taste, she spends a good part of the day in running about London to give her advice on the dresses and new fashions. She is consulted like a physician, and fee'd in the handsomest manner. There is no marriage celebrated, and no entertainment given, where her assistance in regulating the decorations is not requested. In this way she is said to make annually nearly fifteen hundred pounds a-year. As she never appears on the stage but in her own clothes, her dress is remarkable for elegance, and is much studied by the female audience. It is there this priestess of the fashions displays all her art, and she is sure of being copied with childish exactness. It is quite sufficient in London to say, 'Mrs. Abingdon has worn this,' to stop the mouths of all fathers and husbands."

Howard Payne. - Whatever may be done in England to shew our admiration of native genius, and the Abbotsford Subscription will afford a good test of it, we observe with pleasure that America is not tardy in rendering homage to the merits of her literary children. The honours lavished on Washington Irving were worthy of him and of his country; and by a play-bill we have just received from New York, we see that a no less profitable, though a different sort of testimony, has been afforded to the talents of Howard Payne. As the proceedings are curious, we copy as much of this account of them as we have room for.

as we have room for.

Great Dramatic Featival at the Park Theatre.—Benefit, under the direction of the friends of literature and the drama, and sustained by the volunteered talent of the ladies and gentlemen connected with the stage, in compliment, from his native city, New York, to John Howard Payne. November 29th was the day, and the play Brutus, written (compiled) by Mr. Payne. This was followed by Katherine and Petruchio, in which Mr. and Miss F. Kem-

The bill ends thus:

The bill ends thus:
"Rules and Regulations.—The pit will be handsomely fitted up on this occasion as an amphitheatre, for the accommodation of ladies as well as gentlemen. The usual entrances will be closed, and admittance obtained only through the box doors. The committee of arrangements will see that the ladies are conducted to eligible seats, and no more persons will be admitted than can be conveniently accommodated with places. It is requested that carriages approach the Theatre from Broadway, and that they be dismissed on arrival. Carriages will be at the door to convey the company home. Suitable persons will be in attendance to take charge of hats, cloaks, &c. Price of tickets: boxes and pit five dollars (11. 2s. 6d.); gallery, one dollar (4s. 6d.) gallery, one dollar (4s. 6d.)

The receipts at the door amounted to the immense sum of 10131., independent of tickets.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Kidd's Picturesque Companion to Brighton and Worthing, with numerous engravings by G. W. Bonner. Also, to Bognor, Littlehampton, and Lewes; and to the Water-to Bognor, Littlehampton, and Lewes; and to the Watering-Places of Great Britain.

A new edition of Prideaux's Directions to Churchwardens; with Additions by R. P. Tyrwhitt, Esq.

The Cabinet Annual Register, and Historical, Biographical, and Miscellaneous Chronicle of 1832.

The Works of John Skelton, Poet-laureate to King Henry the Eighth, now first collected, and containing various long Poems never before printed; with ample Notes and Illustrations, is announced by the Rev. Alexander Dives.

ander Dyce. A new n A new monthly periodical, entirely devoted to the Guitar-player, is projected.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Rouillon's Bibliothèque Portative, Corinne, 3 vols. 18mo. 10s. 6d. cloth.—Motherwell's Poems, 8vo. 6s. bds.—Invisible Gentleman, 3 vols. post 8vo. 31s. 6d. bds.—American Almanac for 1833, 5s. sewed.—Bainford's Scripture Dictionary, 12mo. 2s. 6d. bds.—Chronological Chart of English Kings, 10s. hf.-bd.—The Waverley Album, 51 engravings, 8vo. 21s. mor.—Life of a Sallor, 3 vols. post 8vo. 31s. 6d. bds.—Catechism of Whist, 1s. 6d.—Lucy Ashbourne, 18mo. 2s. cloth.—Thomson on Baptism, 18mo. 1s. 6d. cloth.—Halyburton's Works, and Essay by Rev. R. Burns, 8vo. 15s. cloth.—Hall's (Bp.) Art of Divine Meditation, 32mo. 1s. cloth.—Supplement to Cambridge Mathematical Examination Papers, Part 1. 8vo. 6s. 6d. bds.—Mantell's Floriculture, 8vo. 5s. hf.-bd.—Hood's Comic Annual, 1833, 12s. hf.-bd.—Smith's (Rev. C.) Letters on National Religion, 8vo. 7s. bds.—The Lauread, fc. 8vo. 5s. 6d. bds.—

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

December.	Thermometer.				Barometer.
Thursday · · 13	From				30.19	to	30.05
Friday ··· 14		31.	••	47.	29.87	• •	29.81
Saturday · · 15		30.	• •	44.	29.56	• •	29.69
Sunday 16		25.	• •	41.	29.85	••	29.79
Monday 17	• • • • •	34.	••	56.	29-62	• •	29.47
Tuesday · 18		37.	••	45.	29.39	• •	29.54
Wednesday 19		27.	• •	39.	29.57	• •	29.64

Prevailing wind, S.W.

Except the 18th and 19th, generally cloudy; with fre-

Rain fallen, '7 of an inch, of which '5 fell on Saturday morning.

Meteor.—On Thursday, the 13th, about a minute before six in the evening, a remarkably brilliant meteor made its appearance in or near the zenith; it proceeded in a southerly direction through Andromeda and Pegasus, then entering Aquarius, disappeared at an altitude of 3th above the horizon; from this point to within 2th of the zenith, a train of apparently innumerable stars was visible for more than two minutes after the disappearance of the meteor. The sudden transition from comparative darkness to a light equalling that of mid-day produced an extraordinary effect upon the minds of those who witnessed it. A friend who happened to direct his eye towards the zenith before the meteor appeared, saye, that from the larger bell of light smaller ones were discharged in various directions, for a moment only, previous to its moving. in va... moving.

CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Latitude · · · · · 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude · · · · 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We cannot print the poem to Miss J. C-: the poor writer seems to be too far gone for any medicament of writer seems to be too tat gone to any intercall the press.

ERRATUM.—In our notice of the Society of Arts last week, line 6 from bottom, for "pliable" read "friable."

We regretted to see the remarks hostile to the Abbotsford Subscription in the New Monthly Magnaine; but we cannot, though we deem them ill-founded, avail ourselves of the reply sent to us, in its present form.

Mt. Motherwell's fine volume of poems reached us too

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

NOTICE to EXHIBITORS.—All Pictures and Works of Art intended for Exhibition and Sale, must be sent to the firstless—Y Pictures and Works of Art intended for Exhibition and Sale, must be sent to the Gallery on Monday the 18th, and Tuesday the 18th of January next, between the hours of 10 in the morning and 3 in the afternoon; after which time no Picture other Work of Art can be received.

Fortraits and Drawings in Water-colours are inadmissible. N.B. No Picture will be received for Sale that is not bone fide the property of the Artist.

WILLIAM BARNARD, Keeper.

To the PROTESTANT NOBILITY.—

A Married Clergyman, of the Church of England, in full Orders, under thirty years of age, of Master's standing, and who obtained very high honours at one of the Universities, having been obliged, from family arrangements, to give up his public duties in the Ministry, is naxious to receive into his family, where there are no children, the Son or Sons of a Nohleman. The Advertiser resides in a large and old established family manulon, and please the control of the cont O the PROTESTANT NOBILITY .-

PLENDID SALE of PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, PRINTS, OLD CHINA, &c.
There will be sold by Auction, in No. 16, Picardy Place, in the ensuing month of February, the genulne, entire, and celebrated Collection of Pictures and Drawings, mostly of the Ancient Masters, which was formed with infinite taste and Judgment, and regardless of expense, during a period exceeding halt a century, by the late John Clerk, of Eldidi, one of the Senators of the College of Justice. Also, a remarkable Collection of Prints and Etchings, comprehending the choicest works of the greatest Masters, and some very fine and rare old China, Coins, &c.
A Catalogue is in preparation, and may be had a month previous to the day of sale of all the principal Book and Printsellers in London, Dublin, Manchester, Leeds, and Glasgow.

Edinburgh, 7th December, 1832.

On the 29th inst. (continued Monthly, only 3s. 6d. each,) No. V. of

MAJOR'S CABINET GALLERY of

MAJOR'S CABINET (FAILERY of PICTURES; containing three Engraving, and three Descriptions by Alian Cunningham, viz.: W. Vandevelde, a Brisk Gale, Vandevelde, a Grisk Gale, Vandevelde, a Grisk Gale, Vandevelde, a Grisk Gale, Vandevelde, Grosse Gale, Grisk Gale, Vandevelde, Grisk Gale, Grisk Grisk Gale, Grisk Conduit Street, Hanover Square.

PHE PERUSAL of NEW PUBLICA-

TIONS.

On the recommencement of the Publishing Season, it may be necessary to inform the Nobility and Gentry, that all New Rooks may be obtained for Perusal, in Town or Country, immediately on publication, and in any quantity, at the British and Foreign Library, Conduit Street, Hanover Square.

Terms of Subscription, and Catalogues of the English, French, Italian, and German Books contained in this extensive Library, may be had on application to Messrs. Saunders and Otley, Conduit Street, Hanover Square.

Cheap and elegant Presents for Christmas and the New Year.

Cheap and elegant Presents for Christmas and the New Year.

SUTTABY and CO. have just published an extensive variety of POCKET-BOOKS, adapted to the use of Ladles, Gentlemen, and Young Persons, which are made useful and attractive by literary excellence and superior embellishments. They include those formerly published by Mrent Books, to which they invite the attention of the Public, conident they will well bear a comparison with the best of those in competition. The price of those for Ladles, 2s. 6d. well bound and the edges gift; Gentlemen's 2s. 6d.; the larger, 4s.

N.B. The Cabinet of Fashion, Sovereign, and New Polite Repository, contain a larger number of highly-inshed Engraving, the price 2s. 6d. each.
London: Published by Suttaby and Co. Stationers' Court; and sold by Booksellers and Stationers generally.

Dedicated, by Permission, to her Royal Highness the Princess

Victoria,
Victor

"Complete in all its parts, and obvious for its utility in guiding the hand and preparing it for more efficient practice, this elegant little article cannot fail of finding a place on the table of every family, where early instruction, united with amusement, is carried on." Literary Gazette, Dec. 1.

London: Published by A. Essex, 38, Northampton Street, Clerkenwell; sold retail by Stationers, Toymen, &c. &c.

Elegant and Appropriate Christmas Presents for Young Persons.

LARK'S DRAWING-BOOK, on an improved Plan; or, a Series of Practical Instruction in Landscape Painting in Wester Colours, illustrated by Pitty-five Views from Nature, Descriptive Objects, &c.
With the Views on stout drawing-paper, in portfolio... 43 8
With the Views mounted on drab-coloured card-board,

With the Views mounted on drab-coloured card-board, in a box covered with leather.

2. Urania's Mirror; or, a View of the Heavens, on a Plan perfectly original. Designed by a Lady. Consisting of Thirty-two large Cards, representing all the Constellations visible in Great Britain. The stars are perforated according to their magnitudes, est bilting, when held up to the light, their natural appearance. The Cards are accompanied with a familiar Treatuse on Astronomy, written expressly for this work, by J. Aspin, illustrated with Plates. New edition, in a neat box, 3t. beautifully coloured.

3. Clark's Portable Diorama, 3t. 3s.

4. Clark's Miorama; or, Many Thousand

4. Clark 8 Miorama; or, Many Thousand Yiews. First Series, 18c.; Second Sories, 24s.
5. Assheton's Historical Map of Palestine, 35s. canvass and roller; 42s. full coloured and varnished, on roller; 30s. canvass and cass.
London: M. A. Leigh, 43s, Strand, (removed from No. 18.)
A great variety of useful Guides for Travellers.

THE TOWN .- A Sunday Newspaper,

THE TOWN.—A Sunday Newspaper, price 7d.

A total change having taken place in the Editorship of The Town Newspaper, the following observations are respectfully submitted to the Subscribers and the Public generally.

It is now placed under the direction of a gentleman of long experience in all that relates to public aitairs, of intimate acquaintance with the several branches of the Periodical Press, and who has the means of procuring the assistance of the most distinguished writers—in Politics, Literature, Art, and Science-throughout the kingdom.

It will thus receive all that talent and knowledge can furnish on topics of universal interest to the popular mind. While, on onte one hand, it will support whatever is exential to good government, in accordance with the principles of the Constitution, as reformed and established on the basis that all power cmanates from the nation,—it will, on the other, fearlessly oppose what ever has a tendency to sacrifice the general good to mere experiment of the second of the condition of the co vate life.

The industry and resources of the Editor will be manifested by the numbers as they appear. Sources of original and early information have been opened to him, such as are rarely accessible to conductors of a weekly Paper.

Published on Sunday morning (an Edition for the Saturdy post), at the Office of The Town, Burleigh Street, Strand, where orders may be forwarded, or through any News-Agent to Town or Country.

Part I. of the Political Map of England, Part I. of the Political Map of England, engraved on steel, and brilliantly coloured, it now rendy for delivery, gratis, to those who have paid their quarter's subscription to The Town, the only way in which this important and useful work can be obtained.

The Map ahews all the alterations caused by the Reform and Boundary Bills, from the Ordanace surveys, assisted by the reports of the Commissioners for the division of counties.

Subscribers, in case of any disappointment with respect to the delivery of the Map or the Paper, are requested to forward information on the subject to the Publisher.

The Second Part of the Map is now in preparation, and will be ready for delivery to Subscribers early next month.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

THE SECOND VOLUME of PRIN CIPLES of GEOLOGY; being an Attempt to explain the former Changes in the Earth's Surface, by reference to Cause now in operation.

By CHARLES LYELL, F.R.S.

Professor of Geology in the King's College, and Foreign Secretary of the Geological Society.

Vol. I. second edition, price 15s. is just pub.

Vol. III. is in the press, and will be published John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Just published, in royal 8ve. price 21. 2s. in morecco; with Iadia Proofs before Letters (only 100 copies), 41. 4s.
TURNER'S ANNUAL TOUR; containing

Twenty-one beautifully-finished Plates -Views on the River Loire. From Drawings by J. M. W. TURNER, Esq. R.A.; with Descriptive Letterpress by LEITCH RITCHIE, Esq. London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Published by William Collins, Glasgow; and Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London. ECTURES on REVIVALS of RELIGION.

With an Introductory Essay, by the Rev. G. REDPORD, Worcester, and the Rev. J. A. JAMES, Birmingham. 18mo. 8s. 6d. citch.

On Political Economy, in connexion with the Moral State and Moral Prospects of Society. By Thomas Chalmers, D.D. 8vo. 12s.

HII.

On the Use and Abuse of Literary and Ecclesinstical, or Church and College Endowments. By Thomas Chalmers, D.D. 8vo. 6s.

On the Supreme Importance of a Right Moral to a Right Economical State of Society. With some Remarks on a recent Criticism in the Edinburgh Review. By Thomas Chairners, B.D.

In 8vo. price 12s. boards,

E R M O N S.

By RALPH WARDLAW, D.D. Glasgow.

Printed for Longman and Co. London; Black, Edinburgh; and Wardlaw and Co. Glasgow.

By the same Author,
Discourses on the Principal Parts of the So cinian Controversy. Syo. 4th edition, enlarged, 15s, boards.

Handsomely printed, in 3 vois. with Frontispleces bound in cloth, lettered in gold, price 32; or in M Y Y OULIKE

By the Rev. C. B. TAYLOR, M.A. Fifth edition, revised and improved. and neatly

H. Sixty beautiful Views for Fifteen Skillings.

Sixty beautiful Vienus for Fifteen Shillings.

Price 15s. elegantly bound,

The Landscape Album; or, Illustrations of Great Britain, in a Series of Sixty Views, by W. Westall, Esq. A.R.A. With Descriptions of the Scenery.

• This Work is uniform in size with the Landscape and Picturesque Annuals, but contains more than double the number of Plates. It is peculiarly suitable as a present for youth, or a school-prize.

Price Ss. cloth, lettered in gold; 4s. in silk; or 6s. 6d. embe

The Pions Minstrel, an ample Collection of

A HE FIGUR FILIBETEL, ALL AMPLIE COLLECTION OF the best pieces of Sacred Poetry. Illustrated with a beautifully engraved Portrait of Robert Pollok, Author of "The Course of Time."

"It is an attractive little volume, and will form an acceptable present to the young."—Gentleman's Magazine, April.

"The Plous Ministrel well deserves its title; it is a volume of true unaffected piety, but of very sweet ministrely, and a captivating pocket companion."—Nothly Review, April.

IV. Mason on Self-Knowledge, a neat pocket edition. la 6d. cloth; 2s. silk.

Stothard's Watt's Songs.

In foolscap 8vo. price 2s. boards; or 6s. merocoo, Divine and Moral Songs for Children. By Isaao Watts, D.D. Illustrated with Designs by Thomas Stothard, R.A.; engraved by Thompson; and beautifully printed by Whittingham.

VI.

Curiosities for the Ingenious, selected from the most authentic Treasures of Nature, Science, and Art, Biography, History, and General Literature. Illustrated by ten Plates. Third edition, with improvements, neatly bound in cieta, 2s. 46.

VII. Emma de Lissau, an authentic Narrative of striking Vicissitudes and Peculiar Trials. Written by a Converted Jewess. Third edition, 2 vols. 18mo. 12c. boards.

verted Jewess. Third edition, a vois. 18800. 1887 consume

VIII.

In two handsome demy 870. vols. one of Quadrupeds and one of Hirds, price 341. neatly bound in cloth, containing Two Hundred and Thirty Engravings, exquisitely printed at the Chiswick Press by Whittingham,
The Gardens and Menagerie of the Zoological Society Delineated; being Descriptions and Figures in Hustration of the Natural History of the Living Animals in the Society's Collection. The whole of the Drawings taken from Life by W. Harvey, and engraved on Wood by Branston and Wright.

The Emperor's Rout; or, the Feast of the Moths: a Companion to the celebrated "Butterfly's Ball." With Entomological Notes. Illustrated by four highly coloured Plates. Foolicap Stor. price 2s. 6d. "It is as pleasing and useful a present as could well be desired for the young, to whom neither amusement nor instruction should ever be presented without being combined."—New Monthly.

Charles Tilt. 86, Pleet Street.

THE AMERICAN ALMANAC, and Repository of Useful Knowledge for the Year 1836, is just received by R. J. Kennett, No. 59, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields; and to be had of all Booksellers, price 5s.

Sir John Malcolm's Central India. MEMOIR of CENTRAL INDIA, MOIR of CENTRAL INDIA, Including Malwa and adjoining Provinces, with the History and copious Illustrations of the Past and Present Condition of that Country.

By Major-General Sir JOHN MALCOLM,
G.C.B. K.L.S. F.R.S. &c. &c. &c.
Third edition, illustrated with an original Map, Tables of Revenue, Population, &c.
London: Printed for Farbury, Allen, and Co. Leadenhall Street.

Elegant Christmas Presents.

Publishing monthly, in small Bro. beautifully printed and illustrated, uniformly with the Waverley Novels, and comprising nearly double the quantity of matter, price Six Shillings each

TANDARD NOVELS and ROMANCES,

Can be supported by the support of t

itor.
(See also equally favourable opinions in almost every literary journal in the Kingdom.)

The Work now comprises the most celebrated productions of Cooper, the American Novellat; Godwin, Miss Porter, the Misses Lee, Mrs. Brunton, Mrs. Shelley, &c.

Each Volume may be had separately, price &c.

Both Volume contains the whole of Pleatened Lee, College Contains the Whole Contains the Who Fleetwood. By Godwin.

Published by Richard Sentley (Successor to Mr. Celburn), New Burlington Street; and sold by all respectable Booksellers.

THE LIFE of a SAILOR.

By a CAPTAIN in the ROYAL NAVY.

"Far as the breeze can bear, the billows foam—Survey our empire, and behold our home!"—BYROM.
Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street (late Colburn and Bentley).

In I large vol. 8vo. with an Abstract of the Population Return of 1831, and Mays, 18. boards, DINBURGH GAZETTEER; or, Compendious Geographical Dictionary, forming a complete Body of Geography, Physical, Political, Statistical, and Commercial. mercial. Printed for Longman and Co. London; and Black, Edinburgh.

As an Accompaniment to the above,
New General Atlas. By A. Arrowsmith.
From the latest Authorities, containing 54 Maps. Royal 4tc.
half-bound, 56t. plain; coloured, 28t. 18t. 64.

Published this day, by Richard Bentley, New Barlington Street (Successor to Henry Colburn).

Mrs. Half's New Romance.

In 3 vols. pest Sve.

The BUCCAN EER;

a Story of the Protectorate.

a Story of the Protectorate.

By the Author of "Stetches of Irish Character."

"A work of very high merit, and must rank with the best flctions in our language."—Atlas. 11.

The American Theatre.

And American Theatre.

By William Duslap, Eq.

Author of "Memoirs of George Frederick Cooke."

Including Anecdotes of English Performers in the United States, from 1759 to the protent Time.

"It deserves to be popular, and treats of an amusement and screetten in which nine-tenths of civilised manhind take pleaure."—Literary Gazette.

Second Edition of Zohrab.

When the Author of "Hajji Baba." 3 vols.
"Novels of this stamp and character are valuable additions to literature."—Fraser's Mag.

Sir David Baird's Life.

BIL LOWING DRAFG 8 LAIG.

By Theodore Hook, Esq.

Including his Private Papers, Correspondence, &c. 2 vols. 8vo.
with Embellishments.

"This work must rank with the best biographics extant."—
United Service Journal, Dec.

Visit to Holland, Belgium, and Germany.

"The production of a gentleman who is able to appreciate justly, and describe cleverly, the objects presented to his attention, during a tour of considerable interest and duration."—Literary Genetics.

The 4th Volume of the English Translation of the Memoirs of Madame Junot, Duchess of Abrantet. Written by Herself.

"No where do we get a nearer or more intelligible view of Napoleon as a man."—Spectator.

And in a few days,

Recollections of a Chaperon. Edited by Lady Dacre

II.

Memoirs and Letters of Capt. Sir William Hotte, Bart. R.N. K.C.B. K.M.T. By Ledy Harriet Hoste. In 8 vols. 8vo. with Fortrait.

UTLINE of the SMALLER BRITISH rersons.

By ROBERT A. SLANEY, Esq. M.P.

"A' delightful little book, which in its spirit and manner emu lates that of the beloved White."—Rag. of Nat. History.

London: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

The Church of England.

Completion of the Second Volume of

E BRITISH MAGAZINE, and Monthly Register of Religious and Ecclesiastical and Monthly Register of Religious and Ecclesiastical Information.

As it is hilly desirable that the Third Volume of the British As it is hilly desirable that the first Month of the Year, that it is should commence with the first Month of the Year, that it is should commence with the first Month of the Year, that it is should commence with the first work of each two volumes published,) to complete the first two volumes of the work, which, in the present year, would otherwise be imperfect, a Supplementary Number, with an Index of both the Second and the preceding Volume, will be ready on the 20th of December: this will contain the conclusion of numerous Articles at present unfinished, a Title to the Second Volume, Table of Contents, and the following original Papers:—Hawk Church, Dorset, with an Engraving—On the Objections to Church Endowments —Thomas a Becket — Popular Observations on some characteristic circumstances belonging to our Lord's Miracies—Life and Death of the Brothers of Nuffolk. Original Correspondence:—On Tithes—Bishops in Parliament-Reform in the Church — Dissent in Waite—On Tenths—On Repairing and Restoring our Ancient Buildings and Monuments of Art.—On the Boris ISC Trial. Religious and Foreign Intellects that the Church of the Brother of the Brother Care. And the usual variety of matter, interesting to the Clergy, Landowner, Antiquary, and Religious and Benevolent World.

The new Series will appear on the 1st of January.

John Turrill and T. Clerc Smith, 250, Regent Street, where all Communications for the Editor (post paid), Advertisements, acc. are to be sent.

A very Appropriate and Acceptable Christmas Present.

Dedicated by special permission to His Majesty King William the Fourth, handsomely printed in 8vo. price 18s. in cloth; or clegantly bound in ally, gilt edges, price 14s.

FIFTY-ONE ORIGINAL FABLES, with Morals and Ethical Index. Emballished with Morals and Ethical Index. Embellished with Eighty-five original Designs by R. Cruikshank.

Alse, a translation o Plutarch's Banquet of the Seven Sages, revised for this work.

London: Printed for Hamilton, Adams, and Co.
Paternoster Row.

U S E F U L and E L E G A N T PRESENTS.

1. The Historical Traveller; a Series of 1. AME THEORICAL Traveller; a Series of Narratives, illustrative of the most interesting epochs and place connected with the History of Europe; for the use of Young Persons. By Mrs. Charles Gore. 2d edition, 2 vols. 8c. bound.

2. The Alhambra; or, New Sketch-Book. By Washington Irving. 2d and cheaper edition, 2 vols. post 8ro 16c.

3. Memoirs of Celebrated Female Sovereigns.

By Mr. Jameson. In 9 role post 8vc. 21s.

4. Lives and Exploits of eminent Military Commanders. By G. P. R. James, Esq. Author of "Darnley," Oct. 2 vols. post 8vc.

New estates, present a signs by Westati, 6s.

7. The Etonian; a Series of Essays and Delineations of Life and Manners. By distinguished Eton Scholars. 3 vols. 18s. bound.

For a very high categium on this work, see the Quarterly

8. The Modern Novelists; a Selection of the best recent Works of Fiction by the most eminent Authors. In 50 vols. price 10% bound.

9. The History of Modern Greece, adapted for the use of Students in the upper classes. By James Emerson Esq. of Trinity College, Dublin. In 2 vols. 8vo. 16s.

"This important work supplies a deficiency often felt and regretted in English literature."—Globe.

gretted in English literature."—Globe.

10. New Arabian Nights' Entertainments;
now first selected and translated from the Original Oriental MS.
By the Rev. George Lamb. 3 vols. small 8vo. with Plates, 18s. bound.
"These Tales possess other charms besides the marvellons.
They constain much excellent moral instruction and philosophical reflection."—Literary Chronicle.

11. Lectures on Painting. By Henry Fuseli,

Baq. R.A. Complete, 184.

12. Practical Wisdom; or, the Manual of Life; being the Counsels of eminent Men to their Children. New edition, with 9 Miniature Portraits of the Writers, 5x. bd. 13. Conversations on the Bible. By a Lady.

1 vol. 6s. bound.
"We cordially recommend this excellent work to the attention of all those who are engaged in the instruction of the rising generation."—Literary Chronicle.

14. Practical Domestic Economy; in which scarcely a single subject connected with Housekeeping, from the care of the Library down to the management of the Beer-Cellar, is not treated of. New and improved edition, 50. bound.

15. Guide to Matrimonial Happiness. Writn by a Lady of Distinction, to her recently 5s. 6d. bound. Published for H. Colburn, by R. Bentley, New Burlington Street

THE SELUTION SERIES OF TRAITS and STORIES of the IRISH PEASANTRY.

By the Author of the First Series.

"It possesses all the merits by which the former volumes were distinguished, and is sullied by none of their defects.... The work before us contains more information respecting the character, tablic, and feelings of the Irish peasantry, than any that has for a long time come before the British public."—Atheneum, No. 208.

No. 206.

Dublin: W. F. Wakeman: London, Simpkin and Marshall, and R. Groombridge.

Metropolitus Guide.

EIGH'S NEW PICTURE of LONDON,
8th edition, including Stranger's Guide to the Remarkable Bulldings, Antiquities, and other Cariosites; with a Plan for Viewing London in Eight Days, and a Description of the

In post 8vo. price 4s.

ETTERS of SIR WALTER SCOTT, and diressed to the Rev. Richard Polwhele, Davies Gilbert, q., Francis Douce, Esq., and others. Accompanied by an ginal Autobiography of Lieut. Gen. Sir Hussey Vivian, Bart.

C.B.

K.C.B.

Published by J. B. Nichols and Son, 25, Parliament Street; and sold by Simphin and Marshall, Stationers' Hall Court, Ludgate Street, London.

"This volume, though alight, is pleasing as far as it goes. It will ever be a pleasant companion to the publications of the immortal man to whom it chiefly relates."—Literary Gazette.

"Contributions to that vaut store which will form the basis of a lasting biography of Scott."—Atheneum.

In 2 vols. 8vo. with Plates, price 36s. boards,
MEMORIALS of the PROFESSIONAL
LIPE and TIMES of SIR WILLIAM PENN, Knt.
Admiral and General of the Fleet during the Interregnum, Admiral, and Commissioner of the Admiralty and Navy after the Restoration. From 1644 to 1670.
By GRANVILLE PENN, Esq.

Also, edited by the same Author,
The Character of a Trimmer. His opinion of, I. the Laws and Government; 2. Protestant Religion; 3. the Papists; 4. Foreign Affairs. By the Honourable Sir William Coventry, Knt. In 1 vol. 870. price 51. Printed for James Duncan, 37, Paternoster Row.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

Dr. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopadia.
In monthly volumes, small 8vo. 6s. in cloth.
1, being Vol. 38 of the above, the concluding On Jan. 1, being Vol. 38 of the above, the concluding Vol. of

I S T O R Y of S P A I N and

PORTUGAL. In 5 vols.

Published Dec. 1.—History of Bogland. By Sir J. Mackintosh.

Volumes to be published successively:

Naval History of England, by It. Souther, Vol. I.

Treatise on Astronomy, by Sir John Herschel.

Treatise on Heat, and its Applications. By Dr. Lardner.

History of Ireland, by Thomas Moore, Vol. I.

London: Longman and Co.; and John Taylor.

On the 1st of January will be published, in a beautifully printed foolscap 8vo. vol. with Engravings by Bonner, price 3c. boards, "HE NATURAL HISTORY of SEL-

BORNE, with Observations on some parts of Nature.

By the late Rev. GILBERT WHITE.

With Notes by Captain THOMAS BRUWNE, F.L.S.

Being the first volume of the British Library, a Series intended to comprise the Classic Authors of Britain in History, Philosophy, Natural History, and Polite Literature.

Also,
In demy 8vo. with beautiful Illustrations on Wood, price 1s.

The Field Naturalist's Magazine and Review. Edited by Professor Rennies, King's College, London.

Contents of No. I.:—
1. Esgle-shooting in the Alps. By the Editor. With a Vignette.
2. On the Motions of Animais. From the Italian of Borrelli.
3. Remarks on the Colours of the Feathers of Birds. By Edward. On the mounts.

On the mounts of the Feathers of Biros. By Lursia. Blyth.

The Alderman Butterfly. From Sepp. With a Vignette of the Caterpillar in its various stages of existence.

The Natural History of the Birds of Africa. From the French of Le Vaillant. With a highly-finished Kagraving on Wood of the Grifferst by Bonne of the Grifferst by Landon of the Grifferst by Lando

On the $7d will be published, in $vo. price 7s. 6d. in boards, CEVEN LETTERS on NATIONAL RELIGION, addressed to the Rev. Henry Melville, A.M. late Fellow and Tator of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Contents:—I. On the Principle of National Religion—II. Exemplified in the Gentile State of Britain Religion—II. Exemplified in the Gentile State of Britain Childs.—IV. The for the color of the Papacy—V. The Principle of Protestantism with respect to Dissent—VII. These Subjects in connexion with the present Crisis.

By CHARLES SMITH. B.D.

resent Crisis.

By CHARLES SMITH, B.D.
Fellow and Tator of St. Peter's College, Cambridge.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pall Mall; and J. and J. Deighton,

THE SECOND SERIES of TRAITS and STORIES of the IRISH PEASANTRY.

By the Author of the First Series.

STORIES of the IRISH PEASANTRY.

By the Author of the First Series.

Novels, and alegantly covered in cloth, price 6s.

THE GHOST-HUNTER and his FAMILY.

By the O'Hara Family.

Complete in one volume, equal in size to two volumes of a common novel; forming the first monthly volume of the Library of Romance.

ALLEAN AND THE MERCHAN

Edited by LEITCH RITCHIE. London: Smith, Elder, and Co. Cornhill.

In a few days will be published, in 12mo. price 5s. boards,

IRECTIONS to CHURCHWARDENS,
for the Faithful Dincharge of their Duty.
For the Faithful Dincharge of their Duty.
By HUMPIREY BY BEACK, D.D.
Heretefore Deep 61 North in the Add Control of Saffelk.
A new edition, corrected, what of the Additions.
By ROBERT PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq.

Barrister-ai-Law.

To which is appended,

The Select Vestry Act, &c. &c. ondon: Longman, Rees, Orme, Brown, Green, and Longman.

Of whom may be had, Just published, a new edition of Wilbur's Reference Testament; being the Common Version of the New Testament, with References, and a Key of Questions, Geographical, Historical, Doctrinal, Practical, and Experimental. To which is added, Outlines for Bible-class Instruction; Table of Proper Names accented for Correct Pronunciation; Geographical Table; Chronological Table; Table of Reference to the Prophecies; and a Miscellaneous Table. With three Maps, in 13mo. price 4s. boards, or 4s. 6d. bound.

Rev. G. Tonnesna's Chronological Arrangement of the Bible, in One Volume.

On the ist of January will be published, No. I. (to be completed in Twelve Monthly Parts, price St. each, of

THE HOLY BIBLE, BITBURGH IN HISTORY BIBLE, BITBURGH IN Historical and Chronological Order, in such manner that the whole may be reed as one connected History, in the Words of the authorised Translation. With short Notes; and a Table, dividing the Sacred Volume into 365 Portions for daily Reading throughout the Year.

By the Rev. GEORGE TOWNSEND, M.A.

Prebendary of Durham, and Vicar of Northalierton.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Charchyard, and Waterloo Place, Pail Mail.

2. The larger Edition of the Arrangement, containing a copious Body of Annotations, may be had in four volumes, price 4(.) in boards, or the Old and New Testament separately, price 3/. each.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,
No. XCVI. will be published on Monday.
Contents.
On the Philosophy of Appartions—Demonology—Witchcraft

On the Philosophy of the Autural Magic.

The Poor Laws and Surplus Labour, and their Mutual

11. The Foot Laws and Surpins Labour, and their Mutual Reaction.

111. Public Carriages—the Road.

11V. On the Phenomena of Life, and the Mysteries of the Human Frame. By Dr. Stevens.

V. Zohrab the Hostage.

VI. The History of Charlemagne. By G. P. R. James, Esq. VII. Mémoires de Louis XVIII.

VIII. Sir Edward Seaward's Shipwreck, and extraordinary and highly interesting Events in his Life.

1X.—1. On the Statistics and Political Institutions of the United States; with Observations on the Ecclesiastical System of America, her Sources of Revenue, &c.

X. La Fayette et la Revolution de 1880. Par B. Sarrans.

XI.—1. How it must work. By Lord Teynham. 2. Church Reform. By Lord Henley.

John Murray, Albemarle Street.

Protestant Champion.

On the 1st of January will be published, price 6d. the first No. of JHE NEW EVANGELICAL CHURCH of ENGLAND CHAMPION; containing a Defence of her Faith Government, and Discipline, occurring to the Principles of the Champion of the Control of Burke's Portrait Gallery of Distinguished Females.

On the 1st of Jan. 1833, uniform with Lodge's and the Society's "Galleries of Portraits," Part I. to be continued every Fortnight, until completed in 34 Parts, each containing Three Bone Portraits, price only 2s. 6d.

THE PORTRAIT GALLERY of DISTINGUISHED FEMALES: including Description.

THE PORTRAIT GALLERY of DISTINGUISHED FEMALES; including Beauties of the Courts of George IV. and William IV. With Memoirs, By JOHN BURKER, Ear.

Author of "The Feerage and Baronetage."

These engraved Portraits will be produced under the immediate care and superintendence of Mr. Cochran, the eminent Engraver, from Pictures by Lawrence, Jackson, 8hee, Pickeragili, Chalon, &c. &c. They will represent various Members of almost every Noble Family in the Kingdom, and the Royal Families of England and France.

Published by Edward Bull, 26, Holles Street.
Orders for the above are received by every Bookseller and Printseller in the United Kingdom.

On the 1st of January (to be centinued on the 1st of every Month),
Price Sixpence, with Wood Engravings,

THE ZOOLOGICAL MAGAZINE; or, Journal of Natural History. Intended as a cheap, amusing, and instructive companion to the study of Zoology and vatural History. Published by Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

To be had of all Bookseliers.

MISCELLANY CONSTABLE'S

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED WORKS,

IN THE VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND THE ARTS.

Being intended for all ages as well as ranks, Constable's Miscellany is printed in a style and form which combine at once the means of giving much matter in a small space, with the requisites of great clearness and facility.

Every Volume contains a Vignette Title-page; and numerous other Illustrations, such as Maps, Portraits, &c. are occasionally given. Each Vol. contains at least 320 pages, price 3s. 6d.; a limited number being printed on fine paper, with early impressions of the Plates, price 5s.

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane, London; Waugh and Innes, Edinburgh; and J. Cumming, Dublin.

VOLUMES I. II. III.
CAPTAIN HALL'S VOYAGES,
VIz.—I. Voyage to Loo Choo, &c. in the Eastern Seas.
II. Interview with Napoleon, at St. Helena, in August 1817.
III. Journal written on the Coasts of Chili, Mexico, and Peru.

ADVENTURES of BRITISH SEAMEN. By HUGH MURRAY, Esq. F.R.S.E.

MEMOIRS of the MARCHIONESS DE LA ROCHEJAQUELIN.
With a Preface and Notes by Sir WALTER SCOTT, Bart.

VI. VII.

CONVERTS from INFIDELITY.

By ANDREW CRICHTON.

SYME'S EMBASSY to the KINGDOM of AVA.

With a Narrative of the late Military and Political Operations in the Birman Empire. x.

TABLE-TALK; or, SELECTIONS from the ANA.

> PERILS and CAPTIVITY, Viz.-I. The Shipwreck of the Medusa Frigate.
> II. Captivity of M. De Brisson.
> III. Voyage and Sufferings of Madame Godin.

XII. SELECTIONS of the MOST REMARK. ABLE PHENOMENA of NATURE. By H. G. BELL, Esq.

MARINER'S ACCOUNT of the NATIVES of the TONGA ISLANDS, in the South Pacific Ocean.

XV. XVI HISTORY of the REBELLION in SCOTLAND, in 1745, 1746.
By ROBERT CHAMBERS,
Author of "Traditions of Edinburgh," &c.

VOYAGES and EXCURSIONS on the EAST COAST, and in the INTERIOR of CEN-TRAL AMERICA.

By ORLANDO W. ROBERTS, many Years a Resident Trader.

The HISTORICAL WORKS of

FREDERICK SCHILLER.
From the German.
By GEORGE MOIR, E4q. Translator of "Wallenstein."

SX. XXI.

An HISTORICAL VIEW

Of the Manners, Customs, Dresses, Arts, Literature, &c. of Great Britain, from the time of the Saxons down to the 18th Century.

By RICHARD THOMSON, Esq.

The GENERAL REGISTER of POLITICS, SCIENCE, and LITERATURE, for 1827.

LIFE of ROBERT BURNS.
By J. G. LOCKHART, LL.B.

XXIV. XXV.

LIFE of MARY QUEEN of SCOTS.
By HENRY GLASSFORD BELL, Esq.

EVIDENCES of CHRISTIANITY. By the Venerable Archdeacon WRANGHAM. XXVII. XXVIII.

MEMORIALS of the LATE WAR VI.—I. Journal of a Soldier of the 71st Regiment—II. The Spanish Campaign of 1808. By Adam Neale, M.D. F.L.S.—III. Despatch after the Battle of Corunna. By Lieut-General Sir John Hope—IV. Reminiscences of a Campaign in the Pyreness and South of France. By John Malcolm, Esq.—V. Memoirs of the War of the French in Spain. By M. De Rocca—VI. Narratives of the Battles of Quatre-Bras, Ligny, and Waterloo—VII. Death of Napoleon Bomparte. A TOUR in GERMANY, and some of the Southern Provinces of the Austrian Empire, in 1820, 21, 22. By JOHN RUSSELL, Esq.

HISTORY of the REBELLIONS of SCOTLAND,

Under Montrose and others, from 1638 to 166 By ROBERT CHAMBERS, Author of the "Rebellion in 1745," &c.

XXXIII. XXXIV. XXXV.
HISTORY of the PRINCIPAL REVOLU-TIONS in EUROPE,
From the Subversion of the Roman Empire in the West, till the Abdication of Bonaparte.

From the French of C. W. KOCH, by ANDREW CRICHTON

XXXVI. XXXVII.
NARRATIVE of a PEDESTRIAN JOUR-NEY through RUSSIA and SIBERIAN TARTARY.

By Captain JOHN DUNDAS COCHRANE, R.N.

A PERSONAL NARRATIVE of a TOUR through NORWAY, SWEDEN, and DEN-MARK.

By DERWENT CONWAY, Author of "Spain in 1880," &c.

HISTORY of SCULPTURE, PAINTING, and ARCHITECTURE. By J. S. MEMES, LL.D. Author of the " Life of Canova," &c.

HISTORY of the OTTOMAN EMPIRE,

From its Establishment in 1326, to 1838.

By E. UPHAM, Esq. Author of the "History of Budhism," &c.

The REBELLIONS in SCOTLAND under DUNDEE and MAR, in 1689 and 1715.

By R. CHAMBERS,
Author of the "Rebellion in Scotland in 1745."

HISTORY of REMARKABLE CONSPIRACIES
Connected with European History.
By J. P. LAWSON, M.A.

NATURAL HISTORY of SELBORNE.

By the late Rev. GLEBERT WHITE, M.A.
With Additions, by Sir W. JARDINE, Bart. Author of "Illustrations of Ornithology," &c.
Illustrated by 18 Figures of Birds, engraved by Branston. XLVI.

An AUTUMN in ITALY;
Being a TOUR in the AUSTRIAN, TUSCAN, ROMAN, and
SARDINIAN STATES, in 1897.
By J. D. SINCLAIR, Eq.

XLVII. XLVIII.

The HISTORY of OLIVER CROMWELL,
Comprising the History of the Commonwealth, from the Year
1642 to the Restoration of Charles II. in 1600.
By M. RUSSELL, LL.D.

LIFE of HERNAN CORTES, Including the History of the Conquest of Mexico. By DON TELESFORO DE TRUEBA.

HISTORY of CHIVALRY and the CRUSADES.
By the Rev. HENRY STEBBING, M.A.

The HISTORY of MUSIC.
By W. C. STAFFORD.

LIFE of SIR WILLIAM WALLACE of ELDERSLIE,
With the History of his Struggle for the Independence of Scotland.
By JOHN D. CARRICK, Esq.

LIFE of KING JAMES the FIRST. By ROBERT CHAMBERS.

LVII. LVIII. LIX.
MEMOIRS of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, From the French of Bourrienne, Private Secretary to the Emperor. By JOHN 8. MEMES, LL.D.

HISTORY of the WAR of INDEPEND-ENCE in GREECE. By THOMAS KEIGHTLEY, Esq.

HISTORY of the CONQUEST of PERU by the SPANIARDS.

By DON TELESFORO DE TRUEBA.

The ACHIEVEMENTS of the KNIGHTS of MALTA,

From the Institution of the Hospitaliers of St. John, in 1009, till the Political Extinction of the Order by Napoleon, in 1800.
By ALEXANDER SUTHERLAND, Esq.

LXV JOURNAL of a RESIDENCE in NORMANDY. By J. A. St. JOHN, Esq. LXVI. LXVII.

A JOURNEY through the NORTHERN PROVINCES of FRANCE, the PYRENEES, and SWITZERLAND. By DERWENT CONWAY.

AMERICAN ORNITHOLOGY of ALEXANDER WILSON and C. LUCIEN BO-NAPARTE.

With Notes and Additions by PROFESSOR JAMESON.

MEMOIRS of the EMPRESS JOSEPHINE.
By J. S. MEMES, Esq. LL.D. LXXIII. LXXII

The HISTORY of the CIVIL WARS of IRELAND. By W. C. TAYLOR, M.A.

The BOOK of BUTTERFLIES, MOTHS, and SPHINXES,

Containing, in addition to Descriptive Letter-press, 190 Engravings, coloured from Nature. By Captain THOMAS BROWN, F.R.S. F.L.S. M.W.S. &c.

LXXVII.

A POPULAR GUIDE to the OBSERVA-TION of NATURE; Or, Hints of Inducement to the Study of Natural Productions and Appearances, in their Connexious and Relations. By R. MUDIE, Author of the "British Naturalist."

EXXVIII. EXXIX.
SHIPWRECKS and DISASTERS at SEA.
By C. REDDING, Esq.
With several Engravings.

The BOOK of BUTTERFLIES, MOTHS, and SPHINXES.

By Captain BROWN.
Vol. III. containing 48 coloured Plates, and Directions for Catching and Preserving Specimens.

LONDON: Published every Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETTE OFFICE, 7, Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulton Street, Ozefed Street: sold also by J. Chappell, 96, Royal Rachauper. E. Marlborough, Are Maria Lane, Ludgate Hill: A. Buck, Edinburgh: Smith and Son, D. Robertson, and Atkinson and Co. Glasgom: and J. Cumming, Dublin... Agent for America, O. Rich, 19, Red Lion Square, London.

J. MOYES, 28, Castle Street, Leicester Square.

THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE;

Journal of Belles Lettres, Arts, Sciences, &c.

This Journal is supplied Weekly, or Monthly, by the principal Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom; but to those who may require its immediate transmission by post, we recommend the LITERARY GAZETTE printed on stamped paper, price One Shilling.

No. 832.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1832.

PRICE 8d.

ADDRESS

THE Likes OF THE LITERARY GAZETTE. THE LITERARY GAZETTE

is rather perplexed by the above head, which was promulgated by an Irish friend exclaiming, "The likes of the Literary Gazette! where, among all the periodicals that ever existed, now or hereafter, will ye find the likes of the Literary Gazette?" Upon which the Literary Gazette itself, " with infinite promptitude," replied, " None but himself can be his parallel;" and I will shew you the "likes" of the Literary Gazette.

Like as Gibraltar, a strong fortification, reckless of battering without, and garrisoned with honest hearts within, while other citadels and fortresses yield to time and the fortune of war, it proclaims itself a real pillar of Hercules; and bristling with defence, if attacked, and with offence, if provoked, shews at once what it is to be impregnable and everlasting.

Like as the Britannia (of 120 guns), heedless how the changeable wind blows, and breasting in her strength every wave and current, while carrying British power and intelligence to every quarter of the globe: it delights the lofty ship to see the little trading crafts and coasting vessels pursue their small adventures, when a smuggler appears to leave the chance to the revenue cruisers, and to let even pirates shift for themselves, if they do not come under her guns in their miserable course of violating the law of nations.

Like as a pyramid, which rose in its own style, while yet there was nothing similar on the face of the earth, and which yet remains imperishable and great, " the admired of all beholders," while hundreds and thousands of imitative monuments have been built up and have decayed, leaving no trace behind.

Like as Balaam's ass, which, while all other donkeys have done nothing more than bray and make a noise, has never spoken but to the purpose.

Like as the Sibyl's books, which, while other publications are all the better the less you see of them, is so precious, that not a leaf can be lost without injury to the cause of literature, and science, and the arts, and the improvement of mankind.

Like as the great tun at Heidelberg, where thousands and tens of thousands may drink of excellent wine, and be exhilarated and enlightened. And who would exchange that for a penny glass of gin, or a fractional portion of a poor imitating compound sold under the name of wine, and not half so genuine as Charles Wright's?

Like as being written on Christmas Eve, when there can be no nonsense stirring, and the whole population of England is, to the utmost of its ability, strenuously, vigorously, assiduously, unveeringly, perseveringly employed in one great cause—the diffusion of knowledge by the best possible means.

But as there are Likes, so there may be Dislikes.

THE LITERARY GAZETTE

dislikes much which it observes among too many of its dear* contemporaries. It dislikes puffing; it dislikes partiality; it dislikes personality; it dislikes venality; it dislikes lying; and a few other vices. But as it never has seen such practices succeed to any extent of circulation or influence, it looks upon the Existent as the passing onward to the tomb of the Gone-before. It kindly sup-

Query, "Cheap?" Printer's Devil .- "No, nothing bad, nothing indifferent, can be chesp." Ed.

must fail, the partiality please none but the unjustly praised, the personality be acceptable only to the idle or vicious, the venality be discovered, and the lying deceive so few as not even to gratify the liar!

THE LITERARY GAZETTE.

between the jest and earnest of this annual Address, for the first time thanks its friends and readers for being enabled to hold on its own unvaried and unvarying course. While it was a novelty in periodical literature, and stood nearly alone in the minor system of its sphere, it had only to deserve and to be appreciated. It is most grateful to look back, but still more grateful to look at its present and to the promise of its future, for the reward of an honourable speculation. For we now live at a period of great change in literature as well as in other important concerns; and to stand high in the estimation of the public, to pursue an undiminished course of usefulness, to be unaffected by the distractions of an extraordinary crisis, is the proudest testimony which could attend our labours.

The aim of our Journal is, and has ever been, to reflect the literature, arts, sciences, discoveries, and improvements. of the times: the images as faithful as a pure medium could render them. Nor have we failed. There have been, no doubt, many broken lines, many imperfect points of vision, many things altered by the atmosphere or the accident of the moment; but in the character of a general guide and reference, we do not hesitate to point to sixteen volumes of the Literary Gasette as a national record of all that civilised man desires to know and to preserve, such as has never hitherto been produced in any form of periodical publication.

It must be our duty to watch the mutable symptoms of the present day. We do not so much allude to political considerations, though their importance has greatly affected, and must greatly affect the literary world. But that world itself has internally undergone a very considerable alteration. To talk in the terms of trade, there is little or no publishing in the metropolis of England, beyond job books, and series of reprints and compilations. The literature of the country is at a very low ebb; and the really literary men, including the possessors of learning and genius in every one of their noblest aspects, are at the bottom of the wheel of fortune. During this state of things, we cannot have, nor have we had, any fair proportion of works of sterling value or immortal stamina. Sufficient for our day is the mediocrity thereof: there is no encouragement for higher efforts. Literature has become a mere traffic; and Shakespeare and Milton at a prospective three and a half per cent, would be rejected for Timkins and Jinkins at four. In truth, there is no market for independent writing; and we will venture to assert that, with all the frivolity of our age, there are many hundred books in manuscript at this day, for which the writers can procure no vent whatever, that would do honour to them and to the country, and repay publication, too, were this branch carried on as it ought to be.

Let us hope that returning quiet and prosperity in other wave may lead to an amelioration in this particular. For ourselves, we, of necessity, have felt the influence of the change. We could only be what our materials made us. If inundated with kaleidoscope works, our page must be evanescent and fitful as they; but still it reflected what passed for the literature of the age, and when aught more sterling came forth, due homage was paid to the welcome stranger. In short, our idea of Gazetting is, poses the Public to be intelligent; and thus that the puff; judgment, and impartiality; diligence, which commands information; judgment, which seeks more to communicate what it has reaped than to make a display; and impartiality, founded on a character hardly bought by overcoming the many temptations that beset critical independence,-the favourable disposition, and the temper ruffled by trickery and impudence unseen to the less observant.

> It is likely, we think, that the present periodical hodgepodge system will pass away; or, at any rate, that it never will seriously affect well-established works of merited reputation. There may be shilling and eighteenpenny Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews; but, not to calculate the expense of paper and printing, what is to remunerate the talent necessary to instruct others, and devoted to that purpose? There are, and may be many more, very cheap, and very interesting publications, so long as materials can be readily picked up on every side to form a Baker's pie of literature; but, by and by, the resources must become scarce, and where then is the mind to be of real value to the reader? The patch-work quilt is of all gay colours: but, after the sempstress has exhausted her scraps, she has neither web nor woof to supply another covering. It would be a pity if the mere quilters could supply the demand; and yet certain it is that while they last they must injure original productions. We do not speak of daily, or weekly, or monthly, or quarterly publications: but of the entire fabric in England as, at this moment, deteriorated by floods of mediocrity and compilation, by things that do not, and ought not, to thrive, but which have just power enough to disturb what is good, and injure what is beneficial. But the folly, like all other follies, will work its own cure; and it will be perceived, that as there is no royal road to geometry, so neither is there any byway to knowledge. A sounder state of literature will revive; and, instead of superficial reiterations, we shall again see the efforts of ability, of learning, and of genius, encouraged.

> Till then we bid our readers farewell, assuring them that we shall continue to do our utmost to preserve the gratifying station assigned to us by their favourable opinion, and to employ the ample means which long experience and success have acquired for us, in such a manne as to afford them satisfaction in what is useful, an pleasure in what is entertaining; to improve their minds by exhibiting the progress of intellect in every branch worthy of human attention, and diffuse an adequate acquaintance with British literature and science throughout every class of the community abroad and at home.

. A brief summary of the contents of the volume, concluded in this Number, will shew how much must be done in order to furnish its annual panorama. Above 990 volumes are fairly and candidly reviewed, viz. 19 quartos, 299 octavos, and 609 duodecimos and smaller publications, which, averaging each volume at little more than 300 pages, will give the enormous amount of nearly 300,000 pages examined within one year to supply the Review department alone. Add to this Fine Arts, in which no fewer than 240 new publications have been criticised, besides detailed accounts of Exhibitions, and numerous miscellaneous notices; Reports of proceedings of all the learned and scientific Bodies, with abstracts of the papers read, to the number of 150; Expeditions of Discovery, New inventions in the useful arts, &c., New musical publications and concerts; Original poetry, by L. E. L., C. Swain, R. Howitt, and other popular writers; Biography of distinguished individuals, Munden, Miss Porter, SirW. Scott, Hogg, Cuvier, Goëthe, &c.; Sketches that only three qualities are required, viz. diligence, of Society, including Garrick Club papers; Noctes Westmonasterienses: Walks about Town by the Devil incog., Arc Arc

Under the head of Drama, in addition to critical notices of all new pieces and performances weekly, will be found n series of amusing papers, entitled "Unrehearsed Stage Effects." French Plays. &c.

The Varieties include interesting statistical notices, miscellanies in the literary world, singular statements in contemporary periodicals, humorous sketches, &c. &c. A weekly list of all new works in progress, and notices of all scientific povelties.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

Memoirs of a Chaperon. Edited by Lady Dacre. 3 vols. 12mo. London, 1833. Bentley. LADY DACRE'S name is a passport for any publication, not only into the highest, but into the best literary circles; and we rejoice to receive into our hands a work so auspiciously introduced. It is written, we understand, by Mrs. Sulivan, a near relative of her ladyship's, and proving herself in these volumes to be closely allied by talent as well as consanguinity. The first of them contains the "Single Woman of a certain age," and the commencement of "Milly and Lucy," which is concluded in Vol. II. and followed by "Warrenne," and "An Old Tale and often told," i. e. that of a divorced lady. The third gives us " Ellen Wareham."

As it is the plain truth, and our honest duty, we must confess to not having read the whole of these tales in a manner sufficiently careful to he able to speak particularly of the merits of them all, and the separate pictures of feeling which they so vividly exhibit. We do not know when we have read a more touching story than the first of the series; it is full of deep feeling and quiet beauty—simple, real, and unexaggerated. The second we only like in part. The village story wants ease; bad grammar does not constitute simplicity; and our author has failed in giving an appearance of real life to the old nurse: the more artificial characters are infinitely more natural. Of the following tales we cannot as yet offer an opinion, saving that the last begins well. Truly might Washington Irving say, "it is not po-verty but pretence which harasses a poor man." The great characteristic of these pages is sentiment_sentiment born of genuine emotion, but kept in control by fine taste; and also knowledge of the world, using that phrase as it is commenly used, to express society. Rather observing than creating, there is an individuality about the characters which gives them that air of actual existence so attractive in fiction. Lord Montreville, in "Milly and Lucy," is sketched with that liveliness which springs at once from natural talent and acquired material - the tact for perception, accompanied by the power of delineation. Dramatic and connected, these tales cannot be appreciated by an extract; we may shew the style, the train of thought, the happy and just remark; but the interest of the narrative is in the whole. Moreover, we have only time and space for brief extract. The first story commences thus:

"Why is it that the bustling matron, who (having, without preference or selection, married the first man who proposed to her) has spent her days in the unsentimental details of a household, a nursery, and a school-room, merely considering her partner as the medium through which these several departments are wedded life of broils and disputes - and the buxom widow, whose gay and blooming face gives the lie to her mourning garments - why is it that they all cast a pitying glance of con-tempt on the 'single woman of a certain age' who ventures an opinion on the subject of love? Why do they all look as if it were impossible she could ever have felt its influence? On the contrary, the very fact of singleness affords in itself presumptive evidence of the power of some strong and unfortunate predilection. Few women pass through life without having had some opportunities of what is commonly called ' settling;' therefore the chances are, that betrayed affections, an unrequited attachment, or an early prepossession, has called forth the sentiment of which they are supposed incapable and called it forth, too, in a mind of too much delicacy to admit the idea of marriage from any other motive than that of love."

How true are these observations!

"Those who imagine they do not please, often neglect the means by which they might do so; whereas, if they once become aware that all they say and do finds favour in the sight of others, they are no longer ashamed of being charming, or afraid to be agreeable. "Mortification is but half felt while it is only felt in secret. It is not till we perceive it has been remarked by others that it becomes one of the most painful sensations to which the weak, the vain, and the worldly, are liable, and one from which the most humble and pure minded can scarcely boast of being entirely free."

We add a delicately coloured painting of unrequited affection, left to solitude and its remembrances, when the heart, too, has been softened by recent affliction.

"After the funeral, they retured to their Their hearts sank within desolate home. them as they drove along the well-known avenue, which led straight to the front of the house, on which the hatchment met their eyes for the last half-mile of their approach. Fanny supported her father into the drawing-room, where every object which met their eyes was but a renewal of grief. The easy chair, with cushions of every shape, to procure ease to a frame wearied and worn out the invalid sofa-table, the footstool, just where Lady Elmsley had last used it—the portable book-case, containing her favourite authors, stood on the table as usual—the large basket of carpet-work, which was deemed too cumbrous to be taken to Clifton — the glass vase, which Fanny always kept replenished with the choicest flowers, and which the gardener had now filled with care, that the room might look cheerful, and which the housemaid had placed on the accustomed spot, —all combined to make their return more painful, if possible, than they had anticipated. The next morning, when, before her father left his room, Fanny altered the disposition of the furniture, and removed the things which so forcibly reminded them of her for whom they mourned, she felt it almost a sacrilegious act to touch them. Time, however, rolled on, and Sir Edward became calm and resigned; but Fanny's spirits did not rally. She had fervently loved her mother; she missed her in every occupation, in every duty, in every amusement. Strange to say, her thoughts, which during her mother's illness had been so completely weaned from the subject of her own disappointment, in her provided for — why is it that the languid present quiet and solitude would revert to beauty, who has sold herself to age or folly for an opera-box, an equipage, a title — why is it happy days of delusion, when she believed that the seold, who has jangled through a herself the object of Lord Delaford's preference; she felt that would have been a sin: but she fancied that by dwelling only on recollections, in which the images of Lord Delaford and of Isabella were blended to-gether, she was accustoming herself to the idea of their union, and preparing her mind for seeing them, as man and wife, when, en their return from the continent, they were to pay their promised visit to the Priory. She forgot that,

'En songeant qu'il faut l'oublier,

As she wandered about her lonely flowergarden, she at one time remembered how Lord Delaford had gathered some of the beautiful double dahlias, and had called Isabella's attention to the rich blending of their various hues; how Isabella had laughingly twisted them into her hair; and how surpassingly beautiful she had looked when bending over the marble basin (she had used it, as nymphs of old, for her looking-glass), while the evening sun just tipped her dark brown curls with a golden hue, and tinged her downy mantling cheek with a more mellow bloom. Fanny could almost fancy she again saw the eyes of rapturous admiration with which he watched her graceful action. At another time, if she were training the straggling honeysuckles over the treillage, she recollected how her hopes had received their death-blow, when, on entering the drawing-room before dinner, she found Lord Delaford and Isabella in their morning dress, still occupied in reducing the unruly tendrils to obedience; and how Isabella blushed to find it so late, and Lord Delaford insisted it must be Fanny who had mistaken the hour. In recollecting these circumstances, she again experienced the same painful feelings of mortifi-cation and despondency; she did not thus acquire forgetfulness, or indifference."

We find it quite impossible, as we go on, to afford an idea of this series of pictures of real life, by cutting out bits of the canvass. Where delicacy, refinement, and truth connected with truth, pervade the traits and give the character, the task of illustrating by piece-meal is hopeless. But we shall return to it in our first No. for the ensuing year; and must for the present be content with this very imperfect sketch in the last for 1832, crowded as it is by Index and other temporary matter.

Evenings in Greece. By Thomas Moore, Esq. Second Evening. London, 1832. Power.

THE second part of this happy union of music and verse has come most opportunely to delight the social circles of the holyday season. The poetical narrative fancies an assemblage of Grecian nymphs, their lovers and friends, on the island of Zea, where various subjects call forth the song. The scenery is painted with all Mr. Moore's freshness, and the actors described in his own charming manner. But our illustrations must, from their nature, be chiefly made up of the lyrical compositions, and we shall only quote a slight portion of the connecting link. The opening is sweet :-

"The noon-day tempest over, Now ocean tolls no more, And wings of halcyons hover, Where all was strife before. Oh, thus may life, in closing Its short tempestuous day, Beneath heaven's smile reposing, Shine all its storms away !

Again, a scene is unfolded-

"A picture 'twas of the early days
Of glorious Greece, ere yet those rays
Of high, immortal Mind were hers
That made mankind her wombingers;

While yet unsung her landscapes shone With glory lent by heaven alone: Nor temples crown'd her nameless hills Nor muse immortalised her rills; Nor muse immortalised her rills;
Nor aught but the mute poesy
Of sun, and stars, and shining sea,
Illumined that land of bards to be.
While, prescient of the gifted race
That yet would realm so blest adorn,
Nature took pains to deck the place
Where glorious Art was to be born!"

Among the other incidents, a bark pass announcing the death of Byron at Missolonghi which introduces the following hymn, founded on the TIXTER 'Aprilo, ours refrance. "Thou art not dead—thou art not dead!

No, dearest Harmodius, no. Thy soul, to realms above us fled Though, like a star, it dwells o'er head, Still lights this world below.
Thou art not dead—thou art not dead!
No, dearest Harmodius, no. Through isles of light, where heroes tread, And flowers ethereal blow, Thy god-like spirit now is led, Thy tip, with life ambrosial fed, Forgets all taste of wo. Thou art not dead—thou art not dead! No, dearest Harmodius, no. The myrtle, round that falchion spread Which struck the immortal blow,
Throughout all time, with leaves unshed,
The patriot's hope, the tyrant's dread,
Kound Freedom's shrine shall grow.
Thou art not dead—thou art not dead!
No, dearest Harmodius, no.

Where hearts like thine have broke or Though quench'd the vital glow, Their memory lights a flame, instead, Which, ev'n from out the narrow bed Of death its beams shall throw. Thou art not dead—thou art not dead! No, desirest Harmodius, no. Thy name, by myriads sung and said, From age to age shall go, Long as the oak and ivy wed, As bees shall haunt Hymettus' head, Or Helle's waters flow.

Thou art not dead—thou art not dead! No, dearest Harmodius, no-

Where hearts like thine have broke or bled.

We will contrast this strain with a loveaffair between Cupid and Minerva (when young), which is much in the playful vein of the poet's early songs.

"As Love, one summer eve, was straying,
Who should he see, at that soft hour,
But young Minerva, gravely playing
Her flute within an olive bower. I need not say, 'tis Love's opinion
That, grave or merry, good or ill,
The sex all bow to his dominion,
As woman will be woman still.

As woman will be woman still.

Though seldom yet the boy hath given
To learned dames his smiles or sighs,
So handsome Pallas look'd, that even
Love quite forgot to 'maid was wise.
Besides, a youth of his discerning
Knew well that, by a shady rill,
At sunset hour—whate'er her learning—
A woman will be woman still.

Her flute he praised in terms ecatatic,
Wishing it dumb—nor cared how soon
For Wisdom's notes, howe'er chromatic, To Love seem always out of tune.
But long as he found face to flatter,
The nymph found breath to shake and thrill;
As, weak or wise,—it doth not matter—
Woman, at heart, is woman still.

Woman, at neart, is woman still.

Love changed his plan, with warmth exclaiming,

How brilliant was her lips' soft dye!'

And much that flute, the sly rogue! blaming,

For twisting lips so sweet awry.

The nymph look'd down—beheld her features

Reflected in the passing rill,

And started, shock d—for, ah, ye creatures!

Ev'n whea divine, you're women still.

Evn when divine, you're women still.

Quick from the lips it made so odious

That graceless flute the goddess took,

And, while yet fill'd with breath melodious,

Flung it into the glassy brook,

Where, as its vocal life was fleeting

Adown the current, faint and shrill,

At distance long 'twas heard repeating,

' Woman, alas, vain woman still!'

This will suffice to shew the lovers of poetry what they have to expect in this fair tome; nor will the lovers of melody be less delighted mor will the lovers of melody be less delighted described its claim to the title at the moment should be terrified out of my life, observation below the selections, adaptations, of this fearful, as it was unexpected, double and composition. These consist of thirteen apparition. He half rose, and quite reseated safely chime in upon ground so distinctly and several anonymous writers, besides Bohemian, German, and other foreign sources, recommended by novelty and beauty.

At parting, we must point out one or two little offences in the poetry. Is "to fleet," p. 97, a legitimate verb? Page 99, Hydriot barks shooting their skiffs, is obviously a blunder; and at p. 102, and other places, the divisions of lines are faulty. Ex. gr.-

"Sat a young nymph, with her lap full
Of newly gather'd flowers, o'er which
She graceful lean'd, intent to cull
All that was there of hue most rich."

But these are trifles, and the merits of the work could carry five hundred such.

My Village, versus Our Village. By T. Crofton Croker, author of "Barney Mahoney, "Fairy Legends," &c. &c. 12mo. London, 1833. Fisher, Son, and Co.

"THE truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," instead of fairy landscapes, fairy portraits, and ideal virtues. Really, of late our authors have become so exceedingly genteel, so high in their notions, so fastidious in dramatic persons, so equally languid and lachrymose, that we began to doubt whether originality and vulgarity had not gone out together, and whether there were any people in the world who did not go to Almack's, retail club on dits, and speak in a low tone of voice, to say nothing of the said speaking being half in French. This very amusing little volume convinces us to the contrary; it presents a series of Dutch paintings, full of life and humour, and with that air of reality about them, which seems so easy, and yet is so difficult to give. After speaking of a village dressed en vaudeville. like the back scene of a theatre, our author proceeds to state:

" How totally unlike to Brampton, where three years of my life were passed; during which period no act of neighbourly kindness was discoverable, nor did I ever, by any chance, hear one word spoken in praise of the absent. To credit the account given of their neighbours by each resident of Brampton, its inhabitants were an unanimously hard-drinking, unprincipled, envious set of people. Idle they certainly were, as I myself can attest; and no wonder, for they gave such close attention to the actions of others, there was no time to spare for work; so that when a job was offered to any of the various professors of different trades, it seldom was accomplished within any reasonable time; and one never dared to venture on employing the same person twice. To use the words of one of the villagers, it is 'just the most unneighbourliest, backbitingest, quarrelsomest place that ever the sun shone upon."

The Greeks and Trojans of My Village alias the two contending parties, are three maiden sisters, who have houses on the Mall to let, and a new arrival, a lady who keeps a boarding-house. The ensuing is the dialogue of the first morning call. We must observe, that the apothecary has transferred his alle-giance to the more shewy prospect held out by the boarding-house

" The door was thrown open by James, who announced the approach of 'Miss Wiggins and Miss Peggy Wiggins.' The chair on which Dr. Slopall reclined was one of those invaluable inventions of modern luxury, known by the name of a half-easy; and he only could have airs and pieces, from Mozart, Shulz, Fiorillo, himself, during the formal interchange of bows and curtseys consequent on this invasion. A stiff, a very stiff bend of the upper neck, was the result of the first dart from the elder Wiggins's eye, as it shot through the consciously guilty heart of the trembling culprit. Miss Peggy waited but for this assisting clue to guide her movements, and, immediately on receiving the credentials, she also bowed her scraggy throat-but, owing to the agitation by which she was overpowered, it chanced that her eyes, in disobedience to their owner, at that moment fell on Mr. Hunter. By this faux pas, as Miss Wiggins afterwards reproachfully remarked to her sister, she committed the double fault of giving that puppy Hunter undue encouragement, and leaving Slopall to imagine she was disturbed by his desertion of them. Poor Peggy! she seldom did right, and she knew it. The professed conviction of her sins, however, served only to bring down, with tenfold weight, the ire of her self-possessed sister; and had she not been abundantly supplied with nerves-(those useful members ever called upon to sustain the blame of all her misdemeanors) ---there is no knowing what excuse could have been made for the errors of commission and omission of Miss Peggy Wiggins. The determined Letty, having committed her widest smile to Mrs. Stonecroft's discretion, commenced her survey and comments upon the various articles of taste and fashion by which she found herself surrounded. It is not, perhaps, the precise mode under which the formality of a first visit is usually encountered; and can be excused only by the engrossing employments and taste of Miss Wiggins. In truth, she had come with a full intention, not alone to see every thing, but to point out every possible defect or deficiency; and her opening speech was in harmony with this design. 'A very pleasant situation this you have selected, Mrs. Stonecroft; at least so I have always considered it; in opposition, I must own, to the general opinion. Positively, I consider it, after the Mall, the best in the neighbourhood_you find it damp, though, I fear?' Now, Miss Wiggins did not even hope for an answer in the affirmative, since she knew it to be the only undeniably dry house within two miles of her. So, to prevent the possible denial of this charge, she proceeded, with great rapidity, to add: 'Not that I should object to it on that account; I do not hold a very dry soil to be, by any means, conducive to health. It's lonely, to be sure, but probably you are not timid; and, indeed, as the furniture is your landlord's, your anxiety on that head must be inconsiderable.' 'I trust principally to the men-servants for our safety,' replied Mrs. Stonecroft, ' and hope their vigilance may prove sufficient, without obliging me to call on the gallantry of the gentlemen present.' 'Yes, yes, I believe you are tolerably safe,' observed Mr. Hunter; we form rather too strong a guard, altogether, to come within the attacks of any but the most determined gang.' ' I never heard that murder was committed in the house, to be sure; indeed, it has been robbed but three times within my recollection; and in those cases, no doubt appeared of the robbery having originated with the servants - probably your men have been long in your family, and in that case you can depend on them.' Miss Wiggins had learned that both men were hired the day previous to leaving London, and had prepared this 'fling' accordingly. 'Oh, I marked out by her commanding officer: 'I'm sure I have not had a regular night's rest since they broke into our house last winter.' 'The thieves, or your domestics?' inquired, rather maliciously, Captain Ward. Certain private signals here intimated to the blundering Peggy, that she had adopted a mistaken course; in attempting to turn from which, she floundered still deeper, by adding, 'They behaved very well, too, considering, for they only took a cold goose that was in the larder, and our three teaspoons, and a gown of my sister Letty's, and some candles, and a broach of Sally's, and-'My dear Peggy,' interposed the disgraced general, shocked at the poverty displayed in this enumeration; 'how can you indulge in such raillery, on so slight an acquaintance with the present company? the fact is,' turning to the lady of the house, 'my sister alludes to a joke played on us by some of our nephews, in the innocence of youth and high spirits.' joke! __was it, Letty? well, I never heard that before.' 'Beautiful cabinet, there;' pursued Miss Wiggins. 'I was going to compliment you on the taste exhibited in the furnishing of this room, forgetting at the moment you had it only on hire. Really, it proves vast confidence in a tenant, to leave such valuable articles to the risk of good or bad usage. It's all very well, where you furnish for letting; you select things accordingly. I cannot say I should like to admit a family into my own house; but, to be sure, we have such a variety of ornamental knick-knacks.' 'And don't you remember how vexed we were, one year, that the Adams's had our house—no, I think it was the Thompson's —and when we returned to it, they had broken two of the China vases that Sally and I had mended so nicely with cement, before they came in?' The patience of Miss Wiggins was exhausted; she rose to retire: the force of habit, however, did not permit of her doing so without a parting cut, in which she proposed to comprise the full bitterness of her excited feelings. 'Unacquainted, as you probably are,' commenced the maiden, 'with various little inconveniences attached to this place, I can only say, I shall be most happy to render you any advice or assistance within my power. Fruit (although I see considerable promise on the trees) you will scarcely have a chance of keeping till ripe, the garden lies so near the high road. No doubt you have discovered the scarcity of water; we have an excellent pump, and can always supply that deficiency; and should you find (as I have reason to believe you will) that the rain penetrates the upper rooms, the roof being much out of repair, I shall have great pleasure in making up a spare bed or two, at a moment's notice, for the accom-modation of any of your inmates.' 'And if you should leave this house,' added Miss Peggy, sister can let you have one on the Mall, such a bargain!' 'God help me!-to be sure, never mortal was saddled with such a nincompoop as you are,' grumbled the baffled Miss Wiggins, on getting a short distance from the house; there is no possibility of making you understand even when to be silent. Did I not, before we set out, explain most clearly to you all that I intended to say in the course of the visit? yet must you keep blundering on with your malapropos observations,—enough to provoke a saint, that's what you are, Peggy Wiggins! 'I'm sure I'm very sorry; I meant it all for the best; but I'm always wrong, it seems—I Scotland for her own safety, while the house wish Sally were well enough to go visiting with of Guise pursued the same object for their you-I never know what to say; and you promised to smile when I was getting astray, you the first wrong was done by the princes of example of bidding open defiance to humanity know.' 'If you felt conscious of depending on Lorrain, in setting up their niece as a pretender and justice without impairing the security of that for your guidance, you had better have to the English crown; and that this wrong looked at me occasionally, instead of fixing your was grievously aggravated by their perseverance eyes, as you did, on Captain Ward: they all noticed how you stared at him, I can tell you that.' 'I didn't know, I declare, that I regarded him in particular; I think I looked quite as much at Mr. Hunter, and at the other elderly gentleman; indeed, I never am in company with a man, but it reminds me of the blighted hopes of my early life: you know to what I allude, Letty'—'So may all the parish, if they like to waste their time in listening to you.'

As natural as Miss Mitford's admirable sketches of rustic manners, My Village will form an equally amusing companion or contrast to these justly popular productions: for, as the author in a preliminary sonnet sagely

- Rural life is not all à la Mitford, Or else 'tis very plain that I'm not for't.

Cabinet Cyclopædia, No. XXXVII. History of England, Vol. III. By Sir James Mack-intosh. London, 1832. Longman and Co.; Taylor.

IT is the saying of some old philosopher, that he only had cause to lament death who had the work of a life yet to do. Sir James Mackintosh, dying, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, with the most interesting and the most important part of his task yet before him, is a painful witness to human incertitude. With great abilities and ample leisure, he seems to have lacked either sufficient stimulus, or sufficient industry, to bring forth their fruits in due season. Mackintosh, singular to say, preserved his reputation to the last; and it was not till after his decease that we found the promise of his youth had never been fulfilled. Had he left his history Had he left his history completed, it would have been a great and a valuable work; now it is like his own youth, just a beginning from which high expectations were reasonably entertained, but which remain unaccomplished. Even these three volumes are of great value, and should be in the hands of every investigating reader of history. They have not the animated style of Hume, who excites the vivid interest of some fictitious story; neither have they the dramatic power, nor the picturesque colouring of Scott: but they are full of thought, of acute analysis, of well-weighed conclusions, and those clear-drawn results which are the spirit of history. You felt that Sir James thoroughly understood the subject on which he was writing. How accurately, for example, is the question of selfdefence set forth!

"These reasonings on the justice and policy of armed interference for a friendly party, where the safety of a state requires it, are in substance common to all ages and nations: though they were not expressed by the statesmen of the sixteenth century in the artificial language of what was afterwards called international law. Their principal defect is, that they may often be used with equal plausibility by several contending parties; though it is generally evident that one only has justice on its side. In the particular case before us, the defect does not seem to be considerable. true question always being, which party is really influenced by self-defence, and which employs it merely as a pretext, it cannot be doubted that Elizabeth sought an ascendant in aggrandisement. To this may be added, that in it. They obstinately persisted in using the royal arms of England as a flag round which every discontented and disaffected Englishman might rally; and this, even after their own ministers had pledged them by a solemn treaty to discontinue such an incentive to revolt. It has already been observed, that the reasonings of Cecil and of Maitland were not conveyed in the specious and subtle language of modern jurists: they were, nevertheless, conformable to the most approved principles. These ancient statesmen do not seem to have been aware of the difficulty of reconciling the rights of selfdefence with the apparently conflicting duty of every community to respect the independence of every other, and to manifest their sense of justice by abstaining from interference in the internal affairs of independent countries. The solution, however, of that difficulty flows from the simple principle which is the basis of Cecil's advice. The right of defence, whether exercised to repel an attack or to prevent it, is the self-same right, and extends to conventions with contending parties in a community, as much as to those which subsist with contending states. When a contest for supreme power prevails in a country, foreign states, who have no jurisdiction in the case, are neither bound nor entitled to pronounce a judgment on the armed litigation. Their relations with each other being formed for the welfare of the subjects of each, they must treat the actual rulers of every territory as its lawful government. In all ordinary cases, they should treat the pretenders as alike legitimate wherever they are obeyed; and preserve the same neutrality in the war between parties as if it were waged between independent states. It is a very obvious inference from these premises, that foreign sovereigns may ally themselves with a possessor of authority, if defence and safety require it, on the same ground that they form alliances with the most anciently established govern-ment. Whenever it is lawful to make war, it is equally lawful to obtain strength by alliances. It would, doubtless, be more for the general welfare of mankind to adjust their differences by institutions making some approach to a discerning and honest judgment, than to leave them to the blind and destructive arbitrament of war. But as long as nations assail their neighbours by arms, they must be resisted by the same cruel and undistinguishing expedient. The laws of war (as they are called) are the same in civil as in foreign warfare. It is as much forbidden by international morality to league with an unjust state, as it is in private litigation to support an unjust suitor. But as independent nations have no common superior, their wars must be practically treated. by those who desire to remain neutral, as if they were just on both sides. In some extraordinary instances of notorious and flagrant wrong, neutral nations may be entitled, and even perhaps sometimes bound, to interpose for the prevention of injustice and inhumanity. In such extraordinary emergencies, whether a nation is influenced by a regard to its own safety, or by a disinterested reverence for jus-tice, both these principles point to the same practical result. For as the general prevalence of a disposition to act justly and humanely is the principal safeguard of nations as well as of individuals, to which the terrors of law, or even of arms, are only occasional and inadequate auxiliaries, it is not possible to set the example of bidding open defiance to humanity states, in proportion to the extent of such acts of criminal audacity."

Again, speaking of the passion for discovery

so characteristic of the period:

"The progress of trade might, however, have been more slow if it had depended alone on those exact calculations of advantage from accessible and well-understood sources, which are its natural province. But the voyages of the Spaniards and Portuguese had disclosed to the dazzled imagination of mankind new worlds, and races of men before unknown - the owners of treasures, apparently unbounded, which they had neither power to defend, nor skill to extract from the earth. The spirit of commerce mingled with the passion for discovery, which was exalted by the grandeur of vast and unknown objects. A maritime chivalry arose, which equipped crusades for the settlement and conquest of the new world; professing to save the tribes of that immense region from eternal perdition, and somewhat disguising these expeditions of rapine and destruction under the illusions of military glory and religious fanaticism. Great noblemen, who would have recoiled with disgust from the small gains of honest industry, eagerly plunged into associations which held out wealth and empire in the train of splendid victory. The lord trea-surer, the lord steward, the lord privy seal, and the lord high admiral, were at the head of the first company formed for the trade of Russia on the discovery of that country. For nearly a century it became a prevalent passion among men of all ranks, including the highest, to become members of associations framed for the purposes of discovery, colonisation, and aggrandisement, which formed a species of subordinate republics, the vassals of the crown of England. By links like these the feudal world was gradually allied with the commercial, in a manner which civilised the landholder, and elevated the merchant."

We conclude with the history of Don Carlos, (abridged from Llorente's "Histoire de l'Inquisition d'Espagne"); of which we believe the poetical impression to be more general than the true one.

" This wretched prince had from his infancy manifested every species of imbecility and depravity which can be united in the mind of one man. Incapable of instruction, yielding without bounds to every passion, stupid as the most grovelling brutes, ferocious as a beast of prey, no care of courtly masters, no lessons of learned preceptors could bestow on him that scanty polish of manner, and that smattering of the general language of intercourse, which are expected from princes. His grandfather, Charles V., who saw the heir of the Spanish dominions at sixteen, bewailed the fate of his late empire. A Venetian minister, long resident at Madrid, when he saw the prince eagerly tearing to pieces the rabbits brought in for his sport, and contemplating with delight the convulsions of their muscles and the palpitations of their hearts, foretold to his senate the miserable condition of those many millions, in every region, from sunrise to sunset, who were to be subject to his will. At eighteen he fell from a high scaffold and received wounds in the head, which during the remainder of his life added convulsions, confusion of thought, and occasional attacks of insanity, to his natural defects and habitual vices. His father, perhaps justifiably, restrained him. His mad passion for travel-ling was exasperated, and he formed wild John spoke to Hubert), that it was necessary schemes of escape. His incoherent talk often while, on other occasions, he professed an ambition to command the army against them. When the Duke of Alva took his leave to repair to that command, Carlos said, 'My father ought to have appointed me.' 'Doubtless,' said Alva, ' his majesty considered your life as too precious.' Carlos drew his dagger, and attempted to stab Alva; adding, 'I will hinder your journey to Flanders, for I will pierce your heart before you set out. Towards the end of 1567, his frenzy seemed to rage more fiercely, mingled with much of that cunning which sometimes, for a moment, covers madness with a false appearance of reason. He declared to his confessors that he was resolved to take the life of a man. In reply to their inquiries who it was, he said that he aimed at a man of the highest quality; and after much importunate examination, he at length uttered, 'My father!'

His father, attended by the chief officers of state, went at midnight in armour to arrest him. Philip, acting on his fatal notions of the boundless right of kings and fathers, did not shrink from communicating his proceedings to the great corporations of Spain, and to the principal Catholic states of Europe. His subects and his allies interceded for Carlos. Their intercessions were withstood by the iron temper, the unbending policy, and the misguided conscience of Philip, although he was occasionally haunted by the unquenchable feelings of nature. The commissioners appointed to try Carlos reported, that he was guilty of having meditated, and at his arrest attempted, parricide; and that he had conspired to usurp the sovereignty of Flanders. They represented the matter as too high for a sentence, but insinuated that mercy might be dictated by prudence; and threw out a hint, that the prince was no longer responsible for his actions. Men of more science than the Spanish commissioners, and more secure in their circumstances, might be perplexed by the intrinsic difficulty of ascertaining the precise truth, in a case where the malignant rage of Carlos often approached to insanity, and might sometimes be inflamed to such a degree as to be transformed into utter alienation of mind. The clouds which always darkened his feeble reason might sometimes quench it. The subtle and shifting transformations of wild passion into maniacal disease, the returns of the maniac to the scarcely more healthy state of stupid anger. and the character to be given to acts done by him when near the varying frontier which separates lunacy from malignity, are matters which have defied all the experience and sagacity of the world. At this point the records of the commission close with a note made by their secretary, stating shortly that the prince died of his malady, which hindered a judg-ment. A dark veil conceals the rest of these proceedings from the eyes of mankind. It is variously related. Philip is said to have ordered that advantage should be taken of the distempered appetites of Carlos, which after he had confined himself to iced water for a time, were wont to hurry him into voraciously swallowing monstrous quantities of animal food; that his excesses should be allowed, if not encouraged; and that he should thus be betrayed into becoming his own executioner. Another narrative, not quite irreconcilable with the former, describes the prince of Eboli and the cardinal Espinosa as having intimated to Oli-seem to be natural. When he felt himself to be in the agonies of death, he desired to see his father, and to receive his blessing. Philip sent his blessing, but, by the advice of the confessor, declined to disturb the dying devotions of Carlos. Vanquished by nature, however, he stole into the chamber, and, standing unseen, spreading his arms over his son, prayed for a blessing on the expiring youth. The father withdrew, bathed in tears, and Carlos not many hours after breathed his last. An historian, who wrote from original documents, adds to a narrative otherwise not dissimilar, the significant words, 'if, indeed, violence was not employed.' However terrific the sound of this may be on other occasions, in the circumstances of Carlos, it rather relieves the mind, by intimating that his agonies were cut short, and can hardly be said to insinuate an aggravation of a tale so tragic, that if proved to be real, it would still be too horrible, and too wide a deviation from the general truth of nature for the verisimilitude required in history."

It were premature to judge merely by a few pages of the merits of the purposed continuation. We observe that the writer differs from Sir James in his estimate of Mary, Queen of Scots; whence we conclude that he is young a fact which might also be inferred from the vehemence of many of his epithets—a great fault, by the by, in an historian. We confess we should infinitely have preferred that whatever MSS. Sir James Mackintosh may have left, were published in a separate form, which, however slight, would be valuable.

The vignette to the present volume is exceedingly pretty, representing Queen Elizabeth on horseback.

The Works of Lord Byron. Vol. XIII. London, 1832. Murray.

The preface to this volume, after stating that it consists of pieces written at Ravenna in 1821, and Pisa in 1822, proceeds as fol-

"When this edition was first announced, nothing more was designed than an exact reprint of Mr. Moore's notices, and Lord Byron's works in prose and verse, as they had previously been given to the public; and the printer calculated that the whole might be comprised in fourteen volumes. While, however, the notices of Lord Byron's life were for the second time passing through the press, it was suggested to the publisher, that the time was come when the public had a right to look for such notes and illustrations to Lord Byron's text, as are usually appended to the pages of a deceased author of established and permanent popularity. This suggestion was acted upon; and its adoption has, apparently, given general satisfaction. These additions will extend the work to seventeen volumes; the last of which will include a very copious and careful index to the whole collection."

We can have no doubt that this explanation will satisfy every body. Nothing was ever more cordially approved than the idea of annotating Byron has been by the British public: and we venture to say, that the three volumes made up of illustrative remarks, and odds and ends of all sorts bearing on the poet's works, will not be considered by pos-terity as the least interesting of the seventeen. Mr. Murray ought, however, to have matured his plan before he began reducing turned on the revolt of the Flemings, with the king had pronounced on the wretched pa-whom he sometimes affected a fellow-feeling; tient in such a manner that the disease might been as clear and obvious in 1830, as it is treating his opera omnia accordingly.

To say the truth, it had occurred to ourselves some months back, when we saw how matters were going on, that it would never be possible for the editors to compress all Byron, thus annotated, into fourteen of these volumes; and we had settled it pretty nearly in our own mind that the Don Juan was once more to be omitted. We are happy to find that such is not to be the case. However reprehensible may be scores, perhaps hundreds of things in the Don, it is still one of the very first of Byron's works for ability, by far the first for entertainment, and certainly not the worst by any means for general bearing and tendency. To leave it out now would have been a little trimming; and we sincerely hope, since it is to appear at length in due form, it will be complete; let us have the dedication to Southey; it is already sold in the streets in a broadside for two-pence, and omitting it in the book would be nonsense. Let us have the asterisked words, lines, and stanzas, all filled up. Mr. Murray knows very well that copies of them also exist beyond his own desk; and, in short, he had better pluck up courage, and make a clean desk of it once for all. Lord Byron's character as a satirist is now, he may be assured, perfectly well understood. He is known to have lashed the highest and the best of his contemporaries; smaller people will not break their hearts on discovering that they had also received a little flourish of his devil-may-care reckless vituperation. And as to notes, surely none of Lord B.'s works needed them so muchnearly so much-as this extraordinary poem, of which there are not, we venture to say, five stanzas on end, from Canto I. to Canto XVI. inclusive, that do not contain some confession of the author, or some allusion to the English objects of his indignation and scorn. But to the present volume.

Its illustrations are exquisite; one print of the Walls of Rome, to go with the De-formed Transformed, quite magnificent in Turner's very highest flight: nor are the annotations less rich or varied than those of the preceding tomes. The volume not containing, however, any small detached pieces, we do not find it so easy to select a specimen or two for extracting. We must just take it for granted, that our readers are as well acquainted with Heaven and Earth, Sardanapalus, &c. &c. as ourselves, and draw our pencil down what have struck us as among some of the best garnishings of the margin. By far the finest note on the Heaven and Earth appears to be Mr. Milman's, and we are sorry we have not room for it (see p. 51).

The following bit of Jeffrey is most characteristic of the learned lord; nor is that of Reginald Heber on the same subject less so of the good bishop: compare the critics!

"Sardanapalus is, beyond all doubt, a work of great beauty and power; and though the heroine has many traits in common with the Medoras and Gulnares of Lord Byron's undramatic poetry, the hero must be allowed to be a new character in his hands. He has, indeed, the scorn of war, and glory, and priestcraft, and regular morality, which distinguishes the rest of his lordship's favourites; but he has no misanthropy, and very little pride-and may be regarded, on the whole, as one of the most truly good-humoured, amiable, and respectable voluptuaries to whom we have ever been presented. of a sinful Christian that has but one wife, and in 1832, that the time was come for consider- has very wisely followed nature and fancy not approve of, than a bearded Oriental, like ing Lord Byron as an established classic, and rather than history. His Sardanapalus is not an effeminate, worn-out debauchee, with shattered nerves and exhausted senses, the slave of indolence and vicious habits; but a sanguine votary of pleasure, a princely epicure, indulging, revelling in boundless luxury while he can, but with a soul so inured to voluptuousness, so saturated with delights, that pain and danger, when they come uncalled for, give him neither concern nor dread; and he goes forth from the banquet to the battle, as to a dance or measure, attired by the Graces, and with youth, joy, and love for his guides. He dallies with Bellona as her bridegroom - for his sport and pastime; and the spear or fan, the shield or shining mirror, become his hands equally well. He enjoys life in short, and triumphs in death; and whether in prosperous or adverse circumstances, his soul smiles out superior to evil."

"The Sardanapalus of Lord Byron is pretty nearly such a person as the Sardanapalus of history may be supposed to have been. Young, thoughtless, spoiled by flattery and unbounded self-indulgence, but with a temper naturally amiable, and abilities of a superior order, he affects to undervalue the sanguinary renown of his ancestors as an excuse for inattention to the most necessary duties of his rank; and flatters himself, while he is indulging his own sloth, that he is making his people happy. Yet, even in his fondness for pleasure, there lurks a love of contradiction. Of the whole picture, selfishness is the prevailing feature—selfishness admirably drawn indeed; apologised for by every palliating circumstance of education and habit, and clothed in the brightest colours of which it is susceptible from youth, talents, and placability. But it is selfishness still; and we should have been tempted to quarrel with the art which made vice and frivolity thus amiable, if Lord Byron had not at the same time pointed out with much skill the bitterness and weariness of spirit which inevitably wait on such a character; and if he had not given a fine contrast to the picture in the accompanying portraits of Salemenes and of Myrrha."

We were much amused with another specimen of contrasted criticism on another page of the same tragedy. We have had Heber versus Jeffrey—now for Heber versus Hogg—and on a very delicate topic. Hear the Bishop of Calcutta:

"We are not sure whether there is not a considerable violation of costume in the sense of degradation with which Myrrha seems to regard her situation in the harem, no less than in the resentment of Salemenes, and the remorse of Sardanapalus on the score of his infidelity to Zarina. Little as we know of the domestic habits of Assyria, we have reason to conclude, from the habits of contemporary nations, and from the manners of the East in every age, that polygamy was neither accounted a crime in itself, nor as a measure of which the principal wife was justified in complaining. And even in Greece, in those times when Myrrha's character must have been formed,to be a captive, and subject to the captor's pleasure, was accounted a misfortune indeed, but could hardly be regarded as an infamy. But where is the critic who would object to an inaccuracy which has given occasion to such sentiments and such poetry?"

This is very well; but we back the Shepherd of Ettrick : ecce signum !-

"In many parts of this play, it strikes me that Lord Byron has more in his eye the case In this conception of his character, the author a sly business or so which she and her kin do

Sardanapalus, with three hundred wives and seven hundred concubines.

Two to one, say we, on the pastor of Peebles. One more specimen, and we must have done. In the note on the fine lines in the Deformed Transformed-

"He was the fairest and the bravest of Athenians. Look upon him well! how beautiful!
Such was the curled son of Clinias," &c.

we find this extract from one of Lord Byron's MS. diaries:

"Alcibiades is said to have been 'successful in all his battles'-but what battles? Name them! If you mention Cæsar, or Hannibal, or Napoleon, you at once rush upon Pharsalia, Munda, Alesia, Cannæ, Thrasymene, Trebia, Lodi, Marengo, Jena, Austerlitz, Friedland, Wagram, Moskwa: but it is less easy to pitch upon the victories of Alcibiades; though they may be named too, though not so readily as the Leuctra and Mantinea of Epaminondas, the Marathon of Miltiades, the Salamis of Themistocles, and the Thermopylæ of Leonidas. Yet, upon the whole, it may be doubted whether there be a name of antiquity which comes down with such a general charm as that of Alcibiades. Why? I cannot answer. Who can?

To this, again, is appended the following paragraph by Mr. Lockhart:

"One cannot help being struck with Lord Byron's choice of a favourite among the heroic names of antiquity. The man who was educated by Pericles, and who commanded the admiration as well as the affection of Socrates; whose gallantry and boldness were always as undisputed as the pre-eminent graces of his person and manners; who died at forty-five, after having been successively the delight and hero of Athens, of Sparta, of Persia; - this most versatile of great men has certainly left to the world a very splendid reputation. But his fame is stained with the recollections of a most profligate and debauched course of private life, and of the most complete and flagrant contempt of public principle; and it is to be hoped that there are not many men who could gravely give to the name of Alcibiades a preference, on the whole, over such an one as that of an Epaminondas or a Leonidas, or even of a Miltiades or a Hannibal. But the career of Alcibiades was romantic: every great event in which he had a share has the air of a personal adventure; and, whatever might be said of his want of principle, moral and political, nobody ever doubted the greatness of his powers and the brilliancy of his accomplishments. By the gift of nature, the handsomest creature of his time, and the possessor of a very extraordinary genius, he was, by accidents or by fits, a soldier, a hero, an orator, and even, it should seem, a philosopher; but he played these parts only because he wished it to be thought that there was no part which he could not play. He thought of nothing but himself. His vanity entirely commanded the direction of his genius, and could even make him abandon occasionally his voluptuousness for the very opposite extreme; which last circumstance, by the way, was probably one of those that had hit Lord Byrou's fancy as, indeed, it may be suspected to have influenced his behaviour."

On the whole, Vol. XIII. is a very good one. It contains, among other things that we should have been happy to extract, not a few notes from Croly and Campbell, neither of whom had figured in the preceding tomes.

The Poetical Works of Leigh Hunt. 8vo. pp. 381. London, 1832. E. Moxon. MR. HUNT has in these pages done what we heartily wish more vould do-collected, revised, and made choice of such poems as he deems worthy to be franked for the future. We own we are not out and out admirers of the school to which they have been considered as belonging; but greatly indeed have these pages been improved since they first encountered the ordeal of public praise and public censure. Our chief aim now will be to quote favourite passages, and leave our readers to appreciate their beauty: and if in our hurried sheet we indulge in this retrospective review, we trust our extracts will be their own best excuse; for rarely does pleasure need apology. Mr.

"I have witnessed so much self-delusion in my time, and partaken of so much, and the older I grow, my veneration so increases for poetry not to be questioned, that all I can be sure of, is my admiration of genius in others. I cannot say how far I overvalue it, or even undervalue it, in myself. I am in the condition of a lover who is sure that he loves, and is therefore happy in the presence of the beloved object; but is uncertain how far he is worthy to be beloved."

Hunt, in a very candid preface, says

In the same paper he gives us the following quaint image :- " I confess I like the very bracket that marks out the triplet to the sweet is the ensuing passage !reader's eye, and prepares him for the music of It has a look like the bridge of a lute.

He goes on to speak with natural affection of the pleasure of writing: - " But as Gray wished that he could lie all his life upon sofas. reading 'eternal new novels of Marivaux and Crebillon,' so, notwithstanding the helps afforded us by the grander notions of the age, or rather in consequence of the very helps they afford, I can conceive no mode of existence more exquisite (apart from the affections) than after contributing a portion of one's morning to the furtherance of the common good — the better if in the same way -- to devote the rest of one's time to reading romantic adventures, and versifying the best of them. golden days would not such be for a builder of palaces ' with words !' What country-houses would he not possess in all quarters of the world,—and of time! What flights not take from Greece to Araby, from Normandy to Cathay, from the courts of Charlemagne and of Arthur, to the corners of the sea, and the house of Morpheus! With what transport not wake up, and find himself in the company of his beloved old books, content to be master of the world when he had his wings on, and to look for no better footing for the soles of his feet, than the hearth of an uninsulted poverty. O felix ter et amplius! No man ever deserved even to wish to be a poet who could not think in this manner, or not think it as much at forty as at twenty."

This "gossipping preface," (to use the author's own words,) we like so much, that we are sure any reader who omits it will find his fault his punishment. From the prose to ascend to the poetry,-the great characteristics of Mr. Hunt's style are, fine and humane feelings, a sincere love of the beautiful, a rich fancy in de-scription, and a happiness of epithet, which not only at once brings the object before you, but places it also in its best light. Ex. gr. Morning.

"The sun is up, and 'tis a morn of May Ane sun is up, and the amorn of May Round old Ravenna's clear-shewn towers and bay, A morn, the loveliest which the year has seen, Last of the spring, yet fresh with all its green; For a warm eve, and gentle rains at night, Have left a sparkling welcome for the light."

"A lightsome fountain starts from out the green, Clear and compact, till, at its height o'errun, It shakes its loosening silver in the sun."

It was a lovely evening, fit to close A lovely day, and brilliant in repose. Warm, but not dim, a glow was in the air; The softened breeze came smoothing here and there; And every tree, in passing, one by one, Gleamed out with twinkles of the golden sun: Gleamed out with twinkies of the goiden sun: For leafy was the road, with tail array, On either side, of mulberry and bay, And distant snatches of blue hills between; And there the alder was with its bright green, And the broad chestnut, and the poplar's shoot, That like a feather waves from head to foot, With a great sea, we sentite in the second of the state of the second of With, ever and anon, majestic pines; And still, from tree to tree, the early vines Hung garlanding the way in amber lines."

The father's onlooking kindness that a young bride may find some likeness of her former home :-

"The very day too when her first surprise
Was full, kind tears had come into her eyes
On finding, by his care, her private room
Furnished, like magic, from her own at home;
The very books and all transported there,
The leafy tapestry and the crimson chair,
The litte, the glass that told the shedding hours,
The little urn of silver for the flowers,
The frame for broidering, with a piece half done,
And the white falcon, basking in the sun,
Who, when he saw her, sidled on his stand,
And twined his neck against her trembling hand."

Protesting against the epithets flamy, and handsome, as vulgarised from low (we use the word in distinction to common use), how very

A winding stream about it, clear and glad,
That danced from shade to shade, and on its way
Seemed smiling with delight to feel the day.
There was the pouting rose, both red and white,
The flamy heart's-ease, flushed with purple light,
Blush-hiding strawberry, sumny-coloured box,
Hyacinth, handsome with his clustering locks,
The lady lily, looking gently down. The lady lily, looking gently down, Pure lavender, to lay in bridal gown, The daisy, lovely on both sides,—in short, All the sweet cups to which the bees resort."

Speaking of a brook :--

"Where at her drink you started the slim deer, Retreating lightly with a lovely fear."

A forest nook :-

"Where, when the sunshine struck a yellow shade, The rugged trunks, to inward peeping sight, Thronged in dark pillars up the gold green light."

Grief:—

"Sorrow, they say, to one with true touched ear, Is but the discord of a warbling sphere, A lurking contrast, which though harsh it be, Distils the next note more deliclously. E'en tales like this, founded on real woe, From bitter seed to balmy fruitage grow: The wo was earthly, fugilive, is past; The song that sweetens it may always last. And even they, whose shattered hearts and frames Make them unhappiest of poetic names, What are they, if they know their calling high, But crushed perfumes exhaling to the sky? Or weeping clouds, that but a while are seen, Yet keep the earth they haste to, bright and green?"

The classics:—

The classics :-

The classics:—

We hurt the stories of the antique world
By thinking of our school-books, and the wrongs
Done them by pedants and fantastic songs,
Or sculptures, which from Roman 'studios' thrown,
Turn back Deucalion's flesh and blood to stone.
Truth is for ever truth, and love is love;
The bird of Venus is the living dove.
Sweet Hero's eyes, three thousand years ago,
Were made precisely like the best we know,
Looked the same looks, and spoke no other Greek
Than eyes of honey-moons begun last week."

The bee :-

"And fragrant-living bee, So happy, that he will not move, not he, Without a song."

We conclude with the following fine sonnet, and a domestic piece, of exquisite pathos and simplicity.

"A Thought of the Nile.

It flows through old hushed Egypt and its sands,
Like some grave mighty thought threading a dream,
And times and things, as in that vision, seem Keeping along it their eternal stands, Caves, pillars, pyramids, the shepherd bands

That roamed through the young earth, the glory extreme extreme

Of high Sesostris, and that southern beam,
The laughing queen that caught the world's great hands.
Then comes a mightier silence, stern and strong,
As of a world left empty of its throng,
And the void weighs on us; and then we wake,
And hear the fruitful stream lapsing along
'Twixt villages, and think how we shall take
Our own calm journey on for human sake."

" To T. L. H., Six Years old, during a Sickness. Sleep breathes at last from out thee, My little, patient boy;
And balmy rest about thee
Smooths off the day's annoy.
I sit me down, and think
Of all thy winning ways;
Yet almost wish, with sudden shrink,
That I had less to praise.

Thy sidelong pillowed meckness,
Thy thanks to all that aid,
Thy heart, in pain and weakness,
Of fancied faults afraid;
The little trembling hand
That wipes thy quiet tears,
These, these are things that may demand
Dread memories for years.

Sorrows I've had, severe ones, I will not think of now; And calmly, midst my dear ones, Have wasted with dry brow; But when thy fingers press And pat my stooping head, I cannot bear the gentleness,— The tears are in their bed.

Ah, first-born of their bed.
Ah, first-born of thy mother,
When life and hope were new,
Kind playmate of thy brother,
Thy sister, father too;
My light, where'er I go—
My bird, when prison-bound—
My hand-in-hand companion,—no,
My prayers shall hold thee round.

To say 'He has departed'—
'His voice,' 'his face,' is gone;
To feel impatient-hearted, Yet feel we must bear on; Ah, I could not endure
To whisper of such wo,
Unless I felt this sleep insure
That it will not be so.

That it will not be so.
Yes, still he's fixed and sleeping!
This silence, too, the while—
Its very hush and creeping
Seem whispering us a smile:
Something divine and dim
Seems going by one's ear,
Like parting wings of cherubim,
Who say, 'We've finished here.'"

To many of our readers our brief extracts will be familiar; but a new race have sprung up since these poems first appeared; and to such we say, they are but specimens of the present work. We cordially wish Mr. Hunt success; devoted to literature, one who has done much and in many ways; calmed from political heats by years and reflection, without abating principle or feeling; he merits a liberal, grateful, and kindly patronage.

CLEARING OFF ARREARS.

(Continued.)

(1.) Brief View of Sacred History, from the Creation of the World to the Destruction of Jerusalem, by Esther Copley. A fair aid to young readers for comprehending and remembering the historical contents of the Bible.

(2.) Evenings by Eden Side, by George Pearson. Essays of an amiable character, and poems equally dedicated to the cause of virtue and philanthropy, fill this small provincial publication.

the cause of virtue and philanthropy, fill this small provincial publication.

(3.) The Duty of Humanity to Inferior Creatures, &c., by the Rev. A. Broome, M.A. Mr. Broome is the founder of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; the very establishment is a proof of, and honour to, the advance of civilisation. Any thing from so earnest a friend of so good a cause must be acceptable.

(4.) The instructions of Chenaniah, &c., by the Rev. J. A. Latrobe, M.A. A little volume of much utility, if attended to, for improving the mode of singing in churches.

(5.) Etymological Guide to the English Language. The (5.) Etymological Guide to the English Language. The compiler of the Edinburgh Sessional School-Books has done himself great credit by this etymological essay. It is a brief but excellent alphabetical guide to all the leading Darton and Son.

(1.) Pp. 288. Darton and Son. (2.) Pp. 137. Kendal, Braithwaite. (3.) Pp. 130. For the Author, by Nisbet. (4.) Pp. 87. Seeley and Sons. (5.) Pp. 145. Edinburgh, Wardlaw; Glasgow, Collins; London, Duncan, Whittaker; Dublin, Curry and Co.

roots, affixes, prefixes, &c. of our abundant language, and must afford information and delight to every student.

(6.) Authentic Information relative to New South Wales and New Zealand, by J. Busby, Esq. Much sterling intelligence within small compass; and, from the opportunities of the author, of much interest to settlers.

(7.) The Life of Andrew Marvel, with Selections from his Works, by J. Dove. Originally intended to form part of a biographical series of "the Worthies of Vorkshite and Lancashire," that design being frustrated, Mr. Dove has given us this nice volume per se. Of course, the life of a patriot who was "the scourge of mitred dulness" needs no recommendation in these times. The selections are interesting.

(8.) A Bird's-Eye View of Foreign Parts, by Harry Hawk's-eye. A good deal of observation done into rhyme; and a good deal of talent, we fear, thrown away—for 1831 is on the title-page, and we have not heard much of the book. It had escaped us, or we should have noticed it more timeously and more largely.

(9.) The Mechanic's Calculator, or Workman's Memorial-Book, &c. &c., with lithographic plates by W. Grier. At a period when the toe of the mechanic treads on the heel (query, the instep?) of the scholar and man of estate, it is well for the class to have a work so entirely useful as this is. As might be expected, it treats, and treats ably, of arithmetic, geometry, mensuration, machinery, &c. &c. He will be a clever man who understands it thoroughly. New Works.—We have before us a mass of novelties, to which it is impossible for us to do justice this week, or indeed in several weeks. No. XXIII. of Standard Novels contains all Mrs. Austen's Sense and Sensibility in a single volume; as great a treat as it is a cheap one. Memorias of the Life of Admiral Sir William Penn furnishes many important public documents of a memorable epoch. The Memolirs of Sir W. Hoste has some very interesting correspondence, and draws a vivid portrait of that able and active partisan officer. The letter-press to Turne Almanach auf das Jahr 1833. Carlsruhe.

WE last year noticed these Lilliputian publications, as yet peculiar to Germany - almanacs for the year, which could literally be put into a nut-shell. The present curiosity, which has just reached us from Carlsruhe, is, truly, as large as our thumb-nail, and a little thicker. Its leaves are gilt, it has a handsome case into which to slip it, and is quite full of embellishments and information. From C. F. Müller's lithography we find portraits of Herz, Berry (the duchess), of Maria da Gloria, and of the Queen of the Belgians. Then there is an "A. B. C. für Damen," replete with dainty devices; the figures, designs, &c. not longer than the nib of our pen, are wonderfully clever and spirited. The whole concludes with a Guter Rath: but this work must be seen to be appreciated; and it is desirable, in most cases, to buy spectacles to see it withal! If a ship of tonnage enough to import a small cargo of them could be got, the speculation might turn out well.

Tales of the Manse. First Series. Saint Ken tigern. 12mo. pp. circ. 330. Glasgow and Edinburgh, 1832, Blackie and Son; Dublin, Curry; London, Simpkin and Marshall.

A VERY amusing proem, containing an interesting episode, called "the Proud Piper," introduces the romance of Stratclyde, and of the sixth century, to the reader. We have been much pleased with all the three parts, and must express our opinion, that the writer possesses quite sufficient talent to minister very agreeably to the public gratification, if encouraged to continue the series, of which this is the first master being abroad, that he could read " good stabling," and "entertainment for men and horses," and would never pass without ascertaining the fact, is a droll animal, and not a bad example of the effects of imperfect instruction on human beings -sending them to the ale-house. His Piper is pathetic; and his main piece, besides drawing a striking picture of Druidism and early Christianity in the west of Scotland, very happily connects the incidents with traditions still pertaining to this district, Glasgow and its Cathedral, the arms of the city, and the Cora Linn of the Clyde.

The Parent's Cabinet of Amusement and Instruction. Nos. I. II. and III. Smith, Elder, and Co.

Our habitual readers are aware how cautious we are in commending books intended for the use of children. In no branch of publication are greater mistakes made; and in none are the consequences so detrimental, instead of beneficial, unless a sound judgment directs the good intent. We are glad to say that the present is an excellent design for the juvenile family circle, and executed with a right feeling. The characteristic tales are interesting, and the morals unexceptionable; and in other pieces, where instruction is more aimed at, the method is attractive. We have only to advise the excellent editor to be very careful not to employ even a single word which would not bear cri tical scrutiny in a work for mature readers. In the verse are some bad rhymes-"calm." "harm;" "relish," "perish;" and "stop" a ship—the "quick swim" of a dog—the "children" of a hedgehog, &c. A "knew knife," p. 108, is an error of the press; but in a performance so nearly perfect of its kind, and where precept and example are so essential, we must not allow of any errors.

Synopsis Jungermanniarum in Germania vicinisque terris hucusque cognitis, Figuris CXVI. microscopico - analyticis illustrata. Auctore Tobia Philippo Ekart, Philos. Doctore, &c.—Synopsis of Jungermannia hitherto discovered in Germany and the adjacent countries, &c. 4to. pp. 72. Coburg, 1832, Rumann; London, Black; Treuttel.

A very complete compendium of an interest. ing tribe of cryptogamous plants.

Bellegarde, the adopted Indian Boy: a Canadian Tale. 3 vols. London, 1832. Saunders and Otley.

Our author has quite mistaken his vocation. his story wants interest, and his characters life; while his national pictures are, to say the least, very debatable ground. We agree with him in reprobating the spirit in which Mrs. Trollope's work on America is written; but we really do not see how the present incoherent novel is to mend the matter.

The Principles of Phrenology, as applied to the Elucidation and Cure of Insanity. By Forbes Winslow, Member of the Westminster Medical Society, &c. London, 1832. Highley. A VERY ingenious, well-written, and interesting little essay; the main object of which is to shew to what practical purpose the abstract principles of phrenological science may be applied. Mr. Winslow contends, that to suppose the mind—the immaterial principle—to be the immediate object of disease in insanity, is a dangerous and unphilosophical notion; and the evening sky.

specimen. His old horse Joseph, who seemed that to the brain, as the organ through which to have got so much education from the school- the mental principle manifests its powers, the remedial agents ought to be applied. Another error has, in his opinion, been in considering the brain as one organ, instead of an aggregate of organs, each appropriated to its separate function. He argues the expediency of watching the earliest symptoms of derangement, for the purpose of endeavouring to prevent their increase, by attention to the particular organ affected; and adverts to the great success with which Dr. Epps has treated cases of insanity, by the application of leeches and counter-irritants over the seat of the cerebral organ diseased. We do not presume to give any opinion upon the subject; but it is certainly one of great importance to the public, as well as to the medical practitioner.

ARTS AND SCIENCES. GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

DEC. 19. Mr. Murchison, president, in the chair. A paper, by William Lonsdale, Esq., on the oolites of Gloucestershire, was read.

CELESTIAL PHENOMENA FOR JANUARY.

1d 6h 53m—the Sun in perigee, appearing under its greatest angle of 32' 35" 56, and moving with its greatest velocity of 1° 1' 11" in twentyfour hours. 19d 17h 29m—enters Aquarius. 20d 9h 23m—eclipsed: invisible at Greenwich. As this eclipse will take place when the Moon is near her apogee, and the Sun near its perigee, the diameter of the latter will exceed that of the former; consequently, where the eclipse is central it will also be annular, and a bright ring of light will be visible, about 1'35" in breadth. This beautiful appearance will be witnessed in many parts of the southern hemisphere.

Lunar Phases and Conjunctions.

	υ.	н.	M.
O Full Moon in Gemini	5	19	45
C Last Quarter in Virgo	12	11	27
■ New Moon in Capricornus · · · ·	20	9	53
→ First Quarter in Cetus······	28	12	24
d-the Moon in perigee. 219	ı	in	ano	,

The Moon will be in conjunction with

	D.	н.	M.
Mars in Aries	2	2	5
Saturn in Virgo	10	18	10
Mercury in Sagittarius	18	5	21
Venus in Aquarius	24	7	28
Jupiter in Pisces	25	3
Mars in Taurus	29	99	30
			•

5d_the Moon eclipsed: partly visible at Greenwich. The following are the circumstances:

.	н.	M.
Beginning of the eclipse	18	423
Ecliptic opposition	19	45
Middle	19	531
Moon's upper limb sets	19	59
End of the eclipse	21	34

Digits eclipsed 5° 43'4 from the southern side of the Earth's shadow, or on the Moon's northern limb. The eclipse will be partial to Europe, Western Africa, and New Holland, and wholly visible to North America, the West Indies, and most of the islands of the Pacific

4d_Mercury stationary. 15d_greatest elongation (24° 1') as a morning star. 23d __ in conjunction with 2 , Sagittarius : difference of latitude 3'. 24^d—descending node.

1^d 4^h— Venus, the evening star, in conjunction with γ Capricorni. 12^d—with σ Aquarii:

difference of latitude 15'. 22^d 9^h—with ϕ Aquarii. Towards the end of the month Venus will appear under an angle of 17", and about one-third of her disc unilluminated.

Mars, near the Pleiades, with Jupiter and Venus, form the distinguished ornaments of ^{(6.) 8}vo. pp. 90. London, Cross; Simpkin and Marahall.

(7.) Pp. 116. London, Simpkin and Marshall; Leeds,
Heaton; Hull, Purdon.
(8.) Pp. 147. Wilson.
(8.) Pp. 299. Glasgow, Lottimer, Lumsden; Edinburgh, Stirling and Kenney; London, Baldwin and Cradock.

12^d — Vesta, right ascension 16^h 24^m, south some familiar passage in the works of distindeclination 16° 55′. Juno, R.A. 15^h 4^m, S.D. guished writers; and will present, in real 9° 20′. Pallas, R.A. 0^h 2^m, S.D. 13° 36′. forms, an illustration of the sentiment which ceres, R.A. 2^h 12^m, N.D. 7° 24′.

Eclipses of the Satellites of Jupiter.

| D. H. M. 8. | First Satellite, emeraion | 3 | 5 | 20 | 36 | 10 | 7 | 16 | 30 | 26 | 5 | 37 | 2 | 2 | Second Satellite | 20 | 6 | 33 | 3 | 3 | Third Satellite, immersion | 6 | 7 | 27 | 24 |

1d — Major axis of Saturn's ring 41".76: minor axis 2".26.

Uranus is too near the Sun to be visible.

Deptford.

J. T. BARKER.

PINE ARTS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Views in the East. Part XIX. Fisher, Son, and Jackson.

In a recent notice of this, we are sorry to say penultimate, Part of Captain Elliot's interesting work, we mentioned, that in the copy in our possession the view of "the Tomb of Ibrahim Padshah, at Bejapore," was wanting. The politeness of the publishers has since supplied the deficiency, and has at the same time rendered us more fully sensible of the loss which we should otherwise have suffered. It is one of the most beautiful representations of magnificent and picturesque oriental architecture that we have yet met with.

Gallery of Portraits. No. VII. C. Knight. THE founder of the French school of dramatic poetry, the celebrated diviner of the real path and of the return of comets, and the most illustrious model of a truly great statesman,—in other words, Corneille, Halley, and Sully, are the subjects of the seventh No. of the Gallery of Portraits. The portrait of the first is from a picture by Lebrun, in the possession of the Institute of France; of the second, from a picture ascribed to Dahl, in the possession of the Royal Society; of the third, from a picture by an unknown artist, in the possession of the King of the French. We have seldom seen so fine an expression of combined intellect and benevolence as in the countenance of " the companion, minister, and historian of Henry IV.;" of whom it is justly said,—" it is his especial glory that he laboured to promote the welfare of the industrious classes, when other statesmen regarded them but as the fount from which royal extravagance was to be supplied."

Finden's Gallery of the Graces. A series of Portrait Sketches, engraved by the most eminent Artists from original Pictures, under the superintendence of W. and E. Finden; with Poetical Illustrations by T. K. Hervey, Esq. Part I. Tilt.

SCARCELY had our heart recovered from the attack made upon it by Mr. Heath's Beauties, when all its soft emotions have been re-excited by Mr. Hervey's Graces. The dear, delightful creatures! We pass from one to the other—from the devout to the playful, and from the playful to the meditative—and know not where to fix our affections. The plan of Mr. Hervey's attractive publication seems to us to be excellent. "It is," he observes, "the child of an age of that best of refinements, in which the selection of the merely ornamental is made with a reference to the intellectual; and the sense of the beautiful is perceived through the medium, and governed by the sanctions, of the mind.

To give effect to this plan, each of the sketches (which will be invariably taken from the property of the state of the sketches of the will be made with reference to some familiar passage in the works of distinguished writers; and will present, in real forms, an illustration of the sentiment which such passage conveys." The writers selected for illustration in the present Part (and if Mr. Hervey were even to confine all his future selections to those writers, his gallery might be longer than that of the Louvre) are Wordsworth, Moore, and Shakespeare. Two of the charmers are from drawings by W. Boxall; the third from a drawing by J. W. Wright. They have been sweetly engraved by W. Finden, H. Robinson, and R. A. Artlett.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

SIEGES.

[At a period when the siege of Antwerp has attracted such universal attention, we trust it may be acceptable to our readers to draw from oblivion a very famous siege of old, bearing such strong resemblance to the present, as, except happily in the finale, to be almost a parallel case. For Spanish and Venetian we need only read English and French; for Turks, the Dutch; for Benito Pesaro, Sir John Malcolm; for Gonzalo, Gerard; for Gisdar, Chassé; and for St. George, Antwerp; and the picture is nearly perfect.

An Account of the Siege of Fort St. George, in the Island of Cephalonia, by the Spaniards and Venetians, in the year 1500.

IT was in the month of June of this year that a Spanish army, composed of five thousand foot and six hundred horse, having for its general Gonzalo de Cordova, the great captain of Spain, embarked at Malaga, on board a fleet of seventy vessels which had been prepared for its reception, and after effecting a junction with the Venetian squadron commanded by Benito Pesaro, the combined forces sailed for the Archipelago, in order to act against the Turks, who had recently seized upon the islands of the republic in those seas. Upon the appearance of this armament, the commanders of the Turkish vessels, stricken with terror, fled to Constantinople; and the allies, having mustered at Zante, sailed for Cephalonia, the latest conquest of the Mussulmans. Here the army was landed, and immediately proceeded to lay siege to fort St. George, a stronghold on the island, wherein the enemy had taken refuge. When the preparations for the siege were in a state of forwardness, Gonzalo de Cordova, previous to making the attack, sent a message to the besieged, to the effect that an army of Spanish veterans, vassals of a powerful monarch, and conquerors of the Moors in Spain, had come to act as auxiliaries to the Venetians, and that, if the fortress as well as the whole island were delivered up without further resistance, the garrison would be allowed to depart unmolested; but otherwise, not a man of them would be spared. "I return you thanks, Christians," replied the Albanese, Gisdar, commander of the castle-" I return you thanks for being the cause of so much glory, as well as for assigning to us, whether alive or nobly slain, such a crown of constancy towards Bajazet our emperor. Your menaces do not intimidate us, for destiny has stamped upon the brow of each the term of his career. Go, tell your general that every one of my soldiers possesses seven bows and seven thousand arrows, with which we will at least avenge our fall, even though we fail to resist your power and your better fortune." Having said these words, the gallant Moslem presented to the ambassadors a bow of great strength, with a golden quiver, to be given in his name to the Spanish commander; and having thus put an end to the conference, he dismissed them from his presence.

To give effect to this plan, each of the sketches (which will be invariably taken from living originals) will be made with reference to way inferior to the magnanimity of his reply.

The Turks under his command did not, it is true, amount to more than seven hundred men, but they were all of them stern and hardy veterans; while the fort, which was situate upon the summit of a rock, rude and difficult of ascent, was amply supplied with every necessary for its defence. Despite the breaches that were fast making in the walls by the heavy artillery of the Venetians, and the havoc it occasioned, the undismayed Gisdar and his devoted followers continued indefatigable in their resistance, while the ground was literally strewed with their arrows. These were, moreover, steeped in poison, so that, in the beginning, the wounds of the Christians, from their ignorance of the artifice, for the most part proved mortal; while again, the besieged were in possession of certain machines, furnished with grappling irons, described in the memorials of the times by the name of lobos, with which they fastened upon the mail-clad soldiers, either raising them high in air, to hurl them again with violence towards the earth, or else drawing them up the walls of the fortress, to slaughter or make them prisoners.

In this manner was the struggle maintained by either party, with an equal degree of cou-rage and perseverance. The frequent sorties that were made by the Turks, tended to keep their adversaries continually on the alert; and upon one occasion, but for Gonzalo's vigilance, who casually suspecting what was in contemplation, had taken the precaution of ordering his people to stand to their arms, the consequences to the beleaguerers would have been fearful in the extreme. As a counterpoise to the showers of arrows that were hurled against him by the enemy, the Spanish commander caused a bastion to be erected, whose shot possessed the double advantage of carrying to a greater distance than the bows, and of driving the archers from their posts. In addition to this, he gave directions for practising, in various parts of the wall, the species of mining which had recently been invented by Pedro Navarro, and prepared his scaling-ladders for mounting to the assault. The mines were accordingly sprung, and several breaches effected; but the Turks were admirably prepared, stopping them as fast as they were made, so that the place continued almost as impregnable as before: while, on the other hand, the Spaniards who attempted to scale the walls, which they did with their accustomed intrepidity, experienced so desperate a resistance, and were assailed by such a shower of stones and arrows, accompanied by streams of boiling oil and pitch, liquid fire, and, in fact, every species of offensive missile, that they were eventually compelled to retire in disorder. Nor did the assault which was made by their allies, the Venetians, shortly afterwards, meet with a more favourable result. Great, indeed, was the indignation of the Spanish veterans, who had subdued the Moors in Spain, and driven the presumptuous Gaul from the soil of Naples, upon finding themselves thus baffled before the walls of a simple fortress; and these soldiers, who at the beginning had despised the Turks, as a race of barbarians devoid alike of bravery and skill, were compelled, in the end, to their cost, to fear them and respect their valour. A period of fifty days had thus elapsed since the commencement of this murderous siege, when Gonzalo, considering it unworthy of his renown to remain any longer before the place, after holding. conference with Pesaro, determined to make a final and general assault, in which every means at his disposal should be put in requisition.

* In cant, thieves; literally, wolves.

highest pitch of enthusiasm, the signal for the attack was given, and the besiegers mounted to the assault. But neither the roaring of the cannon, the exploding of the mines, nor the ferocious cries of the assailants, could move the indomitable Moslems. Still they fought with undiminished fury - still hurled defiance at their enemies-until at length, overpowered by numbers and exhausted by fatigue, they were compelled to submit to their destiny, and the victors, gaining the rampart, entered the place sword in hand. Gislar, faithful to his word, perished, fighting with the most heroic bravery, at the head of a little band of thirty devoted warriors, who shared his fate; while of the seven hundred men originally composing the garrison, only eighty maimed and wounded wretches were found alive, who from these causes alone had been unable to take an active part in the last heroic defence of their fallen comrades.

DRAMA.

THE PANTOMIMES.

THE pantomimes being addressed to the eye are not to be criticised without much more of description than we deem it necessary to afford them; and we shall, therefore, take only a very summary view of the new sources of popular amusement which have opened for the season at our various theatres.

Drury Lane has produced Harlequin Traveller, a piece of great merit, in which the four quarters of the world are personified, and the adventures of the motley hero are very cleverly devised. The scenery is beautiful, the changes numerous, and the performances throughout highly entertaining. Besides gratifying the young with a hearty laugh, their memory will retain the costumes and striking objects here represented; so that we may truly say a visit to Drury this year combines the utile with the dulce in no common degree. Mr. Peake, we hear, has the credit of this pantomime.

Covent Garden has also an amusing and clever harlequinade, called Puss in Boots, with magnificent scenery, capital tricks, and lots of fun. Puss Palace, the governor's château, and the moving panorama of a Trip to Antwerp, are exquisite specimens of scenic art. Little Poole as the Miller's Son, and Master Mitchinson as Tibbytight, were much and deservedly applauded. Ellar, Miss Forster, Paulo, Barnes, and Matthews, were active and humorous in their several parts; and the pantomime was deservedly announced for repetition amidst great applause.

The Adelphi maintains its eminence in the pantomimic school by Harlequin King of Clubs. Constant motion on the stage, and unceasing laughter among the spectators, leave nothing to be wished. The extraordinary feats of Gibson, Saunders, King, &c. teach us to doubt whether man is a biped, a quadruped, a ma-chine, or a nondescript. The scenery is as fine as the drollery is great; and we never saw holyday folks enjoy themselves more heartily.

The Olympic piece is not a pantomime, but a burletta, called the Paphian Bower, in which Vestris personates the Queen of Beauty. It is of the genus of the Olympic Revels and Devils, full of smartness, and with sweet music and brilliant scenery. Its reception was very flattering.

The Surrey Theatre has taken its plot from northern mythology, and is replete with bustle hers, have been politely forwarded to us from the mand posture-making. The Coburg has the Golden Ram, a take of fairy, and dashingly got our belief that the indiscriminate mass of cheap desired to fill a proper corner.

The necessary arrangements having accord-|up. Surprising exploits in rope-dancing are publications which now inundate the country ingly been made, and the troops excited to the exhibited. Sadler's Wells produced Humpty are more likely to confuse their readers than Dumpty with good effect; and the New City to leave lasting and useful impressions upon Theatre, re-opened by Mr. Chapman, after the mind, we must not withhold our tribute several other well-acted pieces, gave us the of fair praise from this new contemporary. Gentleman in black, as a pantomime, in the It is, indeed, extremely well edited, and con-Don Juan style.

> All that we have mentioned succeeded well; and with the improvements to which a few nights always lead, these entertainments bid property.

VARIETIES.

Mr. L. T. T. Rede. - In his 34th year died lately Mr. Leman Thomas Tertius Rede. He was bred to the law, but afterwards embraced was breat to the law, but afterwards embraced the stage; and was the author of "Memoirs of Canning," "Road to the Stage," "Oxberry's Dramatic Biography," &c. His last appearance was a fortnight before his death at Sadler's Wells, for the benefit of Miss Forde. He married, in 1824, Mrs. Oxberry, widow of the late comedian, who survives him. He possessed considerable literary talent, and very varied conversational powers. His father, who was also an author, died some years since.

Falls of Niagara: Pantechnicor .rama, of two views of this stupendous Fall, has been opened at the equally stupendous piece of architecture, the Pantechnicon. The one which represents the extent of this natural phenomenon certainly conveys to the mind the best idea of it that could be given out of America. The artist, Mr. Sinzenick, has altogether displayed considerable talent, and will, we trust, meet the reward merited by his labours.

Augustus Pugin, the well-known author of many beautiful works connected with architecture and the fine arts, died last week, aged about 65.

Dr. Spursheim .--This celebrated pupil and condjutor of Dr. Gall died on the 10th of November at Boston, America. He was one of the greatest apostles of phrenology, and an admirable dissector and demonstrator of the human frame, especially the brain. As alchemy did much for chemistry and natural philosophy, so, in regard to these men, may phrenology have done something for anatomy and moral science.

Fiesco. - Colonel D'Aguilar's translation of Fiesco was produced with éclat at the Dublin theatre last week. Miss Huddart, Vandenhoof, Calcraft (the manager), and the Negro actor known by the name of the American Roscius, sustained the principal characters; and notwithstanding the tragedy was three hours and a half long, it kept up an interest throughout, and was much applanded at the close when given out for repetition.

American Theatricals. —" Mr. C. Kean's Master Walter, in the Hunchback, is allowed, by all who have witnessed it, to be one of the finest specimens of correct and effective acting that has been presented upon the Boston boards this season. His elegant and emphatic reading, and natural and graceful action, aided by that high genius which strengthens and commands increased homage as its possessor advances in life, ... imparted to the Hunchback beauties which in other hands would never have been visible."_Boston Morning Post, Nov. 27.

The Dublin Penny Journal ... Of this publication, five parts, containing twenty-two numtains many valuable papers on Irish antiqui-ties, relieved by national legends, characteristic tales, and other specimens of light and amusing literature. The embellishments are also well fair to do something handsome for dramatic executed, and have all the merit of being illustrative of Ireland. Another great merit is the absence of political and inflammatory topics; and good sound sense (so rare, we are sorry to say, in Irish periodicals) instead. Such a production ought to be welcome to its native land, which it is well calculated to moderate and improve, by substituting intelligence for folly, information for faction, and humanity for bloodshed.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Roscoe's Novelist's Library, we are given to understand, is about to be continued, and will recommence with the unrivalled novel of Don Quixotte, illustrated by George Cruikshank, and contain Notes and Biographical Notices

Trom the Spanish editions of Cervantes.

Questions, Critical, Philological, and Exegetical, formed on the Annotations to Dr. Bloomfield's Edition of the Greek Testamen

A History of Croydon, by Steinman Steinman, Esq. Architect.

The Archer's Guide; containing Instructions for the Use of the Bow, &c.
The Juror's Guide, or the Spirit of the Jury Laws, by a

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Barrister.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Lardner's Cyclopedia, Vol. XXXVIII. History of Spain and Portugal, in 5 vols. Vol. V. fcp. 6e. cloth.—London's Gardener's Magazine, Vol. VIII. 21e. bds.—America and the Americans, by a Citizen of the World, Svo. 12e. bds.—Burner's Lives, Characters, &c. 8vo. 16e. 6d. bds.—Burner's Lives, Characters, &c. 8vo. 16e. 6d. bds.—Burner's Lives, Character, &c. 8vo. 16e. 6d. bds.—Granville Penn's Life of Sir William Penn, 2 vols. 8vo. 36e. bds.; Character of a Trimmer, 8vo. 5e. bds.—Edgeworth's Novels and Tales, Vol. IX. Fashionable Tales, Vol. IV. 5e. cloth.—Channing's Discourses on various Subjects, New Series, 8vo. 8e bds.—Library of Romanoe, edited by Leitch Ritchie, Vol. I. 6e. cloth.—Garry Owen, dc. by Maria Edgeworth, 18mo. 2e. 6d. hd.—dd.—Gospel Stories, 18mo. 3e. 6d. hf.-bd.—History of the late War, 18mo. 2e. 6d. hf.-bd.—Gospel Stories, 18mo. 3e. 6d. hf.-bd.—Ten Minutes' Advice on Coughs and Colds, fcp. 1e. 6d. sd..—The Pulpit, Vol. XX. 8vo. 7e. 6d. cloth.—Le Precepteur, 18mo. 3e. bds.—Wacousts, or the Prophecy, by the Author of "Ecarté," 3 vols. post 8vo. 11. 8e. 6d. bds.—Price's Reports, Vol. X. Part II. 9e.—Bellenger's French Word and Phrase Book, 18mo. 1s. sewed.—Derry, a Tale of the Revolution, 5e. 6d. hf.-bd.—Finden's Gallery of the Graces, Part I. 2e. 6d. prints; 4e. proofs.—Coney's Architectural Beauties of Continental Europe, folio, 12e. plain; 18e. India—Life of Dr. Adam Clarke, 8vo. 9e. cloth.—Bishop of Calcutte's Farewell Sermon, 8vo. 2e. sewed.—Valpy's Shakspeare, Vol. III. 5e. cloth; Classical Library, No. 37. Homer, Vol. II. 4e. 6d. cloth.—Maund's Botanic Garden, Vol. IV. and Part VIII. large vols. 37e.; small, 25e.: large Parts, 19e.; small, 13e.

METEOROLOGICAL JOURNAL, 1832.

December.	Thermometer.			Barometer.
Thursday 20	From	27.	to	37.	29.75	to	29-92
Friday · · · · 21	1	27.		46.	29-63	••	29-65
Saturday · 22		39.		51.	29-68	• •	29.70
Sunday 23	1	40.		52.	29-67		29-64
Monday 24		41.	• •	49.	29-93		29-85
Tuesday . 25	• • • • •	40.	• •	48.	29.73	••	29.82
Wednesday 26					30-02	• •	30-07

Prevailing wind, S.W. Except the 20th, 22d, and 26th, generally cloudy, with ain at times.

Rain fallen, .275 of an inch.

CHARLES H. ADAMS.

Latitude · · · · · 51° 37′ 32″ N. Longitude · · · · 0 3 51 W. of Greenwich.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

D. W. will not, we hope, feel disappointed by our non-insertion of his first offering; and with his good feeling, we trust we may expect more polished lays from his pea. "G. J. New" declined, the thoughts not being altogether new.

A DUBD TIGRERNES.

Connected with Literature and the Arts.

ail of Dr. Crombie.-- Just publishe PORTRAIT of the Rev. Dr. CROMBIE. TURI I KALL Of the Rev. Dr. UKOM BIE, L.D. F.R.S. M.R.S.L. Asther of "The Gymna-uma," &co. Palmed by W. Booth, E.q. and drawn on Stone by ichard J. Lase, Beq. A. R.A. Proof impressions, 21a.; plain do. la.; printed on India paper. Smith and Bider, Cornbill; Hanter, St. Paul's Churchyard; and Morrison, Fenchurch Street.

F. G. Harding, 24, Cornhill. This day is published, Part II. of ONEY'S ARCHITECTURAL BEAUTIES, price 18s. plain, and 18s. on India paper, Interior View of the Cathedral at Yprea;

Do.
Yes of the Town Hall, &c. Calais;
Do. Cathedral, Montreull;
And Eight Vignettes.
Part III. will be published immediately after,

d the anheequent Parts regularly every Two Months

A Print of "The Wreck," engraved in Messectiat by James Bgan, from a Ploture by Gericault. Price 150. Prints, and 31s. Proofs.

MUSIC.

EVENINGS in GREECE.

ry lat, 1833, will be published by J. Power, 34, Stra The Second Evening of the above celebrated Work; the Music composed and selected by Heary R. Bishop and Mr. Moore. Frice in boards, 18s.

The First and Second Evenings may be had in 1 vol. bound in cloth, price 11. 18s.

BOOKS PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

THE SECOND VOLUME of PRIN-CIPLES of GEOLOGY; being an Attempt to explain more Changes in the Earth's Surface, by reference to Causes operation.

win operation.

By CHARLES LYELL, P.R.S.

By CHARLES LYELL, P.R.S.

Foreign Secretary of the (two logical Society.

Vol. I. second edition, price 15s. is just pub-

Vol. III. is in the press, and will be published shortly.

John Murray, Albemarie Street.

New Christmas Presents for Children.

CARRY OWEN; or, the Snow-Woman and Poor Bob the Chimney-Sweeper.

By MARIA EDGEWORTH.

With Woodcuts. 1 vol.

Printed to correspond with " Early Lessens."

II. Gospel Stories.

An Attempt to render the chief Events of the Life of Our Saviour intelligible and prefitable to Young Children. I vol. III.

The History of the late War, with Sketches of Napoleon, Nelson, and Wellington, in the Style of Stories for Children. With Woodcuts. 1 vol.

1V. Stories for Children, from the History of England. Eleventh edition, 3e. half-bound.
John Murray, Albemarie Street.

The Court Magazine.

Vol. I. price One Guinea, profusely embellished with finelg engraved Portraite, Landscapes, and Costumes, of Vel. I. price One Guinea, profusely embellished with finely engraved Partraits, Landscapes, and Costumes, of THE COURT MAGAZINE.

In concluding the First Volume of the Court Magazine, the Propriesers take leave to express a hope that they have attisfacturely redeemed the pledge they gave on commencing this publication. The encouragement which they have received by an immune increase of sale—the spirit of competition which their successful to the sale of the

THE IMPERIAL MAGAZINE for THE IMPERIAL MAGAZINE for Jan. 1833, write te., theing the First Number of Vol. 111. Second Series) contains a highly finished Portrait and a Memoir of Mrs. H. More, from the original Painting in the possession of Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, Bart. The Number also contains a Map of the Scheldt, displaying the Forts on aboth sides of the River, Antwerp, the Citadel, &c. With the usual variety of interesting and useful articles.

"A publication we can recommend to our readers, and a remarkably cheap one." "Mankheter Courier.

"The articles in this work are at once interesting and instructive."—Liverpool Chronicles.

"One of the most unexceptionable and cheapest periodicals extant for families." "Sheffield Iris.

"A really meritorious production, furnishing subjects informing and interesting to the scholar and Christian." "Exceptionables.

London: Fisher, Son, and Co.

London: Fisher, Son, and Co.

SCHOOL PRIZES and CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS, published by Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane; and may be had in various Bindings.

A Guide to the Observation of Nature. By the Author of the " British Naturalist." Price 3s. 6d.

Miss Mitford's American Stories, for Childm under Ten Years of Age. 8 vols. 10s. 6d. III.

Ditto for Elder Children. 3 vols. 10s. 6d. IV.

Mrs. Sargant's Letters from a Mother to her

Adventures of British Seamen in the South-

Memoirs of Madame La Rochejaquelein.

Will.

Will.

Table-Talk; Anecdotes from various Au-thors of celebrity. 24. 64. VIII.

The Picture of India, 2d edition, 2 vols. 12s.

Remarkable Phenomena of Nature. 3s. 6d.

An Autumn in Italy. 3s. 6d.

First Lines of Zoology.

The Book of Butterflies and Moths, with 96 red Engravings. 2 vols. 7s.

XIII. Stories of Travels in South America. 7s. XIV.

Roberts's Personal Adventures in South

Archdeacon Wrangham's Compendium of the Evidences of Christianity. 3a. 6d.

History of Music. 3s. 6d.

XVII. White's Natural History of Selborne, 3s. 6d. XVIII

Letters on Entomology, with coloured Plates,

The Wonders of the Vegetable Kingdom, 6s.

Life of Cortez, and History of the Conquest Mexico. 3s. 6d.

XXI. History of the Conquest of Peru. 3s. 6d. XXII.

Perils at Sea and Captivity. 3s. 6d.

Croly's Beauties of the British Poets. 7s. XXIV

The Natural History of the Bible. 8s.

Mrs. Sargant's Tales for Young Ladies. 9s.

First Lines of Natural Philosophy. 5s.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE. The Publisher feels great pleasure in announcing, that among the usual variety of Articles, the First Number for the year 1838 will be enriched with the celebrated, but hitherto unpublished, Poem of the late Lord Byron on Mr. Samuel Rogersperhaps the finest thing of the kind ever written by his lerdship. In addition to this gem, will be found some original Status by the late Percy Bysche Shelley, with Papers by the Ettrick Sheppherd, John Galt, Sir David Brewster, &c. &c. The Gallery of Literary Characters, No. XXXII. is a full-length Portrait of Prince Talleyrand, Author of "Palmerston, une Comédie de Deux Ana."

Names are received by J. Fraser, 215, Regent Strees, London; and by all Hooksellers and Newmen in Town and Country.

Just received from America.
In 2 vols. 8vo. and Atlas, price 11. 11s. 6d.
THE LIFE of GEORGE WASHINGTON, omplied under the inspection of the Honourable Bushrod Washington, from original Papers bequesthed to him by his deceased relative. By JOHN MARSHALL. A new edition, revised and corrected by the Author.

Vol. X. (to be completed in 12 vols.) price 14s. Encyclopædia Americana, on the basis of the nversations - Lexicon, brought down to the present time; In I large 8vo. vol. price 10c. 6d.

Opinions on Various Subjects, dedicated to the Industrious Producers. By William Maclure. Printed at New Harmony, Indiana.

New Harmony, Indiana.

These Essays consist of observations on Education, Politics, Morals, and Religion, with an attempt at an analysis of the past and present conduct of the Church and State, as well as some speculations on probable future events. This volume also contains an account of the Author's Journey to, and residence in, Mosico; with a great deal of interesting information respecting the present sate of that country.

In 12 vols. 8ve. price 7l. 4s.

The Diplomatic Correspondence of the American Revolution, published from the original MSS. by Jared Sparks.

O. Rich, 19, Red Lion Square.

THE GIRL'S OWN BOOK.

5th edition, with 110 boards, or 5s. 6d. bound in cloth, gilt edges.

Printed at the Chievick Press.

Also, a new and beautiful edition of

The Child's Own Book, with 300 Cuts, price 7s. 6d. in boards, or 8s. 6d. bound in cloth, glit edges.
London: Printed for T. T. and J. Tegg, Chespuide; N. Halles, Piccadilly: Bowdery and Kirby, Oxford Street; Griffin and Co.
Glasgow; Stillies, Brothers, Edinburgh; J. Cumming, and W. F.
Wakeman, Dublin.

New Year's Gift.

Price 2s. 6d. with highly fluished Engravings from Steel Plates,

FULCHER'S LADIES' POCKET-BOOK

and POSTICAL MISCELLANY for 1828.

G. W. Faicher, Sudbury: Suttaby and Co. and "A very nest and flury, Bank, London, Enigman pretty, original poetry (the first piece, on a "Dying Child," by Mr. Fulcher himself, we suspect, from the initials, is very natural and pathetic), by B. Barton, Mary Howits, &c., and selections from sweet and graceful writers, are its great recommendations to popular favour."—Literary Gazette.

In demy 8vo. price 10s. 6d. boards,

ARRATIVE of the ASHANTEE WAR, of Sierra Loone.

of Sierra Leone.

By Major RICKETT'S,

Late of the Royal African Colonial Corps.

London: W. Simpkin and R. Marshall, Stationers' Hall Court.

BOOKS IN THE PRESS.

Rev. G. Townsend's Chronological Arrangement of the Bible, in One Volume. in One Folume.

On the 1st of January will be published, No. I. (to be completed in Tweive Monthly Parts, price Ss. each, of in Twelve Monthly Parts, price 2s. each, of

THE HOLY BIBLE, arranged in Historical and Chronological Order, in such manner that the whole may be read as one connected History, in the Words of the authorised Translation. With short Notes; and Table, dividing the Sacred Volume into 388 Portions for daily Reading throughout the Year.

By the Rev. GEORGE TOWNSEND, M.A.

Prebendary of Durhams, and Vicar of Northallerton.
Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Watestoo Piacs, Pail Mail.

O The larger Edition of the Arrangement, containing a copious Body of Annotations, may be had in four volumes, price 4'. in boards, or the Old and New Testament separately, price 3l'.
each.

On the let of January, 1883, will be published, price One Shilling,
THE NEW ANTI-JACOBIN;
or, South of England Magratine. No. I.
W. A. Scripps, 13, South Motion Street, London;
J. Taylor, Sirighton; and J. Baxter, Lowes.

Jan. 1st. 1833, Messra. Fisher, Son, and Co. will publish the following:—

LARL of HARROW BY — Major-Gen. Sir CHARLES SHIPLEY — Sir WILLIAM GRANT. Portraits and Memoirs of these distinguished characters will embellish Part XLV. of the NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY. Imperial 8vs. 2s. 6d.; India Proofs, 5s. H.

The Imperial Magazine, No. XXV. price 1s. containing a Memoir and highly finished Portrait of Mrs. Hannah More; also, a Map of the Scheldt. III.

History of Lancashire, Part XXIII. con-taining a View of Winwick Church; and Roman Antiquities, Plate 3. With a very interesting Account of the Life and Mar-tyrdom of John Bradford, &c. &c.

In 1 vol. boards, 2s.

My Village versus Our Village, uniform with, and by the Author of, "The Adventures of Barney Mahener." 1 vol. 2s.

THE ZOOLOGICAL MAGAZINE, price Sixpence (with Three Engravings), will be published on Tuesday next.
Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

Whittaker, Treacher, and Co. Ave Maria Lane.

On Jan. 1st, 1833, will be published, by Baldwin and Cradock, London, price is. No. XIX. of the CRTICULTURAL REGISTER, and General Magazine of all Useful and Interesting Discoveries connected with Natural History and Rural Economy. Conducted by JOSEPH PAXTON. F. I.S. H.S. Gardener and Forester to His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, Chatsworth.

This Monthly Periodical, containing 49 pages, closely printed in octavo, and illustrated by numerous Engravings, is intended to place within the reach of all persons every real improvement connected with Horticulture, Natural History, and Hural Economy; and, from the very extensive and rapid sale for the last eighteen months, it may fairly be inferred that its contents have met the wishes of a large portion of society.

No. XIX. contains a mass of information

No. XIX. contains a mass of information from the pens of various Gentlemen and Gardeners of first-rate

No. XX. will contain a coloured Figure of entire new and splendid Dahlia.

Vol. I. containing 18 Nos. may be had in Miss Jane Austen's Novels.

On the let of January will be published, complete in 1 volume, price Gs. embellished with Engravings by Greatbatch, from Designs by Ficketing.

Designs by Pickering,

ENSE and SENSIBILITY.

By Miss JANE AUSTEN.

With a Memoir of the Author,

By her Brother, the Rev. Mr. AUSTEN.

Forming the XXIIId Vol. of the Standard Novels.

Richard Bentley, New Burlington Street (Successor to Henry Colburn).

Vol. IX. of Miss Edgeworth's Works, being Vol. IV. of Fushionable Tales.
On the 1st of January will be published, ornamented with a richly engraved Frontispiece, from the Story of the Absentee, by C. Rolls, and an exquisite Vignette, by Edward Goodall, from the same Tale, Vol. IX. of the same Tale, Vol. 1X. of

MISS EDGEWORTH'S NOVELS and TALES, in Monthly Vols. of 5s. each, clegantly bound and lettered, uniform with the popular editions of the Waverley Novels, and Lord Byron's Life and Works.

This Vol. is the Fourth of her Tales of Fashionable Life.

Vol. I. Castle Rack-Rent, Irish Bulls, and ressay on the Noble Science of Sel-Justification.
Vols. II. and III. Moral Tales.

Vols. IV. and V. Popular Tales. Vols. VI. VIII. VIII. Fashionable Tales.

telypublished, a new edition, in 4 vols. 18mo. 17s. half-bound, Harry and Lucy concluded.

 This is the latest and most finished of Miss Edgeworth's admired Juvenile Works.

Also by the same,
Frank, in 3 vols. price 9s.; and Rosamond, in 2 vols. price 5s.: being Sequels to those Tales in the Early Levsons.

Early Lessons, in 4 vols. 11s. half-bound.

Parent's Assistant, in 3 vols. with fine Engraving, price 10. 6d. half-bound.

Additional volume to ditto, price 3s. 6d.

And by Maria and Richard Lovell Edgeworth,
Essays on Practical Education, a new edit.
In 3 vols. 12mo. price 10s. 6d. boards.
London: Baldwin and Cradock; and other Proprietors.

On the lat of January will be published, in 2 vols. 12mo.

price 12t. in boards,

EVOTIONAL EXTRACTS for

EVERY DAY in the YEAR, compiled from the Vritings of various Authors.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Flace, Fall Mall.

Dante.

In the press, and will be published on Jan. 1, 1833,

THE INFERNO of DANTE, translated into English Rhyme; with an Introduction and Notes,

By ICHABOD CHARLES WRIGHT, A.M.

Late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.

1 vol. 8vo. 15s. in cloth.

Printed for Longman and Co. London; and W. Dearden, Nottingham.

On the let of January will be published, in 8vo. 10s. 6d. boards, DISSERTATIONS vindicating the Church of England with regard to some essential Points of Doctrine.

By the Rev. JOHN SINCLAIR, A.M.

Of Pembroke College, Oxford; Fellow of the Royal Society of Edioburgh; and Minister of St. Paul's Chapel, Edinburgh. Printed for J., G., and P. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterloo Piace, Pall Mall; and sold by Bell and Bradfute, Edinburgh.

On the 1st of January will be published, in 18mo. price 4s. 6d. in boards,

THE HAPPINESS of the BLESSED considered as to the Particulars of their State, their Recognition of each other in that State, and its Difference of Degrees. To which are added, Musings on the Church and her Services. By RICHARD MANT, D.D.

Printed for J., G., and F. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard, and Waterioo Place, Pail Mail.

INDEX. REVIEWS.

REVIEWS.

ADVENTURES of a Younger Son, 103. Ainslie's Reasons for the Hope that is in us, 505. Akerman's Numismatic Manual, 135. Album Wreath, 87, 135. Aldine Poets, 86, 216, 312, 457, 712. Allen's (H. E.) Sallust, 441. Allen on Insanity, 72. Almanach auf das Jahr 1832, 72; 1833, 824. Amulet, 677. Analogies of Organised Bodies, 312. Andrews' Guide to Southampton, Netley Abbey, &c. 264. Annual Biography and Obituary, 3. Arcana of Science and Art, 104. Ardent, a Tale, 329, Arlington, 228. Arnold's Dramatic Stories, 438. Arrian on Coursing, 516. Arosamith's Grammar of Ancient Geography, and Praxis on the same, 515. Ash's Poems, 136. Arkinson's Translation of the Shâh Námeh, 365; Customs and Manners of the Persian Women, 774. Attila, a Tragety, 136. Austin's Selections from the Old Testament, 793. Aurora Borealis, 760.

Baird (General Sir David), Life of, 673, 694, 710, 793.

men, 365; Customs and Manners of the Persian Women, 774. Attila, a Tragedy, 136. Austin's Selections from the Old Testament, 793. Aurora Borealis, 769.

Baird (General Sir David), Life of, 673, 694, 710, 793. Baker's Grenada Register and Literary Album, 408. Ballingall's Mercantile Navy Improved, 522. Barrington's (Sir J.) Sketches of his own Times, 403. Baxter's British Flowering Plants, 691. Beamish's (Major) History of the King's German Legion, 695. Beaumont's Funeral Address after the Interment of Dr. A. Clarke, 651. Beche's (T. de la) Geological Manual, 311. Becket, a Tragedy, and Poems, 741. Bee and the Wasp, 249. Belinave on Health and Disease in Communities, 439. Bell's My Old Portfolio, 146. Berens' (Rev. E.) Advice to a Young Man upon first going to Oxford, 533. Bernays (Prof.) Introductory Lecture in King's College, 139. Berry's Genealogical Peerage, 118. Biblical Cannual, 630. Biblical Cabinet Atlas, 438. Bibliophobia, 195. Bird's Achmet's Feast, 377. Bischoff's History of Van Diemen's Land, 397. Blue Bags, the, 601. Booth's Eura and Zaphyra, 554. Botanic Annual, 360. Biblical Cabinet Atlas, 438. Bibliophobia, 195. Bird's Achmet's Feast, 377. Bischoff's History of Van Diemen's Land, 397. Blue Bags, the, 601. Booth's Eura and Zaphyra, 554. Botanic Annual, 363. Boucher's Glossary of Archaic and Provincial Words, 436, 502. Bousquet-Deschamp's (M. L.) Few Words and Paryley's Graphic and Historical Illustrator, 498. Brizher's Graphic and Historical Illustrator, 498. Brizhy Naval Architecture, 408. British Relations with India, 192. British Preacher, 536. Britton's Bath Guide, 104; Sketches of Tunbridge Wells, 344. Brougham (Lord), Selections from his Speeches and Writings, 333. Bromon's Sketches of Tunbridge Wells, 344. Brougham (Lord), Selections from his Speeches and Heraldic History, 708. Burnet's (Bp.) History of the Reformation, 539. Burton's (Dr.) Sermons preached before the University of Oxford, 473. Byron's (Lord) Works, 86, 216, 281, 340, 385, 468, 550, 612, 664, 678, 789, 821. Byron's Narraltve

Works, 86, 216, 281, 340, 385, 468, 550, 612, 664, 678, 758, 821. Byron's Narrative of the Loss of the Wager, 383. Burns's complete Works, 808. Bellegarde, 824. Cabinet Annual Register, 152. Cabinet Library, 423. Callabria, during a Residence of Three Years, 273. Call to Women of all Ranks respecting the National Debt, 760. Campaigns and Cruises in Venezuela, 584. Campbell (Sir J.), Memoirs of, 209, 231. Caracalla, 554. Caractacus, 136. Carding and Spinning Master's Assistant, 532. Carpenter's (W.) Scripture Natural History, 249. Carr's Lecture on Knowledge, 408. Cartonensia, 743. Catherine of Cleves, 40. Celerier on the Authentic and Divine Origin of the Old Testament, 136. Chambers's (R.) Lives of Illustrious Scotsmen, 724; History of Scotland, 728. Chantilly, 114. Chaperon, Memoirs of A., edited by Lady Dacre, 818. Chenevix's Essay upon National Character, 17. Child's (Mrs.) Little Girl's own Book, 263; Frugal Housewife, 377. Cholera, Reviews of Works on the Nature, Treatment, &c. of, by Drs. Becker and Philip, J. Brookes, and W. Ingledew, 24; W. Alinsworth, 97; Dr. Nolt, 99; Dr. Schnurrer, 100; Drs. Lawrie and M'Cabe, and G. Parsons, 135; D. M. Molr, J. V. Thompson, W. Hunt, T. Brown, Sir A. Carlisle, Philanthropos, and Dr. Webster, 196; Drs. Hazlewood, Bree. Rees, and T. M. Greenhow, 230; Kennedy, 522; Corbyn, 808. Clarenswold, 488. Clarke's (Dr. A.) Succession of Sacred Literature, 549. Clayton's Visit to the Metropolis of France, 629. Circulating Credit, with Hints for Improving the Banking System, 712. Clearing off Arrears, 798, 809, 823. Cobbin's Annual Historian, 328. Coleman's Mythology of the Hindus, 193. Comic Offering, 631, 660. Complete Election Guide, 680. Companion to the Book of Common Prayer, 488. Constable's Miscellany, 5, 505, 537, 793. Contarin Fleming, 277, 289. Contrasts, the, 225, 295. Cook's own Book, 488. Cooke's (J. H.) Taylor's Short-Hand, 729. Cooper's (C. P.) Proposal for the Erection of a General Record Office, Judges' Hall, &c. 373. Cory's Fragments of the Phemician, Chaldean, E

Dalley's Return of the Victors, 408. D'Arblay's (Mad.)
Memoirs of Dr. Burney, 726. David, a Poem, 72.
David's (A. L.) Grammar of the Turkish Language, 369, 407. Davis's (Dr.) Obstetric Medicine, 24. Dawn of Freedom, 522. Democrat and the Hugonot, 293.
Dendy on the Phenomena of Dresms, 361. Dewhurst on the Inutility of the Hydrostatic Test in Infanticide, 281. Diamond Gazetteer, 232. D'Israell's Reply to the Author of "Memorials of Hampden," 41. Divines of the Church of England, 36, 104, 132. Doddridge, Devotional Letters of, 473. Doisy's Course of French Literature, 483. Dolby's Shakesperian Dictionary, 119. Don Juan, Canto XVII. 522. Don's System of Gardening,
&c. 745. Doomed, the, 361. Double Trial, the, 467.
Douglas's (Major-Gen. Sir H.) Essay on Military Bridges, 651; Naval Evolutions, 728. Downe's (G.) Letters from Continental Countries, 531. Dramatic Literature, Evidence taken before the Committee on, 577, 588, 616.
Drawing-Room Scrap-Sheet, 87. Dreams and Reveries of a Quiet Man, 743. Dumont's Souvenirs sur Mirabeau, 214, 229. Dunlap's American Stage, 771.
Earle's Nine Months' Residence in New Zealand, 353, 374.

Earle's Nine Months' Residence in New Zealand, 353, 374.
Easter Gift, 180. Edgeworth's Tales, &c. 249, 344, 393. England and France, 311. English Botany, small edition of, 633. Estancelin's Discoveries of the Norman Navigators, 694. Evans's (Rev. R. W.) Church of God, 377. Every Man's Library, 488. Example, a Tale, 576.
Excitement, the, 745. East India Sketch-Book, 809.
Elliott's Splendid Village, Corn Law Rhymes, &c. 801.

Elliott's Splendid Village, Corn Law Rhymes, &c. 801.

Fair of May Fair, 264, 296. Family Classical Library, 56, 104, 152, 216, 344, 424, 488, 570, 633, 697, 778. Family Feuds, 344. Family Library, 104, 132, 161, 182, 216, 421, 471, 515, 552, 686, 777. Faulkner's (Sir A. B.) Visit to Germany and the Low Countries, 753. Faust's Catechism of Health, 232. Ferrall's Ramble through the United States of America, 498, 500. First Batch, 361. Fisher's (S.) Companion and Key to the History of England, 504. Fisher's Drawing-Room Scrap-Book, 625. Fitzgeorge, 373. Fletcher's (Rev. W.) Hymms for Children, 135. Flowers of Fable, 263. Foreign Trade of China, 193. Forget Me Not, 651. Fortsetsung der Correspondenz-Nachricht aus Krakau, 551. Fort Risbane, 456. Fortune Hunting, 473. Four Gospels in Greek for Schools, 697. Frankland's (Capt.) Visit to the Courts of Sweden and Russia, 18, 38. Frederick Wilding, 136. Friedrich's (Dr.) Skizze einer allgemeinen Diagnostik der psychischen Krankheiten, 497. Friendship's Offering and Winter's Wreath, 651.

ship's Offering and Winter's Wreath, 651.

Gahagan's Rhyme Version of the Liturgy Psalms, 119.
Gairdner (Dr.) on Mineral and Thermal Springs, 728.
Galloway (Col.) on the Law, Constitution, &c. of India, 193. Gardiner's Music of Nature, 417. Garrick's (D.)
Private Correspondence, 1, 21, 37. Gathered Flowers, 376. Gell's (Sir W.) Pompeiana, 243. Geography in all Ages, 777. Geographical Annual, 680. Georgian Era, 87. Girdlestone's (Rev. C.) Commentary on the New Testament, 280; Twenty Parochial Sermons, 319, 712.
Goldsmith's (L.) Statistics of France, 226. Gordon's (A.)
Treatise upon Elemental Locomotion, 361. Gorton's Population Returns of Great Britain, 312; Topographical Dictionary of Great Britain, 312; Topographical Dictionary of Great Britain, 312; Gough's Indian Tale, 376. Granville's (Dr.) Catechism of Health, 56. Graulhié's Plan for a New Circulating Medium, 793. Greclan History in Verse for Children, 264. Green's (T.) Few Facts on the Affairs of Portugal, 586. Green's Poems, 119. Greenwood's (Rev. T.) Scripture Sketches, 280. Greisley's (Sir R.) Life of Gregory VII. 321. Greewell's (Rev. W. P.) View of the Early Parisian Greek Press, 787. Gunn's Cartonensia, 66. Goëthe's Versuch über die Metamorphose der Pflantzen, 809.

Greek Press, 787. Gunn's Cartonensia, 66. 'Goethe's Versuch über die Metamorphose der Pflantzen, 809.

Hack's Geological Sketches, 6. Hatfield's Fruits of Solitude, 457. Hall's (Capt.) Voyages and Travels, 181' 247. Hall's (Rev. R.) Modern Infidelity considered, 328. Hamon on Spinal Deformities, 136. Harford's (Dr.) Translation of Agamemnon, 322. Harkness's (Capt.) Description of a Race inhabiting the Neilgherry Hills, 145, 166. Harrison's (W. H.) Tales Historical and Domestic, 456; Christmas Tales, 712. Hassan Ali's (Mrs. M.) Observations on the Mussulmauns of India, 33, 55, 68. Heath's Picturesque Annual, 647; Book of Beauty, 705. Heidenmauer, the, 435, 457. Henderson's (J.) Letter on Nomenclature, 423. Henderson's (A.) Scottish Proverbs, 359. Henningsen's Last of the Sophis, 72; Scenes from the Belgian Revolution, 329. Henry Masterton, 336. Henri III et as Cour, 40. Henson on the Civil, Political, and Mechanical History of the Framework-Knitters, 532. Herbert's Country Parson, 135. Herklot's (Dr.) translation of Qanoon-e-Islam, 481. Hervey's (T. K.) Illustrations of Modern Sculpture, 579, 808. Hickie's School and College Classics, 311. Highland Smugglers, 418. Hilley's English Grammar, 456. Hirst's Alfred, 457. Historical Sketch of Sanscrit Literature, 450. History of the Jews in all Ages, 119. History and Survey of London, Westminster, and Southwark, 385. Hobart Town Almanac, 423. Hobkirk's Florentine Brothers, 329. Hodson's (Mrs.) Lives of Nunez de Balbao and Francisco Pizarro, 361. Hogg's Altrive Tales, 199, 214; Queer Book, 275. Hollingsworth's (Rev. A. G. H.) Rebecca, a Poem, 328. Hooke's (Dr.) Botanical Miscellany, 135, 745. Hume and Smollett's History of England, 249. Hunt's Collected Poems, 823. lected Poems, 823.

Illustrations of Smollett, Fielding, and Goldsmith, 296, Iölande, 554. Ince's Outline of English History, 152. Infant Annual, 741. Inglis' Spain in 1830, 6, 23; New Gil Blas, 548. Invasion, the, 4. Ireland's Vortigen, 685. 806. Ives' Sermons, 264. Invisible Gentleman, the 306.

Jackson's Waterloo, a Poem, 312. James's (G. P. R.)
Memoirs of Great Military Commanders, 117; History of Charlemagne, 449; String of Pearls, 639. Jameson's (Mrs.) Characteristics of Women, 470. James (T. H.) on the Importance of Settling the Sandwich and Bonin Islands, 579. Jelf on the Neglect of the Hebrew Language as a Qualification for Holy Orders, 778. Jekyll's (Capl.) Facts relative to his Vapour Bath, 72. Jerrold's Rent-Day, 168; Golden Calf, 601. Jesse's Gleanings of Natural History, 151, 165, 246. Jesuit, the, 217. Jewsbury's (Miss) Letters to the Young, 309. Johnson
(Dr. J.) on the Change of Air, 24. Johnson's Dictionary, with Walker's Pronunciation, 264. Joplin's Analysis of the Currency Question, &c., 583. Jukes on Lavements, 72. Julien's Hoel-lan-kl, 565. Juvenile Forget Me Not, 691. Juvenile Sunday Library, 244.
Jungermanniarum Synopais, 824.

Keepsake, the, 645. Keightley's Mythology of Ancient Greece and Italy, 86. Kemble's (Miss) Francis the First, 164. Key to both Houses of Parliament, 419. Keyworth's Juvenile Philosophers, 168. Kidd's Pocket Companion to Dover, 570; Guide to Hastings, 680. Klosterheim, 263. Knowles's Magdalen, and other Tales, 806.

Tales, 308.

La Belle Assemblée, 422. La Coquetterle, 373. Lady's Mussum, 457. Lance's (E. J.) Golden Farmer, 264. Landscape Album, 639. Landscape Annual, 610. Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia, 3, 65, 149, 216, 296, 344, 576, 649, 829; Lectures on the Steam-Engine, 553. Lawless's History of Ireland, 680. Laurie's Use and Abuse of Grand Juries, 964. Lay Testimony to the Truth of the Sacred Records, 377. Legends of the Library at Lilies, 669. Legend of Another World, 377. Leman's (Mra.) Woman's Love, 217. Library of Entertaining Knowledge, 8, 216, 505, 793. Liddiard's (Rev. W.) Three Months' Tour in Switzerland and France, 326. Life of a Sailor, 788. Lindley's Guide to the Orchard and Kitchen Garden, 393; Introduction to the Study of Botany, 809. Literary Souvenir, 676. Lives of the Twelve, or Modern Cæsars, Buonaparte, 728. Livre des Cent-et-un, 537. Lolme (J. L. de), Tableau Générale de la Langue Française, 729. Loudon's Encyclopædia of Cottage, Farm, and Villa Architecture, 536, 393. Lube's Arguments against the Gold Standard, 361. Lyell's Principles of Geology, 8, 49. Lysons on the Identity of Job, his Family, &c. 281. Lauread, the, 808.

M'Culloch's Dictionary of Commerce, 244. Mac Far-

Lysons on the Identity of Job, his Family, &c. 281.
Lauread, the, 808.

M'Cullody's Dictionary of Commerce, 244. Mac Farlane's Lives of Banditti and Robbers, 721. M'Gregor's (J.) British America, 148, 534. Mahon's (Lord) History of the War of the Succession in Spain, 401. Markham's New Children's Friend, 29%. Martin's Christian Philosopher, 151. Martineau's Political Economy, 386, 473, 494, 568, 659, 793, 801. Marshall's Mortality of the Metropolis, 530. Martin's Clapt.) Oral Traditions of the Cinque Ports, 554. Maule's (Dr.) Poetry of Truth, 456. Maw's (Lieut.) Burmese War, 193. Maxims and Morals for every Day in the Year, 152. Meadows, New French and English Pronouncing Dictionary, 264. Medwin's Translation of Prometheus, 261; Agamemnon, 322. Member, the, 50. Memoirs of the Duchess d'Abrantes, 70, 482. Memoirs of Louis XVIII., 760. Mémoires de Madame la Duchesse de St. Leu, 152. Mendham's (Rev. 1). Life and Pontificate of Pius V., 503. Merlet, le Traducteur, 104. Michell's Living Poets and Poetesses, 198. Miller's (Dr.) History Philosophically Illustrated, 177. Millhouse's Destinies of Man, 553. Milner's (T.) History of the Seven Churches of Asia, 193. Minstrelsy of the Woods, 296. Mirabeau's Letters during his Residence in England, 265. Missonary Annual, 799. Mitford's (Miss) American Stories for Children, 56; Lights and Shadows of American Life, 389; Our Village, 585. Mogridge's Churchyard Lyrist, 531. Moral Plays, 488. Mordacque's Histore de l'Empersur Napoléon, 284. Mortson's (Dr.) Counsels to the Young, 585. Mongamery's (R.) Messiah, 337. Morning Watch, 723. Mundell on the Industrial Situation of Great Britain, 518. Mundy's (Captain) Sketches in India, 291, 309, 337. Murray's (T.) Literary of Galloway, 113. My own Fire-side, 536. Miserrimus, 803. Moore's (T.) Evenings in Greece, Second Evening, 818.

Narrative of the late Nanning Expedition, 420. National Maszaine ef Fashion. 24. Natural Son. the. 472.

Narrative of the late Nanning Expedition, 420. National Magazine of Fashion, 24. Natural Son, the, 472. Nautical Magazine, 168. Newton's Introduction to Astronomy, 522. New Year's Gift, 658. Nights of the Round Table, 87. Norman Abbey, 52. Nugent's (Lord) Letter to John Murray, on an Article in the Quarterly Review, 632.

Offering of Sympathy, 393, 806. Officer Pug, 296. Oliad, the, 522. Olio, the, 537. Original, the, 536. Original Family Sermons, 728. Otterbourne, a Novel, 712, 727. Opera, the, 19. Our Island, 648. Ouseley's (W. S.) Remarks on the Statistics and Political Institutions of the United States. the United States, 305.

Palgrave's Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth, 392. Palmer's (Rev. W.) Origines Liturgice, 36. Parent's Poetical Anthology, 67. Paris, ou le Livre des Cent-et-un, 8, 68, 216. Paris Magazine, 135. Park's (Prof.) Dogmas of the Constitution, 301. Parmeter's Village Lectures, 312. Parry's (J. D.) History of Woburn and its Abbey, 87. Parsey's Quadrature of the Circle, 168. Passages from the Diary of a late Physician, 168. Paternal Advice, 328. Pauline, the, 232. Pecchio's (Count) Semi-serious Observations of an Itasician, 168. Paternal Advice, 328. Pauline, the, 232. Pecchio's (Count) Semi-serious Observations of an Italian Exile, 785. Pemble's Quinti Horatii Flacci Opera, 554. Pennie's Britain's Historical Drama, 83. Poetical Ephemeras, by Brown, 280. Percival's Anatomy of the Horse, 651. Petronj's Pensamenti de' Illustri Autori, 135. Philips (B.) on the Obliteration of Arteries, 264. Philips' (Miss) Lessons on the Use of the Globes, 473. Philological Museum, 249. Pilgrim of Erin, 554. Pinkerton's Island of the Propontis, 729. Pinnock's Catechisms, 554. Poetical March of Humbug, 505. Catechisms, 554. Poetical March of Humbug, 505. Catechisms, 554. Poetical March of Humbug, 505. Opetic Offering, 87. Poetic Negligée, 697. Poland, Homer, and other Poems, 230. Political Reflections on the Present Crisis, 361. Polonia, 522. Popular Lectures on Vertebrated Animals of the British Islands, 248. Population Returns of 1831, 119. Popular Zoology, 393. Porquet's French and English Dictionary, 264. Private Correspondence of a Woman of Fashlon, 441. Probation, and other Tales, 54. Producing Man's Companion, 152. Pule's Phantom City, 72. Peter Parley's Tales about Natural History, 809. Poema Canino-Anglico-Latinum, &c., 809. Planche's Lays and Legends of the Rhine, 808. Parent's Cabinet of Amusement, 824.

Ouintus Servington, 56.

Quintus Servington, 56.

Radical, the, 294. Rammohun Roy's (Rajah) Translation of the Veds, &c., 536. Real Life, 329. Reflections and Hints of the Principal of a Seminary on Retiring, 533. Reformer, the, 453. Reid's Bibliotheca Scoto-Celtica, 518. Remember Me, 488. Rennie's Alphabet of Insects, 536. Reports of the Commissioners on the Ecclesiastical Courts, 168. Ribban's Tables of Arithmetic, 522. Richard of York, 344. Richardson's (Dr.) and Swainson's (W.) Fauna Boreali-Americana, 82. Ricordanza, or Friendship's Memento, 263. Riddle's Illustration of Aristotle on Men and Manners, 393. Roberts's Oriental Scenes, Sketches, and Tales, 644. Robertson's (Dr.) Lectures on the Circulation, Respiration, &c. of Plants, 344. Rodolph, a Dramatic Fragment, 264. Romance of History, 264. Romance of the Early Ages, 180. Roscoe's British Novellsts, 863, 344; Syanish Novellsts, 628. Roscommon's Letters for the Press, 536. Rose's (T.) Roman History for Youth, 312. Rose of Four Seasons, 376. Rowbotham's Lectiones Lating, 328. Royal Asiatic Society's Transactions, 530. Royal Blue Book, 232. Rural Rector, 289. Ryan's (Dr.) Medical Jurisprudence, 745. Romance of Irish History, 809. Irish History, 809.

Ryan's (Dr.) Medical Jurisprudence, 745. Romance of Irish History, 809.

Sacred Poems, 136. Sacred Poems, 281. Sacred Offering, 87. St. Leger's Froissart and his Times, 393. Samouelle's Entomological Cabinet, 248, 360. Sandford's (Mrs.) Woman in her Social and Domestic Character, 136. Santarem, 581. Sarrans' (B.) Memolrs of Lafayette, 597. Sarrans' (B.) Memolrs of Lafayette, 597. Sarrans' (B.) Memolrs of Lafayette, 597. Sarrans' (B.) Memolrs of Fiesko translated, 278. Schomberg's (Rev. J. D.) Elements of the British Constitution, 488. Scott's (Sir W.) Letters to Rev. R. Polwhele, 776. Scripture Garden-Walk, 456. Seager's Translation of Simonis' Smaller Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon, 441. Select Library, 390, 457, 778. Selection of Psalms and Hymns, 488. Self-guidance, 616. Sewell's (Rev. W.) Sermons, 377. Shakespeare, with Boydell's Illustrations, 697, 777. Sheldrake on Animal Mechanics, 651. Shelley's Masque of Anarchy, 693, 709. Shipp's Eastern Story-Teller, 680. Siebenpfeiffer's (Dr.) Rhelnbayern, 232. Sir Ralph Esher, 35. Sir Simon League, 360. Skinner's (Capt.) Excursions in India, 433, 454, 486. Slaney's Outline of the Smaller British Birds, 567. Smith's (S. H.) Manual of Greclan Antiquities, 690. Smith's (Lady) Memoir and Correspondence of Sir J. E. Smith, 657. Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, and their Publications, 513. Sorelli, Paradiso Perduto di Miltoni, 473. Southey, Selections from his Prose Works, 119; from his Poems, 119; Esays, Moral and Political, 119; History of the Peninsular War, 241. Standard Novels, 24, 86, 217, 456, 665, 712, 759. Stanley Buxton, 211. State Papers, Henry VIII., 744. Stephen's (T.) Book of the Constitution, 633. Stevens (Dr.) on the Healthy and Diseased Properties of the Blood, 466. Stocqueler's Fligrimage through untrodden Parts of Khuzistan and Persia, 451, 472. Stothard's (C. A.) Monumental Effigies of Great Britain, 725, 756. Stowel's (Rev. H.) Pleasures of Religion, 280. Sunshine, 694. Swahr's Mind, and other Poems, 134. Swallow Barn, 517. Slade's Travels

Taggart's Memoir of Capt. Heywood, 729. Tait's Edinburgh Magazine, 201. Tales, 488. Tales of the Alhambra, 258, 278. Talisman, le, 51. Tayler's (Rev. C. B.) Records of a Good Man's Life, 61. Taylor's (J.) New Description of the Earth, 296. Taylor's (E.) Tales of the Saxons, 168. Taylor's (J.) Records of his Life, 641, 662. Tennyson's Poems, 772. Théorie des Ressemblances, &c., 133. Thackrah on the Effects of Arts, Trades, Professions, &c. on Health and Longevity, 519. Thimbleby's Monadelphia, 485. Thomson's (Dr.) Life and Writings of W. Cullen, M.D., 343. Three Nights in a Life-time, 408. Timbs's Knowledge for the People, 536. Time's Telescope, 35. Tobin's (Dr.) Tour in Italy, &c., with Sir H. Davy, 84. Tod's (Col.) Annals of Rajast'han, 193, 232. Tod's (D.) Anatomy and Physiology of the Eart, 522. Tollette of Health, Beauty, and Fashion, 336. Tour of a German Prince, 114, 165, 264. Tradesman's Guide to Superficial Measurement, 522. Traits and Stories of the Irish Peasantry, 87, 801. Transactions of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, 328. Trollope's (Mrs.) Domestic Manners of the Americans, 178, 262; Refugee in America, 564, 665. Turner's (Dr.) Introduction to the Arts and Sciences, 537. Turner's (Sharon) Sacred History of the World, 129. Tymm's (S.) Family Topographer, 504. Thomson's Materia Medica and Therapeutics, 809. Tales of the Manse, 263. Manse, 824.

Van Diemen's Land Almanac, 307, 423. Venice, a Poem, &c., 585. Veterinary Examiner, 778. Vigne's (G. T.) Six Months in America, 212. Village Poor-House, 357. Visit, the, 441. Vision, a Poem, 136, 280. Voice of Humanity, 488. Voye's (M. de la) Mélange, 281.

Humanity, 488. Voye's (M. de la) Mélange, 281.

Wanderer's Romaunt, 280. Warren's Notes upon Notes, 306. Warton's (Dr.) Death-bed Scenes and Pastoral Conversations, 457. Waverley Novels, 56, 119, 201, 263, 408, 325, 631. Webbe's Lyric Leaves, 755. Whateley's (Abp.) Thoughts on Secondary Punishments, 545. Whistle-binkie, 501. Whitehead's Solitary, a Poem, 52. Wight's (Dr.) Indian Botany, 135. Wild Sports of the West, 593, 614. Wilderspin's Early Discipline Illustrated, 405. Williams's Art in Nature and Science Anticipated, 312. Wilson and Bonaparte's American Ornithology, 168, 583. Working-Man's Companion, 72. Worrell's (Van) Tableau of the Dutch and Flemish Painters, 264. Wyld's General Atlas, 377. Winslow's Principles of Phrenology, 824.

Vear of Liberation, 739.

Zohrab, the Hostage, 561. Zoleikha, 554.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.
Cholera in Ireland, Details of the Progress of, 601.
Eugene Aram, Particulars respecting, 25, 41.
Lady Chapel, Southwark, notice respecting, 74.
Medwin (Capt.) on Lord Byron and his Biography, 73, 88.
Roby on some inaccuracies in the Introduction to "The Betrotthed," 377.
Scott (Sir W.) original letter of, 361.
Torture in Hanover, 457.
Vesuvius, Eruption of, 56.
West Indian Boat-song, 712.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

Africa, Travels in, 26. African Expedition, 264. Agricultural Employment Institution, 585. Anatomical Demonstrations, 666.

Berry's Patent Lights, &c. 169. Biela's Comet, 585, 729.

Bonpland's Letter to Baron Humboldt, 681. British Association for the Advancement of Science, Account of, 168, 408, 424, 442. Butler's Medical Chest Directory, 651.

Candles, Improvement in, 8, 681. Celestial Phenomena, 57, 120, 202, 264, 227, 346, 409, 473, 554, 617, 680, 760, 824. Chronometers, remarkable accuracy of, 595. Comet, the, observed at Gibraltar, 58. Comets, Notes on, 633.

the, observed at Gibraltar, 58. Comets, Notes on, 633. Egyptian and Greek Antiquities, extensive collection of, 312. Electricity and Magnetism, important discovery in, 185, 202. Expedition to the Niger, 90. Geological Society, 8, 42, 75, 153, 185, 217, 233, 313, 345, 362, 394, 729, 760, 794, 824. Holman's Travels, 570. Horticultural Society, 281. Humbold's Letter to the Academy of Sciences, 618. Improved Raw Sugar, 537. Lander's New Expedition to Africa, 312, 441, 488. Linnaran Society, 41, 169, 217, 250, 281, 329, 394, 713, 778, 809.

Medico-Botanical Society, 793. Meteor, brilliant, ob-served, 794. Mount Vesuvius, recent Eruption of, served, 794. 586, 602.

586, 602.

Patents, new, 522, 537, 554, 571, 651, 713. Phenomena in Natural History, 585. Poppig's (Dr.) Travels, 571. Poor, on the Appointment of Plots of Land to the, 538. Printing, important Discovery in that art, 233.

Rennie (Prof.) on the Natural History of the Phœnix, 57. Ross's (Capt.) Expedition in search of a North-west Passage, 687, 729. Royal Astronomical Society, 42, 105, 313. Royal College of Physicians, 136, 201, 281, 346, 409. Royal Geographical Society, 28, 249, 313. Royal College of Physicians, 136, 201, 281, 321, 323, 349, 351, 378, 425. Ruppell's Travels in Arabia, Africa, &c. 666.

Scientific Exhibition in Adelaide Street, 378. Scientific cientific Exhibition in Adelaide Street, 378. Scientific Expeditions, 28. Society of Arts, 41, 119, 361, 378, 713, 729, 793. Solar Light, new Analysis of, 555. Swan River, Letter from, 281.

Zoological Society, 8, 75, 136, 217, 281, 345, 443, 778.

LITERARY AND LEARNED.

Censorship of the Press in Austria, 250. Colombo Journal, 425. Croker's Boswell, on a passage in, 58. Egyptian Papyrus, analysis of a paper on, 507.

Egyptian Papyrus, analysis of a paper on, 507.
Garrick Club, 60.
Highland Society of London, premium offered by, 410.
Javanese Grammar, notice of M. Gerike's, 362.
King's College, 233, 444, 634, 810.
Literary Fund, 170, 297, 410, 730. London University, 133, 474.
Mitford, Jack, and the Periodical Press, 9. Muskau, Prince Puckler, Letter of, 507.
Oriental Translation Fund, 410.
Palenque, Ruins of, 761. Penny Publications, Strictures on, 538. Press, the, in Egypt, 42.

Royal Asiatic Society, 26, 58, 90, 137, 154, 186, 233, 314, 378, 294, 444, 489, 794, 810. Royal Society, 26, 42, 58, 75, 90, 105, 120, 137, 153, 166, 185, 202, 217, 233, 233, 247, 313, 346, 362, 394, 729, 761, 778, 704, 810. Royal Society of Literature, 9, 137, 154, 217, 250, 263, 314, 362, 409, 730, 761, 778, 810.

Scott (Sir W.), Letter from Rome respecting, 681; Meeting to secure Abbotsford to his descendants, 713, 730, Society of Antiquaries, 26, 42, 58, 75, 90, 106, 120, 137, 153, 170, 185, 202, 233, 250, 297, 313, 329, 346, 382, 304, Takmud, on a German version of the, 538. Transactions of the Royal Geographical Society, 698.

University Intelligence, 282, 506, 794.

FINE ARTS.

Ackland's Illustrations of the Vaudois, by Finden, 91.
Allom's Poynings, and Hodnet Church, 474. Amulet, Illustrations to the, 652. Andrews's Arraignment of Queen Katharine, 474. Artists' Benevolent Fund, 315.
Arundale's Specimens of Palladio's Edifices, 121. Atkinson's St. Nicholas Church, Tooting, by Rosenberg, Baine's History of Lancaster, 27, 170. Barnard's Studies from Nature, 299. Batty's (Col.) Principal Cities of Europe, 27. Baxter's British Flowering Plants, 779. Begnis, Signor de, 411. Bell's Court of Flora, 474. Belnos' (Mrs.) Hindu and European Manners in Bengal, by Colin, 218. Bewick's Waiting for Death, 550. Bonington's Fishing-Boats, by Quilley, 218. Booth's Dr. Cromble, by R. J. Lane, 795. Boxall's Wm. Wordsworth, by Bromley, 438. Briggs's Sir E. H. Alderson, by Skelton, 731. British Gallery, copies from the old masters, 761. British Institution Exhibition, 75, 90, 106, 120, 138, 154, 170, 425, 603; Sale of Pictures, 330. Browne's (Mrs. H.) Far Away, and Arrived in Sight, by Sharp, 170. Burns and Hogg, Profiles of, 203. Byron Gallery, 284, 508, 636.

Canning's Statue, 284. Child's Progressive Drawing-book, 523. Cook's Richmond and its surrounding Scenery, 747. Coney's Architectural Beauties of Continental Europe, 811. Corneto, Discoveries at, 186. Cooke's Old and New London Bridges, 572, 635. Cozins's Sportsman at Home, by Raddon, 411. Cromble's Author of Waverley, 444. Crulkshank's Scraps and Sketches, 565.

Daniell's Windsor Castle, by Armytage, 681; Chatsworth, by Armytage, 811. Davis's Hon. Mrs. Howard, by Cochran, 266. Dawe's Empress of Russia, by Poselwhite, 572. Deaham's (Rev. J. F.) Views of St. Dunstan in the West, 121. Devonshire and Cornwall Illustrated 97, 474. trated, 27, 474.

East Indies, State of Literature and Fine Arts in, 586. Elliott's (Capt.) Views in the East, 218, 363, 523, 632, 611, 825. English School, 747. Essex's New Drawing and Writing-slate, 762. Exeter Hall Exhibition, 219.

Fairland's Dennis Collins, 568. Ferrey's High Street, Lynington, by Haghe, 379. Finden's Illustrations of Byron's Works, 43, 170, 299, 411, 489, 555, 619, 699, 705; Gallery of the Graces, 812, 825. Fisher's Drawing-room Scrap-book, 762. Forget Me Not, Illustrations to, 652. Frame Tablets for Mounting Drawings, &c. 91, 266. Friendship's Offering, Illustrations to, 619. Furniss's Models in Wax, 284, 299.

Gallery of Painters in Water-Colours, Engravings from, 154, 363, 571. Gallery of Portraits, 571, 731, 825. Gastineau's St. Michael's Mount, by Barnard, 330. German Publications in the Fine Arts, 490. Gilbert's Views in the neighbourhood of Lymington, by Haghe, 331, 762. Gilpin's Hints upon Landscape Gardening, 395. Gwilt's Anatomy of the Horse, 795.

Hastings, four Views of, 588. Harvey's Beggar's Daughter of Bednall Green, by Branston and Wright, 488. Haydon's Walting for the Times, by Lupton, 444. Hayter's La Musique, by Lane, 379. Heath's Picturesque Annual, Illustrations to, 636; Book of Beauty, turesque Annuai, illustrations to, 536; Book of Beauty, Illustrations to, 731. Hervey's Illustrations of Modern Sculpture, 475, 603, 810. Herz, Henri, 747. Hintch's United States of North America, 121, 330. Hogarth, Anecdotes of, 10. Hoppner's Mrs. Jordan as Rosalind, by Cook, 234. Howard's Spirit of the Plays of Shake-Ingram's (Dr.) Memorials of Oxford, 779.

Johannes der Tæufer von J. Hemling, 266. Johnson's Costumes of the Pyrenees, by Harding, 139.

Kearney's Illustrations of the Surrey Zoological Gardens, 499, 572, 635. Keepsake, Illustrations to, 636, 652. Kidd's Courier, by Carlos, 796. King, the, from Morton, by Lane, 27. Knight's Old and New London

Britiges, 456.

Endscape Illustrations of Sir Walter Scott's Works, 523, 603, 681, 747. Landscape Annual, Illustrations to, 603, 666. Landscer's (T.) Characteristic Sketches of Animals, 27. Landscer's (E. Lord A. G. Russell, by R. J. Lane, 170; Lord Cosmo Russell and his Pony, by Lane, 289. Lawrence's (Sir T.) Countess Gower and Lady E. Gower, by Cousins, 458; Hon. Mrs. S. Bathurst, by Lane, 603; Lady Peel, by Cousins, 714. Lemire's Coura d'Etudes de Dessin, 635. Lescot's (Mad.) Filial Solicitude, by Angell, 187. Linton's Sketches in Italy, 107, 303, 523, 556, G35. Literary Souvenir, Illustrations to, 686. Liverseege's Works, by Cousins, Bromley, &c. 535, 714. Locker's Gallery of Greenwich Hospital, 531, 571. Lodge's (E.) Portraits and Memoirs of Illustrious Personages, 27. Lough's Exhibition of Sculpture, 411. Louvre, the, and No. 100, Pall Mall, 458. Luard's (Capt.) Views in India, 490. Lucas's Destruction of the Cities of the Plain, 234. Lyon's (Capt.) Mexican Scenery, 219.

Macfarlane's Seven Apocalyptic Churches, 167. Mackensie's Memorials of Oxford, by Le Keux, 699. Mainwaring's (Capt.) Gleanings, moral and scientific, 572. Major's Cabinet Gallery of Pictures, 555, 609, 811. Marshall's Gems of British Landscape, 652. Martin's Fall of Babylon, 107; Satan in Council, and Pandemonium, 474; Illustrations of the Bible, 572. Modern Painters, engravings after, 538. Morton's Lady Sidney, by Cochran, 682; Lady C. Butler, by Dean, 747. Mosaic Painting at Pompell, 191. Murillo's Pictures, exhibition of, 315. Murray's (Col.) Scenery of the Highlands, and Islands of Scotland, by S. Leith, 818, 363; National Work, 811.

National Portrait Gallery, 10, 138, 203, 283, 363, 426, 489, 571, 635, 714, 762. New Readings of old Authors, 714, New Society of Painters in Water-colours, 250, 266, New Sporting Magazine, 458, New Year's Gift, and Juvenile Souvenir, Illustrations to, 666. Novello's (Mrs.) Honey as Psyche, by Lane, 311. Nutter's (M.) Carlisle, from near Cummersdale, by Barnard, 714

Oxford Delinested, 138.

Panorama of Stirling, 795. Pares's Interesting Spots on the Loire, 259, 681. Parker's Villa Rustica, 474. Parris' Queen of the Belgians in her Wedding-dress, by Hopwood, 619. Pictorial History of the Bible, 411. Picturesque Annual, Illustrations to, 659. Picturesque Memorials of Salisbury, 27, 395. Popular Portrait Gallery, 796. Princep's Views of Benares, 539. Prout's Interiors, 779. Pyne's Pocket Sketching Companion, 588.

Raphae's Our Saviour and his Disciples, 43. Razee's Canterbury Cathedral, by Reeve, 107. Reinagle's Black Joke engaging the brig Marenerito, 619. Richardson's Melrose Abbey, 795. Robertson's (A.) Lady Gore Booth, by Thomson, 138. Robertson's (Mra.) Marchioness of Sligo, by Posselwhite, 619. Roberts's Departure of the Israelites from Egypt, by Quilley, 330. Ross's Spring Flowers, 138; Lady Grey, by Thomson, 475. Royal Academy Exhibition, 283, 296, 314, 329, 362, 378, 394; Lectures, 106, 203.

314, 339, 362, 378, 394; Lectures, 106, 203.

Sanders's Token of the Covenant, 363. Scharfe's Fancy Fair, and Gigantic Whale, 411. Selous' Portraits of Painters, 107, 170, 234. Sharpe's (Miss) Juliet, by Bromley, 170. Shaw's Illuminated Ornaments, 411, 810. Shepherd's View of Edinburgh, 138. Sketches in the King's Theatre, 379. Slater's Right Hon. Sir J. Mackintosh, 490. Smart's Lady Macbeth, 588. Smith's Wounded Leopard, 138. Society of Painters in Water-colours, exhibition of, 283, 299. Steen's Féte of St. Nicholas, 218. Stoffer Roses, 666; New Friendship's Offering, 811. Stormont (Viscountess), 218. Stothard's Procession of the Filtch of Bacon, by Watt, 426. Strazzewicz's Gallery of the Polish Revolution, 458. Suffolk Street Exhibition, 186, 202, 218, 233, 230, 688, 713, 730. Sales of Pictures, 315, 363.

Templeton's Lord Brougham, 523. Tombleson's Views of the Rhine, 474, 636. Turner's Drawings for Scott's Poems, 170; England and Wales, 27, 330, 508; Annual Tour, Illustrations to, 762, 793.

Vandyke's Gevartius, by Wilkin, 234; James Stanley, Earl of Derby, and his Countess, by Robinson, 619. Varley's Saul, by Linnell, 107. Vernet's Maseppa, by Lucas, 91. Views in the Pyrenecs, 234.

Walton's Complete Angler, 411. Wait's (James) Statue in Westminster Abbey, 588. Waverley Novels, new Series of Illustrations to, 474; Portraits of the principal Females in, 555, 311; Portraits of Historical Characters introduced in them, 714. Webb (J.) the Engraver, 315. Westmoreland, Cumberland, Durham, and Northumberland illustrated, 489, 715. Westwood's Embossed Likenesses of Scott and Byron, 508. Wilkie's Clubbiat, by Raddon, 138; Vignette to the Maid of Elvar, by Burnet, 266. Wilkin's Perch, from C. Hardy, 27; Lord F. L. Gower, 316; Earl Grey, 523; Duke of Devonshire, and Marquess of Stafford, 411. Wilson and Bonaparte's American Ornithology, 165. Witherington's Don Quixote and Sancho Pana, by Quilley, 218. Wivell's Portraits of Miss Shirreff, Mr. Moschelles, &c. 299. Woolnoth's Study and Tollet, 379.

ORIGINAL POETRY

In almost every No. The pieces by L. E. L. will be found in pp. 27, 171, 266, 300, 508, 619. By C. Swain, 251, 524, 556, 603, 652, 715, 812. By N. Michell, 539. By J. F. Hollings, 523. By J. Atkinson, 539. By R. Howitt, 747.

MUSIC.

Concerts: Mrs. Anderson's, 317. Mr. Bochae's, 349. Miss Bruce's, 332, 364. De Begnis', 412. Dressler and Pelzer's, 300. Mr. Eliason's, 379. Leat, 76, 171, 187, 204, 300. Melodist Club, 411. Philharmonic, 141, 236. M. Sedlatzek's, 332. Societa Armonica, 157, 187, 219, 412. Mr. Wigley's, 317.

New Publications, 253, 458, 525, 540, 716.

BIOGRAPHY.

D. Blaikie, Esq., 873. Sir John Carr, 491. Rev. G. Crabbe, 91. Baron Cuvier, 331. Davids, 475. M. Delangiard, 604. Baron Goethe, 219. James Hogg, 121. J. Munden, Esq., 91. Anna Maria Porter, 425. John Taylor, Esq., 316. Sir Walter Scott, 619, 836.

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

Alvan in Braad, 332. Club Law, 10. Day's Pleabute in the Country, 698. Drama, Evidence before the Select Committee respecting, 667. Duke of Sussen's Evening Parties, 203, 332. Garrick Club, Papers, &c. 44, 65, 91, 107, 138, 140, 138, 171, 187, 203, 234, 267, 284, 300 316, 332, 346, 379. Lexicography, 524. Locomotion of Medical Men, 491. Metaille Pens, 349. Morning Post Advertisements, 335. Military Reminiscence, 540. New Variety in the Human Species, 336. Notes Westmonasterienses, 339, 536, 573, 583, 604. Picture of China, 264. Reasoning Faculities of Animalis, 262. St. Simonians, Principles of, 28. Soottish Literary Disner, 59. Specimen of Cursing, 427. Statistics of France, 396. Tale of a Post-office, 699. Walks about Town by the Devil incog. 252, 257. Zoological Gardens, 364.

Sights of London:—Gallery of the New Society of Water-Colours, 204. Ancient Pictures, 204. Paintings on Glass, 204. The Fleas, 204. Cosmorama, Works of Art, 348. Panorama of Milan, 343, 460. Model of the Théatre Française, 348. Stained Glass, by Albert Durer, 446. Etruscan Fictile Vases, &c. 446. British Gallery, 460. Diorama, 460. Papyro Museum, 541.

CHOLERA MORBUS, its Progress, &cc. 76, 123, 139, 155.

DRAMA.

Reports of the Representations and new Performers at the several Theatres, weekly.

the several Theatres, weekly.

Neto Pieces:—Alp the Brigand, 172. Borfi to Good Luck, 187. Captain Stevens, 638. Catherine of Cleves, 44, 698. Chalk Farm, 92. Climbing Bory, 459. Clutterbucks, the, 700. Compact, the, 820. Conquering Game, 764. Conscript's Sister, 541. Court Jester, 469. Cork Legs, 857. Crimson Crimes, 748. Cupis, 890. Dark Diamond, 716. Der Alchymist, 187. Dilosh Gatherer, 492. Doom Kiss, the, 700. Duel in Richelieu's Time, 492. Doom Kiss, the, 700. Duel in Richelieu's Time, 494. Eugene Aram, 93. Factory Girl, 632. Frend-Father, 124. Forgery, the, 156. Francis the First, 172. Gluiletta e Romeo, 237. Golden Caif, 489. Henriette, 716. His First Campaign, 637. House of Colberg, 716. His First Campaign, 637. House of Colberg, 716. His First Campaign, 639. Husband Wanted, 445. Kill or Care, 701. Loves of the Angels, 509. Loves of the Devils, 633. Magic Car, 379. Magic Ring, 220. Men of Pleasure, 786. Mr. and Mrs. Pringle, 663. My own Lover, 58. Nina, 204. Old Gentleman, 748. Olivo e Pasquale, 519. Owiet's Nest Howlett Hauntl, 796. Peer and Peasant, 589. Pet of the Petiticoats, 590. Petiticoat Government, 722. Printer's Devil, 304. P., 0, 796. Rent Day, 60. Riper yan Winkle, 637. Robert le Diable, 60. Robert the Devil, 60. St. Patrick's Eve, 764. Second Thoughts, 509. Self-Tormentor, 108. Six to Four on the Colonel, 509. Tartar Witch and the Pedlar Boy, 369. Tyrolese Peasant, 301. Water Party, 637. Waverley, 633. What is she at? 574. Win her and wear her, 141. Young Hopefuls, 172. Mathewat & Lowe Minner, 200.

rench Plays, 205, 220, 237, 269, 317. Mathews at Home, 285. Pemberton's Lectures, 285. German Opera, 300. Pagamin's Concerts, 445. Pageants in commemoration of Sit W. Scott, 668, 683. New York Theatricals, 768. Unrehearsed Stage Effects, nearly every week.

VARIETIES.

Under this head are contained literary and scientific in-formation, articles of point and humour, with facetise, both in prose and verse—each Number.

LITERARY NOVELTIES.

Forthcoming Works, together with such as are in anticipation, are announced under this head weekly.

Of Works subscribed in the Metropolis, a List appears regularly in every Number.

LONDON: Published errry Saturday, by W. A. SCRIPPS, at the LITERARY GAZETER DFFICE, T. Wellington Street, Waterloo Bridge, Strand, and 13, South Moulino Street, Oxford Street: sold also by J. Chappell, DB, Royal Eschange; E. Maritorough, Are Maria Lane, Ladgate Hill: A. Black, Sdinburgh; Smith and Son, D. Roberton, and Atkinson and Co. Stagnow; and J. Cumming, Dubtin. A Agent for Americo, O. Rich, 12, Red Lion Square, London, J. MOTES, 26, Confide Street, Ladonaud Square.

